Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator takes the whole paragraph to get his 37.59 per cent average under the Payne-Aldrich law, and now he wants me to take one bracket and tell him whether that one bracket is more or less than the average upon the whole. If the Senator had waited I was going to say that upon mica worth less than 13 cents a pound the rate in the Senate amendment to this bill is a little bit higher than the House rate, but above 13 cents a pound the rate is lower than the House rate. The Payne rate on mica worth 5 cents is 120 per cent; the Payne rate on mica worth 10 cents is 70 per cent; the Payne rate on mica worth 15 cents is 43.20 per cent; all of which, of course, are very much higher than the general average which was 37.59 per cent in 1910 and 34.63 per cent in 1912. When you go above that to the higher grades, the rate on mica on a higher unit of value has been reduced. We slightly increase the rate on micas valued below 13 cents from the House rate, but on the higher units of value it has been reduced, and on mica averaged above 75 cents per pound the reduction is one-third of the rate established by the House bill, or a reduction of from 30 per cent to 20 per cent ad valorem. Thirty per cent on all grades as fixed by the House, as I have said, would be a discrimination against the lower-priced micas.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator from Utah will not make a serious assault upon the rates provided in this bill for mica. We are importing now twice as much as we produce, and I think our mica miners and producers ought to have a fair show.

Mr. SMOOT. So do I.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I am afraid they are not having it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that what the House was seeking to do was to bring about a competitive basis. The House evidently thought 30 per cent was a competitive basis. Thirty per cent was a flat rate, and we did not think that flat rate could be levied on all of the items in this paragraph with justice to all the items of the paragraph, and we sought to overcome that difficulty. But we have not sought to materially raise or to materially reduce the House rates. As a matter of fact, we have slightly reduced the House rates, if you take all of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. But it strikes me that under the existing law, when we are importing twice as much as we are producing, we have very serious competition now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, a great deal of the imported mica does not come in competition with the mica here.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I was going to say to the Senator. The Senator has already admitted it, and of course I entirely agree with him. I wish to say to the Senator that the high-priced mica is a class of mica that does not come in competition with the mica produced in the United States. That is why we find in this bill a reduction from 30 per cent to 20 per cent. The reason the reduced duty is levied on mica worth 75 cents a pound and over is because no such mica is produced in this country to any great amount, or, in my humble opinion, it would have been shut out just exactly the same as the lower-priced mica is.

I am not complaining of the 30 per cent rate imposed. I do not want our Democratic friends to think I am criticizing the rate that is in the present law. I only want to compare it and to ask why mica should be protected and nearly every other item in the bill reduced. There is some reason for it, and I should like to know what it is.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask my friend from Utah what is the real burden of his complaint here as to the rate on the lower grade of mica. Does he think it is too high or too low?

Mr. SMOOT. I have already congratulated the Democratic members of the Senate Committee on Finance on making a change from the House bill and at least protecting mica that is produced in this country. It is a protection. It is not for revenue. It is a protective rate.

Mr. STONE. Why does the Senator think it is a protective rate? And if the Senator thinks this is a protective rate, why did he want to put it several times as high when he helped to frame the Payne-Aldrich bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the Payne-Aldrich bill the values are not divided. Under the present law it is all unmanufactured mica and it all carries the same rate, whether it is 75 cents a pound or whether it is 5 cents a pound. The rate on all grades is 5 cents a pound and 20 per cent ad valorem.

The Senator asks me why I think this is a protective rate. I think any rate that is 80 per cent and 70 per cent and 60 per cent is a protective rate on a product that is easily dug from the ground.

Why, Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Missouri was a member of the subcommittee that had the woolen schedule under consideration. Woolen cloth is an article that is made from raw wool and put through at least 50 processes before reaching the finished stage, and you only put upon woolen cloth a duty of 35 per cent. Here is a product that is produced in North Carolina from the ground, and many of the manufacturers of this country call raw material, and we find on some of it a rate of 80 per cent, on some of it a rate of 70 per cent, and on some of it a rate of 60 per cent, whereas the finest, highest-priced, and most highly finished woolen cloth made in all the world enters into the United States at the rate of 35 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator complain that this rate does not apply to the woolen schedule? Is that the complaint the Senator makes?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President. I was asked why I thought this was a protective rate, and I simply told the Senator why I thought so. Then, in comparison with this rate, I called the attention of the Senator to Schedule K and spoke of the difference as to producing one from the earth and the other through a great process where it takes at least 50 processes from the raw wool to the finished cloth, and on that you provide a duty of only 35 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator desire to propose an amendment to this paragraph reducing the duty?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am calling the attention of the Senate to the rates provided on mica, and I have congratulated my Democratic friends that at least there is one industry in this country that has been protected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the statements of the Senator involve an admission that the rates in the present law are prohibitive and not protective in regard to this product. He says this is a protective duty, and yet we find that in the item of mica that can compete with the United States there is a large importation under the present law.

Here is the reduction as between the Aldrich bill and the present bill in cents:

On mica at 15 cents per pound there is 8 cents duty under the Payne-Aldrich bill, and a duty of 4 cents, just one-half, under this bill.

At 10 cents a pound the rate of the Aldrich bill would be 7 cents, and under this bill 4 cents.

At 5 cents a pound the duty under the Aldrich bill would be 6 cents, and under this bill 4 cents.

I understand that the cost of production, which, of course, has an influence, is somewhere in the neighborhood of 12 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has just made the statement, upon the paragraph just before this, that the cost of production has nothing whatever to do with the rate that is provided.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not say it has anything in particular to do with the question of making this bill; but it has something to do with the cost of mica in this country, if it costs 12 cents a pound to produce, upon the theory that it would, at least, be sold for some small profit.

Mr. SMOOT. I welcome the Senator from Colorado into the ranks of those whose belief and theory of protection take into consideration the cost of producing an article in fixing a rate upon the article.

Mr. THOMAS. There is no theory about it. I am always very glad to say something that pleases my friend from Utah, but perhaps that pleasure will prove transient in the long run.

I have never pretended, and I do not think anyone else on this side has pretended, that, as a general proposition, if it costs 12 cents to produce something you are going to sell it for less than 12 cents unless you have to. What I want to say—and the reason why I alluded to this particular matter was for the purpose of emphasizing it—is that the average price of the American product is 17 cents, as shown by the reports of the Treasury Department. Consequently, that being the average price, there is a very large reduction upon the American product, notwithstanding the fact that it is still protected.

We find as another fact that the rate under the Payne-Aldrich law, although it is seemingly prohibitive, if we are to take the Senator from Utah at his word, is not prohibitive. It is to some extent competitive, because at least one-half of the amount of mica which is competitive in this country came here from abroad, as compared with the domestic product, in 1910. As a consequence, if we are going to take item by item for the purpose of determining the reduction, it is very much more than has been stated by the Senator, and at the same time he says it is protective. Now, we find from the reports that this is a material in which there is competition, even under the present duty. The lowering of the duty, therefore, is not so great as it has been with reference to some other paragraphs, but still it is competitive.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator, then, if he disagrees with the statement that was made by the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. THOMAS. Not intentionally.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina says that the mica that is imported into this country does not come in competition with the mica produced in the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. He says a great portion of it does not. The Senator knows that a great portion of it does not, and that was what the Senator from North Carolina said. On the other hand, the muscovite mica is the same as that produced here, and that is also imported from India. It is true that there are different grades and different classes; but that class is a competitive mica.

It seems to me the distinguished Senator from Utah is neither objecting to this duty nor is he at the same time disposed to regard it as anything but offensive. If he wants to offer an amendment to it, let us have it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am going to vote for the rates that are provided here by the Democratic members of the Finance committee.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I will return the compliment to the Senator and welcome him to the fold.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not have to come to the fold. I have been there all the time.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to know what is the question? What is the motion of the Senator? I think we ought to get to a vote on this item. We have talked mica incessantly for two mortal hours. What is the motion of the Senator from Utah? I should like to know.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator object to the further discussion of this paragraph?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It seems to me mica has been pretty thoroughly discussed. It is now 10 minutes of 6, and I think it has been thoroughly washed out.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires to have it go over and have it voted upon to-morrow, I am perfectly willing. I like to accommodate the Senator in any way possible.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. As far as my own desire and convenience is concerned, I should be very well satisfied to have the Senate go into executive session and take up the matter to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly satisfied to do that, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President. We must ask for a vote on this paragraph before we pass from it. As far as the committee is concerned, I want to say to the Senator from Utah that there is no disposition whatever to limit the discussion.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. I understood from the colloquy that took place between him and the Senator from New Hampshire that this paragraph is arranged so as properly to care for or protect the mica industry, and that that was done deliberately.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say anything of the kind, Mr. President. I said this adjustment was made for the purpose of bringing about uniformity in the rates.

Mr. JONES. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to ask the Senator from North Carolina if this duty properly cared for this industry, and the Senator from North Carolina said that it did.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said it was a fair and just rate, in my judgment, to bring about a competitive condition in this industry.

Mr. JONES. I wondered why the committee should be so solicitous about caring for the mica industry and yet be so careful about framing the tariff upon gypsum, plaster rock, etc., solely on the revenue basis.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the committee has had in view, in all of its dealings with the tariff, the fundamental principle laid down by the House of Representatives, and accepted by us, that we would put the rates upon a competitive basis. As a matter of fact, when you get to this item in the bill, it appears that we have been importing about half a million dollars' worth of it, and have been producing about $400,000 worth of it; so there was not the necessity in this case of the extreme reductions that there were in cases where there were no importations at all, and where the present condition did not approach a competitive condition.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me finish, and then I shall have said all I want to say about this matter.

The Senator from Utah attempts to convey the impression that the duties carried in the Senate amendment are higher than those carried in the House bill. He attempts to convey the impression that the Senate rate is but a small reduction from the duties of the Payne-Aldrich bill. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, it is a very considerable reduction from the Payne-Aldrich duties, and it is an average reduction of 25 per cent from the House rates.

The Senator has made a calculation and given it to the Senate. The Senator from Utah is not infallible. I have known the Senator from Utah to palm off on the Senate a great many statements and a great many calculations and a great many assertions that I did not think at the time represented the true facts of the situation.

In making the statement that the Senate rate is very much lower than the Dingley rate and lower than the House rate I am not relying upon any calculations that I have made in regard to the matter. I have here before me the calculations made by the expert who made these calculations for the House and for the Senate, upon which the House relied and upon which the Senate up to this time in the discussion has been relying. I want to give to the Senate the result of these calculations made upon this whole paragraph by this expert of the Government, who served here in this capacity when we were making the Payne-Aldrich bill, who served the House this year when they were framing the Underwood bill, and who served the committee when we were framing amendments to that bill. Here are the calculations, upon page 92 of this book.

In 1905, under the Dingley law, the average rate under this paragraph was 46.11 per cent. In 1910, under the Payne law, the average rate was 37.55 per cent. In 1912, still under the Payne law, the average rate was 34.49 per cent. The estimated rate for 12 months under the House bill is 29.88 per cent. The estimated rate for a 12 months' period under the House bill, as reported to the Senate and as amended, is 25.81 per cent, or a difference of about 4 per cent.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator where the mica is produced that comes under the high rate in this paragraph.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask for information.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know.

Mr. THOMAS. It comes from India.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; it can not be that, because it is less than 15 cents a pound. I am asking where the mica that calls for the high rate under this bill is produced.

Mr. STONE. It comes from Canada and Germany.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator mean the imported mica?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I am not speaking of imported mica or mica domestically produced. I am speaking of the mica that comes under the first clause, the "mica, unmanufactured, valued at not above 15 cents per pound." Where in this country in that produced?

Mr. THOMAS. It is produced in North Carolina, in New Hampshire, in Vermont, in Maine, and, to some extent, in South Dakota.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will ask the Senator from Colorado where the most of it is produced.

Mr. THOMAS. My impression is that most of it comes from North Carolina. There is no secret about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I feel sure, Mr. President, that we are ready to vote on this paragraph.

Mr. STONE. Then let us vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator means by that to imply that I had any part in it, he is mistaken. This matter was fixed up by an expert, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] had charge of it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator meant to imply nothing at all. The Senator merely made an inquiry for information, which has not been furnished any too freely thus far in this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. If not, it is simply because it has not been called for.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that the expert that framed the provision in the House bill is the same identical expert that made the change in the Senate bill. How did it happen, unless there was some reason brought to his attention, that the change was made?

I am not going over these figures in answer to the Senator from North Carolina, because I myself want to vote upon the amendment, and am ready to vote upon it now.

Mr. STONE. Let us vote, then.

Mr. SMOOT. But I do know—and it conforms to what the Senator from North Carolina says—that the duty on all micas under 13 cents a pound is advanced by the Democratic members of the Finance Committee of the Senate over the bill as framed in the House.

Mr. STONE. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator states that he "knows" that such things have happened, when the facts right here before his eyes show that everybody else should know to the contrary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina, then. Let him be the judge. I will let him pass upon it, and see whether the statement I made was not correct. Is it not true?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not true that all micas under 13 cents a pound are advanced by the Senate over the rates on micas as provided for in the House bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated a little while ago, and in my report I state that on micas valued at less than 13 cents the rate was slightly higher than the House bill, and above that the rate was materially lower than the House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. SIMMONS. The average rate is 5 cents less than the House bill.

Mr. STONE. The average rate of mica is 16 cents in the United States, and I wish to say it must follow as a commercial necessity that very little mica under approximately 10 cents a pound can be mined in foreign countries and packed and the duty paid and imported into this country.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no need of protecting it if that is the case, but I think there is. The Senator and I disagree there. I think the protection ought to be given, and I do not think it is too high upon that account. But when the Senator says that the figures prove that what I stated was incorrect he certainly is mistaken, and I will let the Senator from North Carolina answer. I do not think it is too high for a protective-tariff duty.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Wyoming asked a few moments ago as to where mica is produced. I happen to have the statistics here. Of the 49 mines in the United States reported in operation, there are located in North Carolina, 28; in California, 10; in South Dakota, 3; in Georgia, 1; in Maine, 2; in New Hampshire, 2; in Virginia, 2; in New Mexico, 1. The value of the commodity varies from 2 cents per pound to $3 per pound.

Now, Mr. President, I want to vote on this question, but I just wanted to call the Senate's attention to the fact that upon this commodity, regardless of all differences of opinion as to whether the duty is 25 per cent or 80 per cent, everybody must admit that it is more than 25 per cent. It ranges probably from 25 per cent to 70 per cent on mica. It is a nonmetallic mineral or earth that is dug out of the ground.

On pumice stone the committee puts a duty of 5 per cent. On gypsum, which is a somewhat similar substance and secured in a similar way, which does not happen to be produced in Kentucky or North Carolina or Maine, the duty is 10 per cent. Fluorspar, that comes from the Ohio River on the Kentucky side and on the Illinois side, seems to require a duty of 50 per cent, while the Senator from North Carolina apparently is satisfied here with a duty of 30 per cent on mica. It is fortunate, indeed, for the manufacturers or producers of materials to be located in States that have able representatives upon the Committee on Finance. Their industries seem to fare well. It is unfortunate that the States from which the pumice and the gypsum come are not so ably represented upon that committee.

I simply wanted to call attention to the fact that this bill has not escaped the processes in construction that have been used in this country before, and which have been so vehemently criticized by different Senators upon this floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Rubber, for instance.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; I accept the suggestion as to rubber and a few other things; but I insist that it is not fair, it is not equitable, and it is not just to similar products to make such a wide discrimination as to the amount of protective duty that they shall have, and because mica happens to be produced in North Carolina or fluorspar in Kentucky that does not justify giving them a protective duty of from 30 to 50 per cent, while pumice stone, which happens to be produced in Nebraska and Kansas, should be content with 5 per cent, and gypsum from Iowa with 10 per cent.

Mr. JAMES. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question.

Mr. BRISTOW. All right. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. JAMES. Does the Senator believe the statement he made that we were giving to fluorspar produced in Kentucky a protective rate when the rate has been reduced from 107.94 per cent down to 50 per cent, when fluorspar——

Mr. BRISTOW. Ah!

Mr. JAMES. Just a moment—when fluorspar was bearing a rate of 107 per cent the importation was more than one-third of the total consumption in the United States? Does the Senator believe that such declarations as that, groundless as they are, to the effect that by reason of the fact that a Senator from Kentucky was a member of the Finance Committee and was responsible for placing a protective rate in the bill, when the bill originated in the House of Representatives with this identical rate, which was a reduction from 107 per cent down to 50 per cent, and where the importation was almost one-third of the total consumption in the United States, are fair to himself or to me?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think my friend the Senator from Kentucky was very considerate when he permitted the reduction to be made from 107 per cent down to 50 per cent. I think that that is a very much more satisfactory reduction than the reduction made on mica from 34 per cent down to 30 per cent.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator knew that before he made the other statement. Why did the Senator state that I as a member of the Finance Committee was responsible for placing a protective rate in this bill when the facts were in front of the Senator and the Senator knew the statement was not true?

Mr. BRISTOW. Because the Senator from Kansas thinks that 50 per cent is a very, very satisfactory protective rate on any commodity that is produced.

Mr. JAMES. But the Senator knew, because he heard the argument disclose the fact in the Chamber not an hour ago, that under a rate of duty of 107 per cent the importations of fluorspar into the United States was one-third of the total consumption of the article and produced a revenue of many thousands of dollars. So if a 107 per cent rate was not protective or prohibitive, how on earth could a rate of 50 per cent be so?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator just pardon me a moment? If the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] thinks that the 50 per cent is not protective because there is an importation, let me tell him that there are many articles which are imported upon which high duties are imposed. Take lead and zinc. There are large importations of many metals, and a duty of 100 per cent would not prevent the importation of some articles. Simply because there is an importation is not a conclusive proof that a duty of 50 per cent is not a protective duty.

Mr. JAMES. I will state to the Senator that, so far as fluorspar is concerned, the warmest personal friends I have in Kentucky and in my home town have appealed to me and implored me to try to raise this rate from $1.50 per ton to $3 per ton, because unless it was done the rate now proposed of $1.50 per ton would drive them out of business, and it would cause their mills to shut down. In the face of appeals and petitions I stood by the House rate. Yet the Senator would appear upon the floor and, for the purpose of making the character of argument he undertakes, say that I was trying to have a protective rate placed in this bill. If he will consult the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY], he will enlighten the Senator upon that proposition.

Mr. BRISTOW. I congratulate the Senator from Kentucky. I think he has been very generous. I have not been uttering any undue criticism against the Senator from Kentucky. I would not do that. I think he is a very——

Mr. JAMES. If the Senator will examine his remarks, he will in the sober second thought come to a different conclusion than the one he now arrives at—that he made no reflection upon the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have known the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] for many years. I have had the pleasure of associating with him in public life, and I do him the credit of saying that, in my judgment, if he had not lived at Marion, Ky., the rate of duty on the product that is produced there, which we have been considering, would have been higher than the rate now in the bill.

I think the Senator from Kentucky recognizes that the domestic industry in his own town, now in its infancy, is of such importance to his people that it really should have had better treatment than he in his position as a member of the Finance Committee could under party decree give it.

And in that respect, and I say it with the greatest kindness, he differs somewhat from my honored friend the chairman of the Committee on Finance. The Senator from North Carolina has many times during my service with him here gone out of his way to protect an industry in his own State. If he had not done so he would not have been worthy of the confidence of the people of his own State so often conferred, but the delicate regard for party consistency exhibited by the Senator from Kentucky toward an industry of comparatively recent origin in his home city is an unusual sight in this Chamber worthy of special note. He has taken the position that to be consistent he could not stand for a rate of duty on a product produced by his own friends at home which did not square with the principle upon which his bill is based, a false principle in my judgment and one that will bring ruin to established industry and check further industrial development here and stimulate growth and enterprise abroad, and in this general demoralization his local industry will suffer. Yet he is entitled to be respected for his consistency, and I honor him for it. I think he has been animated by the loftiest purpose and the purest motives in what he has done. Out of the wreck which is sure to follow the passage of this bill he would not be satisfied to emerge with a single Kentucky industry unscathed. In this respect he differs from some of his brethren of kindred faith who have already set their sails for a safe harbor in a threatening storm.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not care to answer the remarks of the Senator from Michigan with respect to myself. I have not stood for protection upon this product. I have stood for the same ratio of reduction from the Payne-Aldrich rate upon this product that I have stood for upon every other product.

Now, the Senator is criticizing me because this lower-priced mica is produced in my State, and he claims that the rate is a little higher than the House rate. It is, I have stated frankly, where it is worth less than 13 cents a little higher. Where it is worth more than 13 cents it is very much lower than the House rate.

Mr. President, let us see whether we have made a reduction upon this paragraph in proportion to the reductions that we have made in the balance of the bill. Start with the low-priced ore that you say is produced in my State, 5 cents a pound. The rate under the Dingley law upon mica valued at 5 cents a pound is 120 per cent. The Senate committee amendment reduces that rate to the extent of 66⅔ per cent. The rate of duty under the Payne law upon mica worth 10 cents a pound is 70 per cent. The Senate bill reduced that rate 37.7 per cent. So the average reductions made upon this low-priced mica is much greater than the average reduction made either in the Senate bill or in the House bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, my friend from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] seemed to think that I was reflecting on his integrity. I was not. I have not the slightest intention of giving him any personal offense. I want to assure him of that. I think that he is a very sincere man and genuinely in favor of everything on the free list that is practicable to be put on the free list. Nevertheless, the fact remains that on the fluorspar, which is produced in his vicinity, the duty remains 50 per cent, and I think it is a high protective duty. I voted against increasing it above that amount because I think that is enough. There might be instances where I would vote for a larger protective duty than that, but it would have to be a very strong argument to induce me to do it.

I was simply calling attention to some patent facts to show that this bill is framed by similar methods that other bills have been. It is not fair to certain sections of the country. It discriminates against their commodities while it abundantly protects those of other sections of the country. That fact will be demonstrated in every schedule as we go through them day by day, and I intend to call the attention of the country to these discriminations with all the emphasis that I can, and I hope that my Democratic friends will not think that such criticism of the measure is a personal attack upon them.

My contention is that in framing a great bill like this we should get away from local influences as much as we can. We can not do it entirely, I know. Human nature is human nature; but we should certainly undertake to do it. I do not believe in carrying the Payne-Aldrich duties into this bill as was done in dextrine and then taking it off of other things that are just as worthy of consideration as dextrine.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; if the Senator will just restrain his impetuosity a moment.

Mr. STONE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. GALLINGER. When I asked my simple question concerning mica I had not the least idea it would develop a discussion such as has ensued. I now simply want to say I am satisfied that the two little mines in New Hampshire—and they are insignificant affairs—will not suffer very much under the provisions of the bill as it came from the Senate committee, and I am prepared to vote for that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 40 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 7 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 30, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 29, 1913.

CHIEF OF THE WEATHER BUREAU.

Charles F. Marvin, of the District of Columbia, to be Chief of the Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture.

COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Bernard M. Gannon, of New Jersey, to be collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of New Jersey, in place of Herman C. H. Herold, superseded.

Alexander Stuart Walker, of Texas, to be collector of internal revenue for the third district of Texas, in place of Webster Flanagan, superseded.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

William H. Martin, of Arkansas, to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Arkansas, vice William G. Whipple, whose term has expired.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL RESERVE CORPS.

Edward Mason Parker, of the District of Columbia, to be first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps, with rank from July 28, 1913.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 29, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, whose care over us is without end and whose ministrations are new every morning and fresh every evening, help us to worship Thee in the beauty of holiness and conform our lives to the highest ideals in the excellency of our behavior, that we may be worthy recipients of Thy love and wonderful work to the children of men; and we will ascribe all praise to Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

APPROVAL OF THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal as read will be approved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. What Journal was it that was read?

The SPEAKER. Yesterday's Journal.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the reading of the Journal in full.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks what?

Mr. MANN. For the reading of the Journal in full.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal in full.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. In previous sessions of the House recently the Journal has not been approved. Now, is it the custom to approve all former Journals that were not approved, or just the Journal of the preceding day?

The SPEAKER. Either practice may be followed. Of course, each one of them has to be read before it is adopted. The last two Journals were never read at all. As soon as the Chaplain finished his prayer yesterday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], who was acting minority leader, raised the point of no quorum. You can take it backward or forward. I do not think it makes a particle of difference in what order they are read.

Mr. MURDOCK. But they must be approved?

The SPEAKER. Yes; they must be approved. What the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is doing is to demand the full reading of yesterday's Journal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws his request that the Journal of yesterday's proceedings be read in full.

Mr. GARDNER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARDNER. To make a motion to correct the Journal. The Clerk read that "on the motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD the House adjourned." The motion was made by Mr. CLAYTON, of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, on the last roll call I was recorded as not present. I was present and voted "yea."

The SPEAKER. That Journal has not yet been read. Without objection, the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday as read will stand approved.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of Saturday, July 26.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 26, 1913, was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal of Saturday as read will stand approved.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of Friday.

Mr. CLINE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CLINE. For the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will wait until we get through with the Journal——

Mr. MANN. And some other matters. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of Friday.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 25, 1913, was read.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, on the last roll call on Friday, July 25, I am recorded in the RECORD as not voting. I was present and voted "yea," and I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change will be made in the Journal and the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I was present on the last roll call on Friday, but my name is not recorded in the RECORD. I voted.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the last roll call contained only the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. A good many Members fall into the mistake of not finding their names in the list of absentees when they voted. They get hold of the wrong list.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I was referring to the record of those present.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the gentleman did not read the heading. Without objection, the Journal of Friday, July 25, 1913, as read will be approved.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I shall object; perhaps not later in the day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

INVESTIGATIONS OF THE SHIPPING TRUST.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned the last time there was not anything done; the unfinished business was that resolution which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] had. The Clerk will report it.

House resolution 205 (H. Rept. 36).

Authorizing the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries to continue investigations of the Shipping Trust.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries be, and is hereby, authorized to continue during the Sixty-third Congress the investigations begun during the Sixty-second Congress under the provisions of House resolution 425, adopted March 5, 1912; House resolution 470, adopted April 11, 1912; and House resolution 587, adopted July 16, 1912, for the purposes and under the conditions therein stated; and that the expenses thereof, not exceeding the unexpended balance of the whole amount authorized by said House resolution 470, be paid out of the contingent fund in the manner provided by said House resolution 470 of the Sixty-second Congress, and House resolution 82, adopted May 8, 1913.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the resolution would indicate that it authorizes the continuance of an investigation. By what authority or under what rule does the Committee on Accounts authorize investigations?

The SPEAKER. The continuance of the investigation has already been authorized, and this resolution simply appropriates the money.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is that all that this resolution does?

The SPEAKER. That is the sum and substance of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The reading of it would indicate that it authorized the continuance of the investigation.

Mr. LLOYD. It only authorizes the expenditure of the unexpended balance of the $25,000 originally appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. J. M. C. SMITH, for two weeks, on account of important business.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

DIGGS-CAMINETTI CASE.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I desire to present a privileged report (H. Res. 212, H. Rept. 39); but before presenting that privileged report let me state to the House that it relates to the so-called Diggs-Caminetti case and to a resolution introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this report may be considered for four hours, one half of that time to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], and that at the expiration of that four hours the motion to lay the resolution on the table shall be in order without amendment or intervening motion. This is the same proposition I submitted to the House on July 18 and of which I gave notice on July 15.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that there shall be four hours debate on the Caminetti-Diggs affair, two hours to be controlled by himself and two hours by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], and he states that at the end of that time the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] will make a motion to lay the resolution on the table, without intervening motion.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman does not need to have unanimous consent to do what he indicates in the latter part of his statement. That is his right, anyway.

The SPEAKER. It is more in the nature of a notice than anything else.

Mr. CLAYTON. "The gentleman from Alabama" is aware of the fact stated by the gentleman from Georgia, but he wanted the unanimous consent in order to cover the range of debate of four hours.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama and to the House that I do not believe there is a single Member of the House who would object to the very fullest and freest discussion of this matter after the date of the trial of this case in California. I understand that the case is set for trial one week from to-day. I gather that information from the newspapers. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he will modify his request so as to provide for this debate some time after August 5?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, that proposition was considered, and I am acting in pursuance of the unanimous instructions of the Committee on the Judiciary. I regret to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I do not feel authorized to modify my request as he has suggested.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, still further reserving the right to object, I want to say that I had hoped that the gentleman from Alabama would accede to my request, so that if the other side desired to object to it they could do so and thus show their real motive for wanting this discussion. I am not going to press my own views of the matter to the point of making an objection to this request, but I do want to ask the gentleman if he has asked for sufficient time to allow me some time, in the event that I should decide that I wanted to use it?

Mr. CLAYTON. In reply to the gentleman's first suggestion, to be perfectly frank with the gentleman, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was unwilling to agree to postpone this matter until after August 5, and he stated to me very candidly that he would not deal with the merits of the case to be tried out there at all, but that his speech would be in the line of a criticism of the Department of Justice here.

Now, as to his other inquiry, I can say to the gentleman from Tennessee that if the members of the committee do not need all this time I shall be very glad to give an opportunity to the gentleman from Tennessee; but I feel that I ought to reserve the two hours for the use of the committee. I think I will be able to give a part of it to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say in all frankness to the gentleman from Alabama that if we are to have a discussion by unanimous consent, I do not think any Member of the House on either side ought to be cut off. We are not doing anything, we have plenty of time, and the gentleman can ask to extend the time allowed beyond four hours. I must have some assurance that I can have at least 15 minutes if in the progress of the debate it should appear necessary for me to take part. I would like for the gentleman, if he has not asked for sufficient time, to amend his request so as to extend the time to 2 hours and 15 minutes on a side, in order that he can assure me now that I shall have that amount of time.

Mr. CLAYTON. I can say to the gentleman what I said awhile ago—that I think the gentleman will be accorded some time; just how much I can not tell, because the members of the committee will want some time. The gentleman from Tennessee is well aware that the matter can be so put before the House as to limit all discussion to an hour, and that that hour would be under the control of the chairman.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will modify his request so as to make the time for debate 2 hours and 15 minutes on each side, so that he may yield the gentleman from Tennessee 15 minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. If that is agreeable to gentlemen on that side of the Chamber, I will agree to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. McKELLAR. I rise for the purpose of reserving the right to object. I want to say that I would have raised the point of order to the consideration of this matter before the trial of the case, and I want 15 minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, we will make it four hours and a half, and give the gentleman from Tennessee 15 minutes. Is there any other soul that wants to be made happy? [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say, if the gentleman is going to indulge in that kind of talk——

Mr. CLAYTON. Can not the gentleman from Tennessee understand a little pleasantry? He had a smile on his face and everybody else had a smile on his face, but the weather is hot, and I will excuse the gentleman.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to interrogate the gentleman from Alabama for a moment.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas with very great pleasure.

Mr. DIES. I think it is possible that I may want 5 or 10 minutes to get into the RECORD and expatiate on the delivery of a speech by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] on modern muckraking some little time ago, in which he adverted to charges against Washington, Hamilton, Jefferson, Christ our Savior, and all of the leading Democrats and Republicans. I want to know if this speech that he is about to make is an extension or an application of the former speech?

Mr. KAHN. In the same line.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the gentleman from Texas put that question to me?

Mr. DIES. I want to know if I can get about 10 minutes?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request by making the time for debate five hours, and then I will cheerfully yield to the gentleman from Texas to illuminate this abstruse question, if you will pardon the exaggeration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama modifies his request and asks that debate on this matter shall continue five hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CLAYTON. And after the expiration of that time it shall be in order to lay the resolution on the table without amendment or intervening motion.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask if the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Kansas have an agreement as to the division of the time on that side?

Mr. MURDOCK. That is just what I was going to inquire about. I want to know of the gentleman from Illinois if I can have 40 minutes out of the two hours and a half.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas is to have 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Kansas shall have 40 minutes of the time on that side, and at the end of the time the gentleman from Alabama is to exercise his inalienable right to move to lay the resolution on the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL FRIDAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a moment?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

GOVERNMENT OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Philippine question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Philippine question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic national platform of 1900 declared:

> We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence; and, third, protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the Republics of Central and South America.

I was first a candidate before the people in 1900, and my attention was called to the third provision above in the platform by Mr. M. E. Kleberg, of Galveston, as being a misconstruction of the Monroe doctrine and a misapplication of it to the Eastern Hemisphere. This led me to a study of the question of how to get rid of the Philippine Islands, and led to my introduction of the following resolution:

> Resolved, etc., That it is the purpose of the United States to cease exercising sovereignty over the Philippine Islands as soon as may be with justice to them and honor to the United States, and that it is the preference of the United States to accomplish this purpose by establishing an independent government in said islands; that in pursuance of such purpose and preference the President is respectfully requested to consider the expediency of opening negotiations with the Governments of Great Britain, Germany, France, Russia, Italy, Spain, and Japan with the view of effecting a joint treaty with such Governments by which it shall be provided that an independent government in the Philippine Islands, when established by the United States, shall be recognized and preserved; that pending the establishment of such independent Philippine government the Philippine Islands shall be neutral territory; that such Philippine government, when established, shall agree that it will maintain equality of trade relations toward all the signatory powers, and that in the event of war between any of the nations of the earth it shall be neutral; that such concessions as may be made the United States in the establishment of such independent government shall be recognized by all the signatory powers.

At the following session of Congress, when the Philippine tariff was before the body, on January 9, 1906, I discussed the question at length in the House, saying, among other things:

"No man will contend that the power, under our Constitution, of settling this Philippine problem is lodged anywhere save in the Congress of the United States. A great Senator, not a member of my party, but a man of the highest order of ability, has stated in a breath the constitutional situation as follows:

> "We have differed upon the Philippine question. Many Senators on the other side thought the United States ought not to have acquired the Philippines. There was fair ground for difference of opinion probably upon that proposition. I think there is no difference between the minority and the majority in this Chamber that we have acquired the Philippine Islands, and that to-day the United States is titular sovereign of the Philippine Archipelago. What the people of the United States will choose in the long run to do with the Philippines, what the ultimate policy of the United States will be as to the Philippines, no man can now say. There has been no committal by Congress, and it is a matter entirely under the Constitution for Congress to determine as to the ultimate attitude of this country toward the Philippines.

"So said Senator John C. Spooner March 17, 1905. No congressional enactment states what the will of the American people is on this subject."

I then proceeded to discuss the Monroe doctrine:

"And this brings me to this reason: I want to say to this House that there never has been a political doctrine asserted in the history of this country that has been so uniformly approved by every President and every Cabinet officer since its assertion as the doctrine known as the Monroe doctrine. Not a single President from Monroe down but has either directly or indirectly given his approval to this doctrine. Not a Secretary of State—and we have had many distinguished men in that high office—but has either directly or indirectly given his approbation to the Monroe doctrine.

"Perhaps the brightest jewel in the crown that decks the brow of one of the greatest living Democrats is the action of Grover Cleveland in the Venezuela controversy, when he stood for the Monroe doctrine, though it might mean war. McKinley and Hay, Roosevelt and Root, Cleveland and Olney, and so on, all along down the line, our statesmen have approved this doctrine as essential to the vitality, to the perpetuity, to the safety of this American Republic. What is that doctrine? What is its scope and force? What does it say to the world? What do we stand for when we stand for the Monroe doctrine? I have seen no finer statement than this from an editorial in the Washington Post of December 14 last:

"The Monroe doctrine—

"says this editorial—

"was announced in response to a threat by a group of European nations known as the holy alliance to aid Spain in recovering her revolted Spanish colonies. Monroe and Adams admitted fully the right of Spain to reestablish her authority over them, but Monroe made the following declaration in his message of December 2, 1823. Referring to the allied powers in Europe, which had indicated a purpose of aiding Spain in the forcible recovery of her revolted colonies on this hemisphere, he said: 'We owe it therefore to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere; but with the Governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European nation in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.'

"'This, and this only,' says the Post, 'is the Monroe doctrine.'

"I understand that the Monroe doctrine, in plain United States, as we would say it down in Texas, means this: We say to the world we will not permit European monarchies to acquire territory and exercise dominion over it in the Western Hemisphere, and that is all.

"Now, it is true that a good deal of discussion has arisen as to the scope of the Monroe doctrine. Some great men have contended that it involves going further than merely saying this to Europe; that it involves the assertion of a protectorate over South American Republics and the thrusting of our fingers into their internal affairs, dictating to them or restraining them from contracting debts and entering into treaties with foreign nations. I myself do not subscribe to any such extension of the Monroe doctrine as that. But that is immaterial in this discussion. For the purpose for which I use the doctrine it is immaterial how much you extend its scope toward a protectorate over South American Republics. The point is that all of us are agreed it is a Western Hemisphere doctrine. It has and can have no application to a single inch of territory a part of the Eastern Hemisphere.

"Now, let us think a minute. Every session of Congress that goes by without an expression of the American people as to our ultimate will in the Philippines constitutes a menace to the vitality of the Monroe doctrine. Why? Because no man with sense can contend for America that Europe can not acquire territory on the Western Continent and exercise dominion over it, but that the United States can acquire and exercise dominion over territory in the Eastern Hemisphere. This doctrine has a reciprocity which constitutes the heart of the doctrine, the equity of it, the vitality of it, the force of it; and whenever you strike out that you ultimately whittle away the doctrine itself. When we promulgated that doctrine, accentuated it step by step in our history, we just as good as said to Europe, 'We will not dabble in your affairs and you shall not dabble in ours.' Whenever we abandon that position we abandon the Monroe doctrine. This is not a Democratic idea, this is not a Republican idea, but I am presenting to you an American argument for the declaration of our purpose there, in consonance with our Monroe doctrine, in consonance with our Constitution, in consonance with our Declaration of Independence, and, as I verily believe, in consonance with the views of a vast majority of the American people.

"Whether we ever adopt the rest of my resolution or not, whether a treaty neutralizing the islands and recognizing their independence can ever be negotiated or not, if we adopt this much of the resolution we shall at least proclaim an honorable position in the world, and we shall not mortgage the future with reference to the Philippines by doing it. I have only said that it is our preference to accomplish this purpose by setting up an independent government there. If that can not be done effectually and any door opens by which other righteous disposition may be made of the islands, it will be open to the American Congress to accept any such open door. For myself, I am frank to say that if the Japanese Government were to intimate even that they would like to have the Philippine Islands, I would offer them to them as a Christmas present, provided they would enter into a treaty to protect certain rights of life and liberty and property there. I would be glad to turn the whole bunch of trouble over to them, who could handle them and work out their destiny better than we could under all the commissions that we should be able to organize. Now, then, so much for the declaration which is the basis of the method by which I propose to solve this question."

I then proceeded to discuss the parliamentary history of the subject.

"On February 28, 1823, the House passed by a yea-and-nay vote of 131 yeas to 9 nays the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to enter upon and prosecute from time to time such negotiations with the Federal maritime powers of Europe and America as he may deem expedient for the effectual abolition of the African slave trade and its ultimate denunciation as piracy under the laws of nations by the consent of the civilized world.

"This resolution was offered to the House by Mr. Mercer of Virginia. An examination of the debate in the House not only shows no objection to the methods by any Member of the House, but a general recognition of the duty of Congress to declare the will of the people for the guidance of the Executive is observed in all the discussions; Mr. Wright of Maryland, voicing that idea in these words:

"Sir, this Congress ought to take upon themselves the responsibility of this measure by their positive opinion and leave it no longer a subject of doubt what is the will of the American people.

"Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

"Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

"Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman when that resolution was offered.

"Mr. BURGESS. 1823.

"Mr. SULZER. Was it adopted?

"Mr. BURGESS. Yes; by the overwhelming vote of 131 yeas to 9 nays. There were only nine nays against it among the distinguished men that were Members of that House. Henry Clay was Speaker, and there were other big guns in the House, Webster and, perhaps, Calhoun—Webster certainly was there; I do not think he had then gone to the Senate.

"On December 23, 1823, Mr. Livingston, of Louisiana, offered the House a resolution that—"The President of the United States be requested to negotiate with the Government of Great Britain for the cession of so much land on the Island of Abaco as may be necessary for the erection of lighthouses, etc.

"This was adopted without debate or objection. Henry Clay was Speaker; Daniel Webster and many other great names in our history were Members. On May 16, 1826, on motion of Mr. Livingston, a resolution was agreed to that—

"The President of the United States be requested to inform this House whether any arrangement had been made with the Government of Great Britain in consequence of the resolution of this House of the 23d of December, 1823.

"Verily, in those days the House asserted itself. In his message of December 3, 1833, President Jackson says:

"I have the satisfaction to inform you that a negotiation which, by desire of the House of Representatives, was opened some years ago with the British Government for the erection of lighthouses on the Bahamas has been successful.

"On April 23, 1879, in this House, Mr. Fernando Wood offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested to consider the expediency—

"And from this I have borrowed the verbiage of my resolution—

"of entering into a convention with the Government of France for the negotiation of a treaty which shall secure a more equal interchange of the products and manufactures of each country and serve to cement closer relations of amity, trade, and commerce.

"Many distinguished men were Members of this House, including such as Thomas B. Reed; W. P. Frye, Nelson Aldrich, both now Senators; Warner Miller, Frank Hiscock, Ben Butterworth, William McKinley, and the present Speaker of this House. The record shows no discussion, and the resolution was adopted without any dissenting vote of record.

"Now, such, in brief, is the parliamentary history of this sort of matters in the House. I shall quote, not at length, from the Senate Document No. 104, which is a reprint of an article by the senior Senator from the State of Massachusetts, dealing with the treaty-making powers of the Senate—a document which I recommend to every Member of the House regardless of his politics as affording one of the most interesting, clear, and accurate discussions of the office of the Senate with reference to treaty making that I have been able to find anywhere.

"He cites numerous instances similar to the resolution which I now offer. For instance, on March 3, 1835, the Senate passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to consider the expediency of opening negotiations with the Governments of other nations, and particularly the Governments of Central America and New Granada, for the purpose of effectually protecting, by suitable treaty stipulations with them, such individuals or companies as may undertake to open a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by the construction of a ship canal across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and of securing forever, by such stipulations, the free and equal right of navigating such canal to all such nations on the payment of such reasonable tolls as may be established to compensate the capitalists who may engage in such undertaking and complete the work.

"On March 3, 1888, the Senate of the United States passed a resolution asking President Cleveland to open negotiations with China for the regulation of emigration from that country, and President Cleveland replied that such negotiations had been undertaken. So that, so far as the parliamentary status of this resolution is concerned, it is supported by the precedent both in the House and in the Senate without a break of nearly 100 years. It is perfectly right and proper to instruct the President to open any negotiations which we conceive to be for the benefit of the American people."

I then proceeded to discuss the propositions in my resolution, as follows:

"Now, as to the treaty method proposed, it is my confident belief that such a treaty could be easily negotiated. Why? If we should resolve here that it is our ultimate purpose to get out of the Philippines and that it is our preference to get out by setting up an independent government there, protected by treaty with different powers, drawing about it the magic circle of peace in the interest of the people as well as the peace of the world, any one of the European powers would hesitate not to approve the treaty for fear if the treaty failed we might make other disposition of the islands, either to Japan or to Germany or to Russia or to England, and, of course, all the others would not like that and would not want that to be done.

"So that an antagonism of interest between the powers would force an agreement to this method which would present a community of interests not only of Europe, not only of the United States, but of the civilized world. It would establish an open-door zone by treaty agreement between the powers of Europe and the United States. It would establish a peace zone where war could not enter. It would establish a peaceful opportunity, without fear of outside molestation, for independence to work itself out in the Philippine Islands. It would afford a fixed and definite relation upon which we could pitch all of our legislation so as to facilitate its accomplishment without involving any of our domestic institutions or theories. Nor do I take it that any European power would object either to neutralizing the islands or to preserving their independence when the government was set up by the United States.

"Nor would they object to its then agreeing to be neutral—to the open-door policy. Nor would they object, in my judgment, to such reasonable concessions being made to the people of the United States as the equities involved in our relation with them suggest. I think, for instance, that it would be entirely right and proper in the establishment of an independent government there for the Philippine people to make certain cessions to us as part of the enormous price in blood and treasure which we have expended to secure for them their independence.

"I think no European Government could or would object to such a provision as that. If they did, so far as I am concerned, rather than have the treaty fail and have the plan fail, I would freely give up any concession to us whatever and occupy precisely the same relation to them that any other Government did which was a signatory power to the treaty. I am not willing for the United States to ever set up a protectorate over an independent government in the Philippine Islands. I shall never vote while I am a Member of Congress to expand the Monroe doctrine and then extend it across the Pacific and thrust it upon a European country. The doctrine of an American protectorate over any sort of a government in the Eastern Hemisphere is, to my mind, utterly unstatesmanlike, utterly unbusinesslike, contrary to all our traditions and principles, and fraught with infinite danger to the American people. I would rather hold the Philippines in tutelage for years and years and years—aye, for centuries—than to give them an independent government under an American protectorate. That is worse than a European alliance, because with an alliance there is reciprocity, but with a protectorate you are responsible for all they do and they are responsible neither to you nor anybody else. But if we should have them hedged about by a treaty all these difficulties would disappear as if by magic.

"Nor is this idea any novel invention. It is not a new thing in the procedure of the nations of the earth. The history of the little Republic of Switzerland, lying nestled in the lap of the European powers for 75 years, is a vindication of the value to the world and the peace of the people of such a treaty agreement as this. Switzerland is the most advanced Republic on the face of the earth to-day, and it draws its life, imbibes its progress, has made its mighty evolution under an agreement of the powers to preserve and conserve its neutrality and its independence. We can do the same thing in the Philippines. All we have to do is to have the courage of free-born American citizens and vote like we believe and it will be done."

This resolution of mine was the first idea of the sort that was suggested and conflicted with the third provision of the Democratic platform of 1900. More than a year after I had introduced this resolution in the House the Anti-Imperialistic League got Mr. McCall, of Massachusetts, to introduce, by request, a resolution of simple neutrality of the Philippines, leaving out the declaration of intention or purpose on the part of the United States.

I have introduced the resolution in every Congress since then, and it is now pending before the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House. The Democratic national platform of 1912 declares:

> We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such government to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other nations.

It will be seen from the above quotation that the platform fixes no time for granting the Filipinos their independence, nor did the first expression on the subject in 1900, nor does the platform of 1904 or 1908, and the platform of 1912, which is the last expression of the people's will, comes very near to indorsing my resolution. You will observe that it abandons the third provision of the 1900 platform, namely, "the protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the Republics of Central and South America," and comes to the original position of my resolution.

I hope to see favorable action taken by the House at least next winter.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Mr. CLINE. I renew my request to extend my remarks in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, under permission given me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I propose to incorporate an address by Henry W. Bullock, chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Commission of Indiana, before the Indiana Bar Association July 10, on the proper administration of the compensation law, many features of which I indorse.

A proper workmen's compensation law, correctly administered, is in harmony with the age and our present social development. I am thoroughly committed to the principles involved in compensation statutes. They supplement the old law of liability statutes. Liability of an employer of labor to an employee provides only a method, under certain well-defined rules, for compensation for a wrong committed or a personal injury done by the employer. Compensation acts not only include a recovery for injury done, but they also include, because of economic and social conditions, a reasonable amount that should be paid to the injured and those dependent upon him without regard to the question of negligence unless the negligence be willful. The risk that the employee takes, and which he has always assumed, should be assumed by the society or community which he is serving when the injury is received. Society receives a benefit of his labor in the production of many lines of manufactured products, and it should assume with it the liability for the injury he receives in performing that labor. I favor a well-defined policy of administering the law. I want to see the workmen get the full benefit of the law and get it promptly, and because of that fact compensation ought to be collected and disbursed to those entitled to it at the minimum of expense and within the shortest period of time. The compensation should be ample to provide for the injured and those dependent upon him for support. As an illustration of the waste of the fund before it reaches the person the law designed it should benefit, it is said that the railroads pay yearly more than $11,000,000 for personal injuries. That after the cases had been fought through long legal battles up to the highest courts, that less than $3,000,000 found its way to the pockets of the injured. The remainder was eaten up by attorneys' fees, costs, witness fees, and general expense. The proper administration of a compensation law is one of the features of this burning question that should interest the legislator. I supplement this brief statement, in which I have not attempted to discuss the questions involved at all, with the able address above referred to.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

[Delivered by Henry W. Bullock, chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Commission of Indiana, before the Indiana Bar Association, July 10, 1913.]

"Mr. Chairman and members of the Indiana Bar Association. I wish to thank you for this invitation to address the association, but after listening to the report of Mr. Harris and his committee, and reading their comprehensive report of a year ago, I am very much in the position of the smallest boy of three, who answered an advertisement for 'Boy wanted.'

"The oldest boy told the would-be employer that he could clean up the office and do numerous other things, which he enumerated. The second boy said that he could do anything that the oldest could do with a few additional things, which he named. When the smallest boy was asked what he could do, he said, 'I can't do nothin'; the other fellers have done it all.'

"Mr. Harris and his committee have done so much that I am relieved of much of the burden. Gov. Ralston has appointed a commission of five to study the cause and extent of industrial injuries, and to recommend some measure for their prevention and compensation. In this work we ask the hearty cooperation of the Indiana Bar Association, as a body, and of all of its members as individuals, and as citizens of a State of no mean importance in the industrial world.

"In social legislation Indiana has taken but little part for 50 years or more, until the last few sessions of the legislature. Almost 100 years ago Indiana was honored by having in her midst some of the greatest educators of the world, the foremost leaders of industrial education, and the most renowned zoologist and geologist of their time. These educators came to our State at the solicitation of Robert Owen, who, a hundred years ago, demonstrated to the world that industries can be conducted humanely and profitably at the same time. While Mr. Owen's communistic theories did not succeed at New Harmony, yet his humane principles and educational policies were of untold blessing to our State, and the statues of two of his sons now adorn our State capitol, placed there by loving hearts as memorials to humanity in commercial life.

"When we consider that every year 1 coal miner out of every 10 in Indiana is injured, 1 steel worker out of every 5, and 1 railroad worker out of every 20, with even a greater proportion in some of the building trades, we can more nearly comprehend the social problem with which we must deal. Annually ten times as many laborers in the United States are injured while in their various lines of duty as were engaged both on the Union and the Confederate sides in the Battle of Gettysburg, and every year practically as many American workmen are killed in the line of their employment as fell upon that field of valor and carnage 50 years ago. As these fatalities occur to workmen, whose average age does not exceed 35 years, their families, and society as well, are deprived of 30 years of productive labor. While their families must suffer, society also will suffer in defective citizenship with low-living standards, or you and I must make this up through our contributions to some social insurance fund, which will relieve the social shock now borne by a few. Justice demands that all citizens be well paid and cared for, and, if the wages received are not sufficient under all circumstances to provide against want in every contingency, then they are not a living wage.

"We have been permitting employers and employees to deal with this question between themselves, without regard to the social significance which it embraces. From time to time, we have enacted employers' liability laws, which impose duties of compensation, or, rather, provided for causes of action for the misconduct on the part of employers or their servants.

"We have finally succeeded in abolishing the fellow-servant rule which Secretary Ireland said 'Was invented in 1837; Lord Abinger planted it; Baron Alderson watered it; and the devil gave it increase.'

"These laws have been beneficial in that they secured payments in many instances to those seriously injured, but they have been found defective in that they do not provide for compensation in all cases of injury. Most foreign countries have gone further than we have, and have provided that in every case of disability there shall be compensation in proportion to the degree of the injury.

"There can be no argument brought against the theory that every man who commits a private wrong on another should pay the injured party. The employers' liability laws are right in principle, but are insufficient to meet the situation. Society does not demand their repeal but their extension. The objections to these liability laws are to their administration rather than to their principle. We must not confound a liability law with a compensation law or social insurance measure. Liability laws deal only with misconduct and wrongs. Compensation laws deal with social and economic conditions without regard to misconduct. The objections to the operation of liability laws can be summed up as follows:

"1. Only a small portion of injured workmen receive substantial compensation. Thus the standard of citizenship and of living is lowered, and the public is the sufferer.

"2. The system is wasteful, being costly to the employer, and to the State in maintaining courts, and to employees in their attorneys' fees.

"3. The system is slow in operation.

"4. The operation of the law breeds antagonism between the employers and their employees.

"5. It throws the burden of suffering upon a few directly and upon society indirectly.

"Many foreign countries have gone beyond compensation for misconduct, and have provided social insurance reaching all classes of disability, and have provided systems of insurance whereby the many who have profited shall divide the burden with the few who have suffered. Our Federal Government in 1908 recognized this principle and enacted a law for the compensation of a part of the civil employees of the United States. This law, as finally extended, covers about one-fourth of the 400,000 civilian employees of our Government. From August 1, 1908, to July 1, 1911, there were 21,033 injuries reported regarding Government employees, of which 670 were fatal. Claims were made on 363 of these fatal injuries, and on 7,622 of the nonfatal cases and $960,000 was paid for the same and out of the Federal Treasury. Thus 307 deaths and 13,104 lesser injuries were not compensated for out of the Public Treasury.

"Senator KERN, of Indiana, has introduced a measure in Congress to provide for compensation in all cases affecting Government employees, either by disease contracted while in service or from accident received while in the line of duty.

EXTENDING LIABILITY WITHOUT NEGLIGENCE.

"I do not deem it necessary to discuss at great length the constitutional question of liability without negligence. Our laws have written into the contract of employment that an employer shall be liable for certain negligence of himself or of his employees which inflict bodily injury to workmen. The laws have prescribed certain rules of conduct, which the employer and his servants must follow, and if the violation of these rules causes injury to a workman he may recover. This is as it should be. But there is a large number of industrial accidents—more than half, in fact—where the conduct of the employer is in strict accord with the law and where he is guilty of no legal shortcoming. These injuries result from the inherent hazards of industry—from the dangers which strictly adhere to and are a part of the industry itself—for which no one can be legally blamable.

"To my mind it is useless to discuss the academic proposition of compelling the employer to respond in damages, where he is guilty of no misconduct or negligence. Private wrongs or torts are personal; but the injuries occurring from the inherent hazards of industry are not personal, and should be charged against the industry, as a whole, and not against the individual employer.

"Society in its organized form may adopt any law, rule, or regulation it sees proper concerning property, life, or liberty. It is only a matter of expediency whether or not it does this. Constitutions are adopted that these changes may not be radical, and that certain rights may be guaranteed as long as the constitution endures. All property rights are created by law and can be destroyed or modified by law. All property is held, devised, and conveyed only by virtue of statutory and constitutional laws. We have no vested rights in rules of law or conduct, except as society has spoken through constitutions. So all laws regarding fellow servants, contributory negligence, and assumption of risk may be modified at the pleasure of the legislature.

"The police power extends to all public needs, and it may be broad enough to cover the economic needs of industry. It has been decided by the highest courts that sometimes an ulterior public advantage may justify the insignificant taking of property for immediate private purposes. Chief Justice Taney decided, in the License cases, that the police power is the power inherent in the Government to govern men and things. It is a conceded proposition that when property becomes affected with a public interest, it becomes subject to public control. All law limits liberty or individual action, but at the same time guarantees rights. Law may in some manner diminish property rights, but in some ways it also increases them by promoting the general welfare and creating conditions and opportunities for its enjoyment. Property is governed by law for the convenience of the public as well as the owner, as street improvements are ordered and special assessments laid for the general welfare.

"There are examples where the State collects funds from a large number of persons, by assessing a tax, and thus distributes the burden and lessens the social shock. Among these examples are the (a) bank guaranty laws, (b) sheep-killing dog laws, (c) care for the unfortunate and tubercular, (d) taxing insurance companies for the maintenance of fire marshals and injured firemen, etc.

"I am firmly convinced, however, that under our present constitution the courts of Indiana must always be open for injuries done to the person of workmen, unless this right is waived by contract, and that the amount recoverable must be adequate for the damage sustained. In other words, there can be no compulsory compensation law in Indiana which will deprive workmen of the right to bring action in court for private wrongs. However, laws may create conditions which will make it impossible for them to obtain employment unless they waive this right.

"Social insurance, however, can be made compulsory by imposing an occupation tax on business or an excise on corporations for the right of doing business in their corporate capacity. This was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases involving the taxation of corporations. In fact, great latitude has always been allowed in the imposition of occupational taxes either for revenue or regulation. If employers really desire a compulsory compensation law they can assist in the passage of such a measure, as we believe it will be held valid.

SOCIAL INSURANCE.

"We should not view this question as extending personal liability to cases without fault. We should consider workmen's compensation as a scheme of social insurance, the whole theory being that the cost of caring for the sick and injured in industries should be added to the cost of production and borne by those who consume the articles produced by the unfortunate laborer. This shifts the proposition from that of the relation of master and servant to the relationship of society to the producers of wealth and comfort. The ingenuity of man has developed complex machinery which has reduced the cost of production, but has at the same time increased the waste of human life and limb. Society receives the benefit of the decreased cost and should bear the burdens of the increased waste, which cost should be added to the price of commodities and be distributed among the consumers of such commodities. Business conducted by employers is not their business. Society demands certain commodities, and employs manufacturers and transportation companies to secure these commodities. Thus the employers are agencies employed by society, and society has the right to say how its money paid for commodities shall be expended. Employers charge insurance rates against the consumer, and the consumer has a right to say how the price, which he pays for commodities, shall be expended for the common good. It then becomes a question of how a community shall tax itself, and how we shall spend our own money, so that we in our social organization shall receive the greatest benefit.

"Workmen's compensation or social insurance, in my mind, should not create a new relationship between master and servant by writing into the contract of employment new conditions, but rather should be a compact between the State or society at large and those who labor, so as to guarantee the care of those who labor as an economic necessity and social duty. It then becomes a social question, and not a matter between employer and employee.

"Society demands coal, lumber, automobiles, and other commodities, and asks men to risk their lives to produce them. If we enjoy their comforts, we should fully pay for all the energy and sacrifice required for their production. In other words, the inherent hazards of industry should be borne by the community at large where thus produced, but the negligence of employers should be a personal proposition, for which an action at law can be maintained. We should, by social insurance, distribute among the many the burdens received by the few, so that the social shock would not be felt by society at large, through defective and inefficient citizenship of the afflicted nor crime and ignorance of those immediately affected. This compensation should not depend on negligence or fault any more than the ordinary insurance policy. It should be a covenant to pay when the burden falls on the workman, unless the injury is intentionally self-inflicted.

PLANS OF COMPENSATION.

"Since the consumer or the public at large pays all of the expenses of production, the question is, How shall the community best tax itself to obtain the most efficient administration of the insurance fund? It is no longer a personal matter between employer and employee. To say that a scheme allows the greatest liberty to the employer is a condemnation for it rather than an argument for its existence. We have had liberty already, and it has brought dire results to the community. We must have regulation and control.

"We would have but little trouble in devising plans for the distribution of funds to cover industrial disability if only the injured parties and the public were concerned, but through the operation of liability laws third parties have come into the arena. Insurance companies with their attorneys, agents, and adjusters are in the field acting as buffers between employers and employees. They are writing practically $1,000,000 of insurance each year in Indiana and paying but a little more than $500,000 in claims. Their agents receive commissions approximating $200,000 annually and their attorneys and adjusters similar sums. These agencies are working for profit and are crying hard against the loss of profits which should not be considered in the solution of this problem. We also have another class of attorneys who handle personal-injury cases for workmen and who in the aggregate receive perhaps $150,000 to $200,000 a year from injured workmen and their families. One line of work is as honorable as the other, and while one may chase the ambulance the other haunts the grave and oftentimes imposes upon the widows and orphans through deception and inadequate payments. There is a margin of $700,000 to $800,000 wasted in handling the present fund, and if our commission can devise plans to distribute this fund more economically and efficiently, we will have promoted the general welfare through the saving of waste.

"Workmen's compensation laws provide for the distribution of the funds in the various States and counties, as follows:

"1. By employers direct or through their insurers without regulation or controlled by the State. This is a most unsatisfactory method, as it allows a cunning adjuster of liability companies to impose on an ignorant workman, and permits him to plunder the orphan and widow. It has a tendency to curtail the sums paid to the workmen, and thus defeats the purpose of such laws, through the incentive to save money, by making the payments small. Some States have this plan, with a State board to hear appeals.

"2. In some States and countries the fund is distributed by mutual insurance companies controlled by employers. This is almost as unsatisfactory as the first. Germany has this system, and 50 per cent of the cases there are appealed, because the employers cut down the allowance to reduce their expenses.

"3. Some States and countries require the funds to be administered solely by stock insurance companies. This method makes those financially interested the judge of their own cause.

"4. Other countries, and a number of the States, collect the funds through State agencies, and distribute the same through impartial State boards. Ohio, West Virginia, Washington, California, Nevada, Oregon, and a few other States have adopted this plan of State insurance, in whole or in part with success and have administered an insurance fund for the benefit of injured workers with economy. The experiments worked out in these States will compare favorably with Germany and other countries where social insurance has been in existence for a longer number of years.

"While all compensation laws in this country are experimental as yet, the general tendency is toward State insurance as productive of the greatest social efficiency. A joint control of the funds by employers and employees has worked well in Germany, during the first 13 weeks of disability. Under State insurance, the workmen receive all that the employer contributes. The element of profit is entirely destroyed. No workmen's compensation law will work well where there is a tendency to make profit out of the misfortunes of others. The greatest objection to employers' liability laws is that the employers pay large sums, while the employees receive but a fractional part of the amounts so paid.

"As an example of the defects of our present laws, especially those governing liability insurance, is that of the Prest-o-Lite Co., of Indianapolis, which employed contractors to erect a concrete building. The building collapsed and many workmen were killed. The policy in the first place was to protect the employers against loss which they would sustain or have to pay. The contractors became insolvent and nothing could be collected from them, and not having to pay anything the surety company was not liable; besides the surety company claimed it had issued a policy to the firm as general contractors and that at this time they were doing concrete work. The owners may or may not be liable under the dangerous employment act of 1911. At any rate, a large number of dependents were left, widows had to take to the washtub, the aged had to suffer, and children were deprived of the advantages which otherwise would have been provided for them. There was a social shock not alone to the workmen and their families but to the community. Justice would dictate that insurance policies should be issued for the benefit of the workmen if nothing more.

"Compensation could be provided with but little additional cost if the waste was out of the transaction and workmen received all that the employers pay. In 1911 there was more than $35,000,000 collected for liability insurance in the United States, $20,000,000 of which was paid in losses. Probably $8,000,000 of this was paid in attorney fees by workmen, leaving not more than $12,000,000 to go to the actual relief of the injured. Some of the companies writing this insurance are foreign corporations who began in this country by a loan or deposit of $200,000 to the American branch. These loans have been repaid many times and these foreign companies really have nothing invested in this country, but in 1911 on no investment one of the companies received from the American branch $565,000, another $153,000, another $96,000, another $63,000. This money was taken either from the workmen through decreased wages, from the employer through the reduction in dividends, or from the consumer in an increase in price of products. In any event it lessened the comforts of the American people.

"Where workmen receive all that the employers collect the price of commodities is not enhanced in any material degree, as wages constitute only about one-sixth of the price of products. Liability rates are usually calculated on the pay roll. In Indiana we pay as much for liability insurance as the Ohio people do for compensation, as in that State the employers pay a certain percentage on their pay roll based on the hazard of the industry. In Indiana the liability rate on structural-iron work is $10.50 on the $100 of pay roll, in Ohio the compensation rate is $6. In Indiana the liability rate on concrete work is $5.60, while in Ohio the compensation rate is $4. In electric-light work in Indiana the rate is $5.25, in Ohio the compensation rate is $3.10. In shoe factories in Indiana, the rate is 35 cents to the $100 of pay roll; in Ohio it is 45 cents, while knitting mills in Indiana pay 42 cents and in Ohio 30 cents. Shirt manufacturers pay 21 cents in Indiana and 20 cents in Ohio. Publishers in Indiana pay 35 cents on every $1 of wages paid in the production of books and 30 cents in Ohio. Thus lawyers pay 35 cents to every $100 of wages paid, or 35 cents to every $600 worth of books purchased. Even if this rate would be doubled or tripled, the price of law books would not advance to any perceptible degree, and even at that we would have the pleasure of knowing our books were not printed in blood or bound in tears.

"The element of profit should not be considered in workmen's compensation any more than in conducting our courts, operating our schools, or caring for the sick and afflicted. We might as well turn our courts and schools over to private agencies as to permit private agencies to administer a social insurance fund. The private agency would conduct our Government with a view of profit, rather than efficiency, just as our utility companies have often attempted to do at various times to have a wide margin between a maximum of charges and a minimum of service. We do not want the service of our courts, schools, and administrative agencies skimped in efficiency. We want service for every dollar, but our first concern is service. Private agencies might employ our judges at a lower salary and our teachers for lower wages or they might conduct schools in competition with our State schools, but that would not be an argument for privately conducted government. We would not even turn the collection of taxes over to a savings bank or permit them to say in what manner our public funds should be administered. We pay the bills in the end and must decide how they must be paid. The question is not how little can we pay the workman or compel him to take, but what he is entitled to and what is the best for the common welfare.

"No man can be a judge of his own cause, and when an employer, a mutual or stock company, is permitted to decide how much a workman is entitled to, whether he received the injury in the course of his employment, how long he will be disabled and the percentage of his disability, the judge and paymaster are one and the same person, and the judge immediately turns financier and attempts to cheesepare the amount to be paid and there is strife and contention the same as under existing laws. Laws which permit such settlements are nothing more than liability laws which limit the amount of recovery and tie the hands of workmen so that there will be no recovery in the courts. We are told we must abolish waste. If this is true, we must abolish dividends, premiums, and commissions of insurance companies and their agents and we must abolish the fees of their attorneys. These are wastes just the same as the contingent fee of the attorney for the workman.

"Some welfare and pension schemes of employers are devised for the purpose of preventing compensation and as an insurance against strikes and demands for better living conditions. They should be regulated by law so that workmen have some vested rights and will not be placed in a position where their employment and accident funds will be hazarded in case they seek what is just. The funds provided for compensation and welfare schemes are produced by the labor of the workmen and are consequently withheld from their wages. If they were not produced by the workmen, they would not be in existence. The State should control their distribution and provide for their security. This should not be left to the whim of employers, however generous some may be. They are only human, and, having power to discharge employees, some may at times hold the possible loss of position, benefits, and pensions over the heads of workmen like Dionysius suspending the sword over the head of Damocles. An ever-present menace of the strong having the power to withhold subsistence from the weak is incompatible with either civil or religious liberty. Hamilton well said, 'In the general course of human nature the power over a man's subsistence amounts to a power over his will.' We can have no liberty, political or otherwise, when workers depend upon the arbitrary will of employers for their existence during days of misfortune. If the popular will of the Nation requires a Constitution as a safeguard against turbulence and passion, it is equally true that some security should be provided against passions and human weakness in industry.

"I once noticed a small boy go to a butcher shop with a bench-legged bulldog. I thought it was a useless animal. When he returned with a large piece of liver a hound attempted to share it with him by taking the larger part. The bulldog played an important part. As long as we have the hungry adjusters and attorneys of the insurance companies, the injured workman is entitled to his bulldog. We should attempt to create a condition where both classes of animals will become useless and the workman will be protected by an impartial administrative board, the same as he is supposed to be protected in the streets and at his fireside. Profits in administering this fund are incompatible with the very idea of social service and economic justice, as profits are charges and must necessarily be taken from the wages of the worker, who with his family must suffer, or taken from the consumer in the way of increased price, and this adds to the high cost of living and social want.

"The fund created for social insurance should be collected from the employer as a source or agency, as he is enabled to pass it on to the consumer by adding it to the price of the commodity, and thus distributing the cost among the large number of consumers. It should not be taken from the wages of the worker, as it would lower the living condition of our State and would be adding burdens to those engaged in hazardous industries instead of decreasing those burdens. We should not take premiums from workmen in dangerous employment. The theory of the law heretofore has been that dangerous employment should pay higher wages, but as this accident rate is the greatest it would be decreasing the income of workmen injured in hazardous employment more than those in any other industry. The employers do not pay these premiums. In all contracts and business insurance rates are estimated as a part of the overhead expense and in the construction of buildings all contractors make these estimates and landlords fix the rents according to the cost of construction and tenants pay the bill.

"Any law which may be drafted or enacted should provide ample relief and should not be formed on lines to save money at the expense of the common welfare. Most of the so-called compensation laws are a disgrace to this country. When it comes to paying a workman $150 to $200 for the loss of an eye or a limb, we have introduced European living conditions in the community where American dividends prevail. Sixty to 85 per cent of all injuries are of less duration than two weeks, and a law which exempts payment for the first two weeks of disability and then gives only one-half wages for a period of from three to five years is an ingenious scheme to defeat compensation and a plain illustration of how not to do justice. I know of the case of a coal miner who has been blind for 27 years, another who has been disabled for 33 years, and a law which gives compensation in a limited manner for five or six years for permanent disability is a disgrace to any State and is not as efficient as our employers' liability laws. I have in mind two cases where children were born after their breadwinners were fatally injured. A law which would allow a limited compensation for five or six years and leave them helpless during the period when their character is forming would be unworthy of our State. The law should be so formed that it will not raise the price of commodities beyond those produced in other States. Otherwise, in the competition that exists wages would have to be lowered or profits reduced in order to meet competition of articles produced in States that are less liberal and just; but we need have but little fear, as the rate on manufacturing establishments is so small that it would add very little to the cost of any commodity.

"The main object sought is to prevent industrial accidents and disablements. We are so constituted that our mind travels along the line of least resistance, and where there is no penalty the employer is apt to conduct his business without safeguards and without due care. That has always been the history of industry. If there is resistance in the way of penalties, greater care will be exercised, and where employers are liable to respond in damages for the disregard for safety appliances there will be fewer accidents and the insurance rate on each industry will be less. It is to the interest of the careful employer that the negligent ones should be subject to such actions as penalties, so that the accident and insurance rates can be kept at the lowest possible point.

"It might be best to have our bureau of statistics consolidated with the bureau of inspection, so that the department which gathers information regarding our industries can classify the same, that there shall be no duplication of services, and it might be the best that the department of inspection be changed to a department of labor or an industrial commission, under the management of three or five persons, who can make the necessary inspections, distribute the insurance fund, investigate accidents and the extent thereof, and at the same time can give instructions on the better sanitation and conduct of industries. In this way there would be no duplication of service, for with the increased number of inspectors, which are even now necessary, an insurance fund for the benefit of workmen could be handled efficiently and with less expense than our courts are now handling accident cases, and a large amount of the $500,000 spent annually to maintain our courts and juries could be saved, as a large percentage of it is spent on account of litigation regarding personal injuries. In States where the insurance fund is collected and distributed through the agencies of the State there are boards of award or commissions, composed of three or more members and a sufficient staff to make inspections and handle the funds. Indiana should do nothing for herself of less consequence than this. The most just and effective plans should be chosen, that excessive rates may not be charged against employers, that amounts due workmen should not be withheld from them, that our industries should not be the prey of corporations organized for gain, but that the moneys collected from the consumers should all be spent in our State, not to enrich foreign treasuries. Any measure which is an improvement over our present laws must provide for the elimination of waste and profit to distributing agencies, must obviate delay, must provide security for the deferred payments of the compensation, and must provide some State board without financial interest in the fund to administer it. If it be objected that this State board would be a political agency, we would show that our State institutions, schools, and affairs are very well managed, and when our State employees are free they are usually employed by insurance companies either as solicitors, adjusters, attorneys, or managers, so that the employees of insurance companies are the same men who have served the State and are no better. Men under oath and bound to the State to decide controversies according to their duty are more apt to judge justly than when under the employment of one of the parties to a cause, with their employment depending on how they decide and the salary they receive upon the amount they retain from workmen upon whom they sit in judgment. The efforts of casualty companies to convince the public that 25 per cent of injured workmen 'malinger' during the adjustment of causes is an unwarranted effort to prejudice the case in the 'court of public opinion,' and their present efforts to extend the period for which no payments are to be made during disability are conclusive arguments against making them the judges of their own cause. They have recently filled our magazines with warnings against the successful efforts of the German people to care for their workmen through vocational training and social insurance. These systems are satisfactory to the employers of Germany, but are meeting the opposition of American casualty companies, because they are administered without profit for them and they are fearful that the American States will institute the same efficient, economic, and comprehensive schemes in this country on a practical basis, without giving Shylock a chance to take his pound of flesh and the blood from the American people. Montesquieo says, 'Constant experience shows that every man invested with power is apt to abuse it and carry his authority as far as it will go.' Hence companies organized for gain should have no authority to sit in judgment in matters which affect their income. Our parcel post and the Federal compensation law are examples of efficient public service.

"The problem before our commission is that of choosing some plan to distribute the social insurance fund economically and with the best results for the common good. Whether we should select one method or a combination of methods is yet to be determined by our commission and the people of the State. Much will depend on the intelligence and earnestness of our citizenship and much will depend on the lobby employed by financial interests and foreign capital to control the legislature. We have met with this opposition before. The American Association for Labor Legislation is favoring measures to report occupational diseases and injuries. Such a measure was defeated in the last legislature by lobbyists, on the theory that it would give ambulance-chasing lawyers information regarding accidents. Hours of exposure and fatigue increase industrial accidents, yet we met with lobbyists who opposed the reduction of hours of labor for women and children on purely selfish ground, and in that way the undesirable conditions of Indiana have been greatly increased. We trust that the president of the Indiana Bar Association will appoint a committee to assist us in counteracting the baneful influence of lobbyists who put their purse before their patriotism. Mr. Harris and the late John T. Dye have rendered great service to the State by their unselfish labor. I have met with them a number of years before legislative committees working for measures for the common welfare. Having reached the topmost round of their professional ladder they have given the people the benefit of their useful and valuable experience. Mr. Dye will be greatly missed in this constructive work. We trust that the committee appointed will be men of such high character that their service will be for the common good and not for their special clients; that their opinions will be controlled by their conscience, not by their retainers; that we may succeed in having enacted some measure which will reduce industrial calamities, improve the living conditions of workmen and efficiency of our citizenship."

NEW NATIONALISM.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish where gentlemen know what they are going to speak upon they would state the subject when asking unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, my extension of remarks will be to insert in the RECORD brief addresses recently delivered by the governor of the State of Utah and the governor of the State of Colorado at the conference of western governors in Salt Lake City last month upon the subject of new nationalism.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of a very brief quotation from the Textile World Record for July, 1913, showing the differences in prices between American and English grades of cotton yarns.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the tariff. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD I print an article which appeared in the July issue of the Textile World Record, comparing English and American prices for cotton yarn of the finer counts. This tabulation is supplemental to that for cotton yarn of coarse and medium counts, which, on May 23, I caused to be inserted in the RECORD:

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN PRICES FOR COTTON YARN.

The comparison of English and American prices for cotton yarn of coarse and medium counts, which appeared in our May issue, proved to be of great interest to the cotton trade, as it showed differences in values which would be equalized if the House bill became a law. This month we are able to give a similar comparison of prices for the finer counts of yarn. In transmitting the foreign quotations our English correspondent says:

"Quotations for the finer cotton yarns vary considerably according to the quality, and in comparing prices it is necessary also to compare samples. Wishing to obtain a fairly representative statement of current prices, I approached the Bolton Chamber of Commerce, and received from the secretary the quotations below, which indicate the general range of values. Bolton is the center of the fine-spinning industry, and has about 120 mills, with a capital value of probably $60,000,000. There are over 8,000,000 spindles, and they are principally engaged on 50s to 100s twist and 90s to 150s filling."

The following table gives the English quotation mentioned by our correspondent, also with proposed Underwood duty added, and Boston quotations for corresponding counts and grades. The tariff rates are those reported to the Senate by the Finance Committee. English prices have been reduced to cents per pound:

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a brief letter from myself, which accompanied a copy of an essay on the Monroe doctrine, sent to different Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

[Copy of letter sent to Members of Congress.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, July 24, 1913.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I would respectfully present the inclosed document for your careful consideration.

At this time of strain and stress, whether you agree with the author or not, you will surely be interested in his lucid exposition of his views of the matter discussed.

I fear that we are altogether too prone to talk about national duties and national honor in careless terms. We can not afford to set up controverted doctrines to be needlessly fought over. Many a man entitled to life will lose it if we heedlessly and unnecessarily adopt or uphold theories and policies that others feel justified in resenting.

For my part, I would go all lengths to sustain our right—

To name the qualifications for citizenship;

To declare who should own the soil of our country;

To protect the integrity of the race and to avoid the troubles certain to arise by the introduction of those who can not be assimilated.

But the lives of American soldiers should not be sacrificed, the people's treasure should not be wasted, in protecting "the property rights" of those of our citizens who, having gone beyond our borders, have "taken a chance" on the laws and conditions of peoples beyond our control.

As one financially interested in Mexico, inasmuch as I would not jeopardize my own life nor the lives of my sons to protect my property, I would be a coward and a murderer if I should send any of my countrymen to death in behalf of that property.

Yours, truly,

WILLIAM KENT.

MAINE MEMORIAL.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the address of former President Taft and others delivered recently at the Maine Memorial in New York, all being patriotic addresses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I asked unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting several addresses delivered at the unveiling of the National Maine Monument in Central Park, New York City, on Memorial Day, May 30, 1913. All of these addresses are filled with patriotic thought and devotion to country, as well as impressing upon us our debt to the heroes of our Nation, living and dead.

The addresses referred to are those of former President Taft; Secretary of the Navy Daniels; Gov. Sulzer, of New York; Gov. Haines, of Maine; Señor Don Manuel de la Vega y Calderon, Cuban chargé d'affaires and president of the Cuban commission sent to the unveiling ceremonies; Chauncey W. Herrick, department commander of New York State, United Spanish War Veterans; Hon. William R. Hearst, of New York; and Maurice Simmons, New York City, past commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans, and are as follows:

FORMER PRESIDENT TAFT.

The monument we dedicate to-day is an enduring witness of three facts. The first is the gratitude that our country feels toward the men who went down on the Maine, in that they gave up their lives in her service. The second is the birth of a new people and the founding of a new nation through our disinterested aid and sacrifice. The third is the expansion of this Nation into a wider sphere of world usefulness and greater responsibility among the nations than ever before in its history.

The honored dead, to whom this is an appropriate memorial, were a heavy part of the cost to the country of our war with Spain. This is not to charge responsibility to the Spanish Government for the explosion of the Maine, except in so far as it may be said to be responsible for the protection of the warships of a friendly power in its own harbor. The careful report of two boards of sworn experts, however, leave no doubt that the explosion was due to an outside cause and to a hostile hand. The tense feeling between the two nations, growing out of the intolerable conditions in Cuba, intolerable to her people and intolerable to her neighbors, needed only the explosion of the Maine, under the conditions which existed, to render war inevitable; and the candid and careful historian must always date the coming of the Spanish-American War from the death of the brave jack-tars whose souls were hurried into the presence of their Maker on that night of the 15th of February in Habana Harbor 15 years ago. They were buried to destruction without the inspiration of anticipated battle or hoped-for victory, but they were on duty when they went down; they were wearing the uniform of their beloved country, and they have a right to a place in that roll of naval heroes whose steadfastness and courage have given the American Navy the high place it has in history among the navies of the world.

We have raised the Maine from the mud bottom of Habana Harbor and have given her wreck honorable burial in the blue waves of the Tropic seas. The mortal remains of those who gave the vessel her personality and made her a living weapon for the protection of national honor and vital interest we have brought from Cuba and have placed in the sacred soil of Arlington. We halted the wheels of Government and stayed the hum of industry in order that by an appropriate ceremony of interment we might officially recognize the debt we owed to those who yielded all they had and all they were for the Nation. We clothed the ceremony with all the solemnity of the honors of war, and we thus expressed the deep and lasting gratitude of a Nation to her martyred defenders.

We are now gathered upon this Memorial Day of the year, devoted by Nation and State law and custom to renewing the memories of all who have died for us in all our wars, here to dedicate a monument that shall stand in this metropolis of the country and in one of the greatest and busiest marts of the world, and shall recall men from the thoughts of their daily vocations and of their selfish interests to a contemplation of the sacrifices necessary from time to time on the part of some of their fellows that the Nation may live and that the march of human progress may go on. If a conviction of a Nation's gratitude, enforced in this beautiful sculpture of marble and bronze, with its eloquent allegory, shall inspire in others in times of future national need a willingness to make the same supreme sacrifice, one high purpose that prompted the erection of this monument will have been achieved.

Out of the Spanish War came the Republic of Cuba. Unlike most wars in history, it was fought by us without purpose or thought of aggrandizement. It was begun without a single selfish instinct, and was prompted by motives most humane. Its formal declaration was accompanied by a self-denying ordinance as to our future relation to Cuba, and sacredly has the pledge of that ordinance been maintained. Through the Platt amendment in our treaty with the new Republic we retain an influence that has never been exerted and will never be exerted save for the good of the people of that beautiful island. For two years we labored and expended such effort to frame the Cuban Republic. We fulfilled our trust and installed the new government. When in her subsequent course the ugly head of revolution reared itself we intervened again, and with our Army and Navy stayed the internecine strife and composed the differences that threatened again to drench the island in blood. As the Republic stumbled and almost fell, we helped her with our friendly arm and steadied her on her way to greater stability and the greater individual happiness of her people.

During the last year there has occurred in the island a national election, the result of which should legally transfer the political power in the Republic from one party to the other. Prophecies of impending danger, due to a change in administration, have been many, and they found their justification in experiences of the past, but the Cuban people have successfully met the test. One President has peacefully laid down his office and given it over to his successor, the threatened danger has been past, and the peaceful transfer of control of the State from one party to another strengthens hope for its stability. Long life to the Cuban Republic! May her people learn well the lesson which they must learn if their Government is to be a blessing to them, the lesson of self-restraint and of respect for the limitations of a constitution that they have imposed upon themselves, with a clear understanding that no popular government can live in which the majority does not respect in full the rights of the minority and the individual.

Cuba is our foster child. As she errs in the childhood and youth of her national life, we must bear with her and aid her. Again and again it has been said, but without a thought of the new responsibilities and the new burdens we would have to assume and the plighted faith we would have to break, that if Cuba again stumbles and the United States is obliged to intervene to prevent a fratricidal war and great disaster, then we must end the Republic and take over the island within our jurisdiction and protection. This is said without regard for our parental relation to her, our continuing duty to help her, and to be patient with faults that may be expected in her struggle to govern herself. We must hold to a persistent purpose to maintain her as an independent and self-respecting Republic. This monument, a witness, as it is, of the birth into the world of a new nation, made possible by the unselfish sacrifice of the United States, should typify in its enduring character the permanence of the new government, which it is our duty to preserve.

The third fact that this pile commemorates is the awakened consciousness on the part of the people of the United States that they have a new responsibility among the nations of the world that they can not avoid or evade. The isolation that they enjoyed in their separation from Europe and Asia by two oceans did for a century give them a feeling of immunity from the burdens that other nations had to carry and which other nations did carry in the march of human progress and the advance of human civilization; but methods of modern transportation and communication have put this country many days nearer to Europe and Asia than they were in the time of Washington. The wonderful material expansion in the development of this continent between the Atlantic and Pacific, the enormous increase in population, and the corresponding growth in national power have all given us a position among the countries of the world that we must recognize and that we must take with its corresponding responsibilities, whether we would or no. It needed only an episode like that of the Spanish-American War to bring out clearly and in their fullness the changes in our relations to the world and the nations of the world that our wealth, our population, our prosperity, and our national power now impose upon us.

Beginning a short war, with our eyes focused on Cuba, a month had hardly elapsed before we were carried to the uttermost parts of the world 7,000 miles to the west, to assume a guardianship over 7,000,000 people in the Philippine Islands, almost in the Antipodes and a part of Asia, and similarly over a million people in the island of Porto Rico, far on the way east toward European shores. The inevitable trend of international development has shifted responsibility for these two peoples from the shoulders of Spain, representing the monarchical tradition of 10 centuries, to us, who are the embodiment of the spirit of popular government, with national tradition of but one. Despite the acrimonious discussion and the bitter charges made against those who were responsible for our policy in respect to the Philippines and Porto Rico, but to take them over and give their peoples the best government we could, and to continue this policy until with experience and education they become a self-restrained people capable of self-government, when they can choose whether they would be independent of us or related to us by a friendly bond of union, the possession of this new territory thrusts upon us new relations with the rest of the world that we can not escape. It gives us an Asiatic status, brings us close to China, and doubles our interest in the Pacific. If we would exercise the influence that we ought to exercise for good in the world, we must accept responsibilities commensurate with our national strength and opportunities for usefulness. The nations of the world are all closer to each other than they ever were before. Their peoples have greater interest in each other. There is more sympathy between them than there ever was before, and this creates more neighborhood duties. There is an international public opinion slowly growing in its influence, suffering reverses at times, but gathering force in the intervals between war and manifesting itself in the diplomatic negotiations between nations, in the congresses of the powers, and in such movements as prompted The Hague conference and The Hague treaties. Many nations have a community of interest in the humane and civilizing work being done in the name of the Christian religion through the private generosity of church associations in spending money and effort in foreign missions that are the pioneer posts of Christian civilization.

If the Government of the United States conforms to the high ideals of our people and their purposes, it will encourage every movement toward mutual helpfulness among the nations. The American spirit is wanting neither in courage nor in willingness to meet responsibility. They mistake that spirit who would not maintain under present conditions an Army and a Navy practically necessary and adequate to preserve our national prestige and influence among the nations, on the one hand, and who would not, on the other, strive in every possible way to help a struggling people that appeals for our aid and to take all possible means to promote peace among the nations.

This movement marks the time in the life of our Nation when it awakened to the consciousness of its increased power for good in the world and its larger share in the burden of the world's advance.

SECRETARY DANIELS.

In the whole range of patriotic story, as it comes to me in tales of the sea, there is no finer illustration of heroism than that exhibited at the time of the blowing up of the Maine.

The sailors of the Maine in Habana Harbor, who were rudely disturbed from their slumber only to be hurried into what we mistakenly call eternal sleep, were at their places of duty. They surrendered what is most prized by other men in consecrating their lives to the defense of the Nation and its homes. They were the guardians of the lives and property of Americans at home and abroad.

I am thrilled as I see in my mind's eye that picture of a scene in the darkness of that dreadful night of Pvt. William Anthony saluting Capt. Sigsbee and reporting, "The ship is blown up and is sinking, sir." The incident gathers into a focus the Navy's loyalty to the flag.

If the Navy is the strong arm of the Government, the protector of our homes, and the defender of the Treasury, it is because of the harmonious and effective working together of these two types. In this meeting on the deck of the sinking Maine we have them brought together in a moment of glory, in an incident of heroism that has permanently lodged itself in history.

We speak of the heroes of the Maine as if they were dead; but ought we not to feel that they live always by their sacrifices, stimulating us to patriotic achievement?

GOV. SULZER.

Fellow citizens, that monument at the entrance of one of the grandest parks in the world will for years embellish our great city of New York.

For decades it will teach the country the patriotic duty of American citizens. It will be a lesson to the people of our land that no man who dies in the service of his country ever dies in vain.

All honor to the men whose foresight and whose patriotism have made that monument possible. All honor to William Randolph Hearst, to the members of the committee, to the patriotic citizens who contributed to rear that monument.

That monument will be an inspiration to generations yet unborn, because it typifies a great idea, because it stands for a great inspiration.

GOV. HAINES.

The State of Maine joins in these ceremonies, and places her floral tribute on this monument, with New York and the Nation, in memory of the honorable and brave sailors who lost their lives in the cause of human freedom and liberty by the blowing up of the U. S. S. Maine in February, 1898—this great disaster in the United States Navy ever to be remembered as one of the horrors of war.

The people of Maine, whose name this battleship bore, are pleased to assist in commemorating this event in the fullest spirit of respect and patriotism with the other States and the Nation, such as has always upheld the honor of our people and defended the cause of justice and humanity either at home or abroad.

While this monument represents a sacrifice of human life and establishes the event as well as it can be done with metal and stone, yet it is much more securely established in the memory of our people, and will ever stand on the pages of our history to our lasting credit as a self-sacrificing and patriotic people.

Every American feels justly proud of the part we took and the aid we gave to secure a greater freedom and wider opportunity for the people of Cuba through the establishment of a civil government which recognizes the equality of man; that it aided in the establishment of another democratic Republic on the Western Hemisphere.

And we can further rejoice to-day in the fact that our young sister Republic is so nobly sustaining herself as another "Land of the free and home of the brave," wherein the lives of all men are respected and made more secure. May the example of the history which this monument represents so beautifully forever stand as an encouragement to all people throughout the world in their struggles for a larger measure of right and justice and a greater safety of human life.

SEÑOR DON MANUEL DE LA VEGA Y CALDERON.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, having been designated by my Government as president of the Cuban commission to attend the Maine memorial and the unveiling of the monument to the heroes of the Maine and the brave soldiers and sailors who died in the Spanish-American War, I am indeed glad of the opportunity of saying a few words on a subject so near to my heart.

In this same hospitable city, over 40 years ago, the remains of one of our great patriots, Francisco Vicente Aguilera, were laid in state in the city hall of New York at a time when my countrymen were struggling to obtain that which was then only an ideal. To-day we assemble here, the diplomatic representatives of the Cuban Government, the representatives of our Congress, of our sailors and soldiers, a delegation which represents this ideal now realized, to render tribute to those heroes that have taken so important a part in the birth of the Republic of Cuba.

Our presence here to-day on this memorable occasion carries with it the fervent and heartfelt sympathy of the President and people of Cuba to those martyrs to whom this monument is dedicated. Although they rest in peace, their remembrance will always live in the heart of every Cuban patriot.

And as our floral offering is placed by my Government on the monument unveiled to the sacred memory, let us hope that the remembrance of these solemn ceremonies will be the means of extending more and more the friendship and cordial relations that happily bind our respective countries.

CHAUNCEY W. HERRICK.

Gen. Wilson, ladies and gentlemen, it is fitting that this sacred day should be chosen to dedicate the National Maine Memorial Monument.

Forty-five years ago Gen. John A. Logan, in an order to the Grand Army of the Republic, set apart Memorial Day to "honor the brave men who gave themselves as a living sacrifice on the altar of freedom."

Year after year the beautiful custom of decorating the graves of our honored dead has been followed, until perhaps no other holiday serves so distinctly the purpose for which it was created.

It is therefore particularly appropriate that the United Spanish War Veterans, coming from various cemeteries where the morning has been spent in decorating the graves of our silent comrades, should assemble to take part in these ceremonies.

In its broader sense this monument is a tribute to every man who has followed the flag, but it is specifically dedicated to those shipmates of ours, both living and dead, who so splendidly upheld the traditions of the service when the Maine was destroyed.

It is easy to volunteer when the whole country is aflame with patriotism, but these men had enlisted in time of peace and were doing just what our soldiers, sailors, and marines are doing to-day—standing watch so that if trouble does come they can bear the brunt of it until our Volunteers can be trained and equipped to help.

Only by such a system could this country maintain its position with so small an armed force, and only by this force being composed of men of the character and high personnel that distinguishes the united service could we feel that our country and our national honor were being safely guarded.

The example of these shipmates of ours ought to be an inspiration to every one of us, no matter what his station or position in life may be. They gave their lives, not that Cuba might be free, not in a spectacular charge with the eyes of the world upon them, but quietly and simply because it came in their day's work.

Few have done as much, and no man can do more.

WILLIAM R. HEARST.

My friends, many of the speakers, in the goodness of their hearts, have given more credit to the committee, of which I am a minor member, than we think we deserve. The committee has done its best, but it has not played a predominant part in the erection of this monument.

The monument was designed by the architect, Mr. M. Van Buren Magonigle, and the sculptor, Mr. Attilio Piccirilli; it was passed upon by the art commission; the city of New York gave it this magnificent site; and the people of the United States erected it by popular subscription.

To my mind the important and significant fact in connection with this memorial is that it was erected by the whole people, for I think that in the defense and development of our country the one thing next in importance to heroism and devotion is appreciation of heroism and devotion by all the people.

We can not all be heroes, but we can all be grateful for heroism. We are not all privileged to lay down our lives in the service of our country, but we can all love and honor and remember the men who have made such splendid sacrifices.

And in remembering heroes dead, let us not forget heroes living. There are as many men in the Army and Navy to-day ready to sacrifice their lives for their country as ever there have been in the whole history of the Nation.

It is our duty as citizens to see that such sacrifices shall not be needless and fruitless. It is our duty as citizens to supply sufficient ships and guns in order that these heroes may have the means and munitions for our defense and in order that their devotion may not be either unappreciated or unavailing.

When we have done this, our duty as citizens, we will deserve to stand with the citizens to whom Abraham Lincoln referred when he wrote:

"All honor to the sailor and soldier everywhere who bravely bears his country's cause. All honor, also, to the citizen who cares for his brother in the field and serves, as best he can, the selfsame cause. Honor to him only less than to him who braves, for the common good, the storms of heaven and the storms of battle.

MAURICE SIMMONS.

To-day, as spring in unwonted sackcloth and ashes strews her freshest flowers over the graves of the heroic dead, let her linger here to sanctify the sod on which is dedicated this monument to the martyrs of the Maine. Green be their memory as the budding branches, and verdant still to the judgment day. No siren note of bugle beckoned them to the fray. The delirious god of battle never fevered their veins. Yet, their fame is as deathless as Thermopylae, and the glory of their going the heritage of all mankind.

Shall we recall the hour of their doom? Lotus fingered, the southern nighttime presses their eyelids as they enter the grotto of dreams. Suddenly the stillness is cleft by the flashing flames of hell. We see eyes rudely opened for an instant and then closed forever by the merciful seal of eternity. Silently they descend the swift, rushing waters—each humble sailor an ambassador of the Republic.

Boston Massacre, Harpers Ferry, Destruction of the Maine—what a holy trinity of sacrifice! Each in God's given hour wrought the salvation of a people. The blood of the innocents spilled on the old Kings Highway fertilized the garden of liberty, and over their sacred bones rose the sanctuary of the Revolutionary Republic. From the nerveless hands of John Brown, as he dangled on a Virginian scaffold, leaped the lightnings of the Lord, crumbling into the dust the feudal empire of the South and shattering the shackles on the limbs of the bondman. Bursting their slimy cerements in Habana harbor, these canonized dead summoned the angel of wrath, who, with flaming sword, drove the Spaniard from the gates of the Cuban paradise and lifted the lowly from the dust to the seats of the mighty. By the blood of the martyr is purchased the redemption of the race.

Yonder stands the chiseled effigy of the Italian superman whose courage brought a continent into being. Separated by four centuries, he and they whom we are here gathered to commemorate were actors in the same drama of destiny. What unconscious purpose has brought these classic shafts into such significant proximity? His sacrifices cradled the advent of Spanish dominion in America; their martyrdom confined its hopes on our hemisphere.

It is meet that we crown this spot with the incarnate bronze and memorial marble. Long may this storied structure nestle on the breast of the mother city. In our cosmopolis, watered by all the streams of earth, let us lift high this shaft to the memory of the men the dying spark of whose lives kindled a crusade for humanity. The deck they trod was the microcosm of the many-fibered Republic. The uncowed, square-jawed Briton, the patient, flaxen-haired Teuton, the generous, blue-eyed Celt, the daring, mystic Russ, the impulsive, chivalrous Frank, the rugged, fate-wrestling Norseman, all in the melting pot of the Maine were fused into the Yankee man-of-warsman. Here, in the city where the nations have pitched their tents, let us consecrate this shrine as a pledge and a prophecy to the generations yet unborn.

SANITATION IN PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. WALTERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article on sanitation in the Philippine Islands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTERS. Mr. Speaker, the most striking feature of American occupancy of the Philippine Islands is the work performed by the medical representatives of our Army and the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service. The article printed herewith gives a most succinct summary of that work:

[Reprinted from the Journal of Race Development, vol. 3, No. 2, October, 1912.]

SANITATION IN THE PHILIPPINES.

WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO ITS EFFECT UPON OTHER TROPICAL COUNTRIES.

[By Victor G. Heiser, M. D., D. Sc., director of health for the Philippine Islands, passed assistant surgeon, Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service.]

It is now practically 10 years since the health organization under the American civil régime in the Philippines was put in operation, and it may not be amiss to review some of the results that have been accomplished during that decade. It is proper to state, however, that prior to the formation of civil government a board of health was organized under Army General Orders No. 15, under the authority of which Army officers did good work and made an excellent beginning in reducing the ravages of the diseases which they found so abundantly present on every hand. This early work was largely concerned with protecting the health of the troops and mostly confined to the city of Manila. When the civil health régime began, in addition to the deplorable sanitary conditions resulting from centuries of neglect, it found itself confronted with a severe outbreak of plague in Manila and in a number of the Provinces. To add further to its labors, it had scarcely opened its offices before one of the severest epidemics of cholera that has been known in modern times had its beginning.

Forty thousand persons were dying annually from smallpox, while the number of deaths from beriberi in jails and other public institutions was frightful. With the exception of the water system in the city of Manila there was not a reservoir, pipe line, or artesian well for the 7,200,000 people of the entire archipelago, and even the water for the city of Manila was known to be grossly polluted. The dead were buried in a most haphazard manner, it being a not infrequent experience to find as many as four or five interred in a grave. The bones of those who had died but a few months before were often ruthlessly cast out to bleach in the sun, in order to make room for a more recent death. The city of Manila, which had a population of over 200,000, had no sewer system, and foul human discharges found their way directly into the esteros, or canals, of which there are some 23 miles. The water in these was frequently stirred up by the lighters and other craft which are used so extensively in Manila for transporting cargo, with the result that nauseous gases were constantly being liberated.

There was no food law and the vilest class of food products was shipped into the country without let or hindrance. Amebic and other forms of dysentery soon affected the troops and others who had come to the Philippines to aid in governmental work. Subsequent experience has shown that these same diseases were responsible literally for thousands of deaths annually among the Filipinos. There was no hospital in the entire islands which had modern surgical equipment, and persons died on every hand of disease which could have been easily relieved by very simple medical procedures. It was not uncommon to find many persons horribly deformed by the scars which resulted from injuries or ulcers that could have been easily cured if skilled attention and facilities had been available at the time when they had their beginning. There were some 300,000 wild people living in a primitive state, among whom no attempt had been made to furnish medical relief. The prisons throughout the Islands were indescribably filthy and neglected.

In the days prior to American control the maritime quarantine was conducted upon a basis of graft rather than upon merit, with the inevitable result that an outbreak of any of the dangerous, communicable diseases, like plague, cholera, or smallpox, in the nearby foreign countries meant the early introduction of the disease into the Philippines. There was no proper inspection of animals before slaughter, and suitable slaughterhouses, where this work could have been done, were conspicuous by their absence. More than 5,000 lepers were at large throughout the Philippine Islands. A few hundred were taken care of as objects of charity, but there was no attempt made to segregate lepers with the view of avoiding the danger of infection to others or of lessening the ravages of this disease. Malaria prevailed in hundreds of towns in the Philippines, without quinine being available to combat it. It was no infrequent experience to find imitation quinine pills being sold at fabulous prices in the stricken districts, and the poor populace had no one to whom to apply with the hope of receiving any relief from this most intolerable condition. Sections of Manila, having a population of from 5,000 to 25,000, were built up with houses so closely crowded together that there was no room for streets or alleys, and egress from these sections had in many instances to be made by the residents crawling under one another's houses. Manila is located on a tidal flat, and formerly at high tide about half of the city was inundated. As this flat land consisted of soft, oozy mud the conditions can be better imagined than described.

There was no governmental provision for the insane, and it was no uncommon sight to see these unfortunates tied to a stake, under a house or in a yard, with a dog chain, and it often happened that during fires, which are so frequent in towns built of nipa, these unfortunates were burned because no one thought to release them. Foods and perishable provisions were sold under most filthy conditions, the common practice being to sell them from the ground, so that the dust and dirt of everyone who came to see was soon intimately mixed with the food that was on sale. There were no restrictions enforced in the construction of buildings, with the usual result so frequently seen in oriental countries—small, dark interiors, with practically no light and air, abounded everywhere. It was a frequent occurrence to find small rooms, often no larger than 8 by 10 by 8 feet, in which from six to eight persons were sleeping. Street cleaning was most indifferently carried on, with the result that large quantities of garbage and other filth accumulated in back yards and upon the streets. Tuberculosis was responsible each year for perhaps another 50,000 deaths throughout the archipelago. No effort whatsoever was made to teach the people how to deal with this scourge.

MAGNITUDE OF THE PROBLEM.

The task which confronted the American sanitarian seemed indeed impossible of accomplishment. With a population that was fully satisfied with the conditions as they were and not disposed to have any portion of the taxes which were being collected from them used for sanitary purposes, and with the determination to resist any change in their personal habits and the conditions which surrounded them, it must be admitted that the prospects for bringing about a better state of things were not very alluring, especially as the task had to be accomplished with an amount allotted to the board of health derived from revenues collected in the Philippines. In addition, the foreign medical men of the East, good-naturedly and sometimes not good-naturedly, ridiculed the efforts to bring about a better state of affairs. It was pointed out that in foreign colonies it was customary to take such steps as would safeguard the health of the persons who came from Europe to govern or to do business, and that the wisest policy was to let the masses live as they would; that it was impossible to reform the oriental, and that it was effort wasted that could be used more profitably in other directions. Observation of the work done by Europeans in far eastern cities showed that this practice was almost universally in force.

RESULTS OBTAINED.

But the American sanitarian was not daunted by these obstacles and set to work resolutely. His first large task was to combat the severe outbreak of cholera which has already been mentioned. It was then learned that the passive resistance of the oriental is a very much more subtle and difficult force to overcome than the active opposition which is so frequently encountered in the Temperate Zone.

On the whole, it may be said that the campaign waged against cholera in the beginning was not as successful as could have been hoped for, but the experience gained paved the way for attacking future outbreaks with considerably more success. It was soon learned that there was nothing to be gained by using actual force. The opposition which was engendered caused far more difficulty than the good which was accomplished in an individual case in which it was used.

The early efforts to combat plague resulted in similar lack of success. With this disease not only Filipinos, but the Chinese, had to be dealt with, and the efforts to bring the celestials to the ways of twentieth century hygiene would oftentimes have been ludicrous had the results not been so fatal. The lack of success of these efforts soon made it apparent that before much could be accomplished in the islands a set of laws would have to be prepared in which considerable deference should be given to local prejudices; that frequently a compromise would have to be accepted in order to gain the adherence of Filipinos who had large influence with their people. In other words, it became apparent that the sanitary regeneration of the Philippine Islands had to be brought about, not in spite of the Filipino people, but with their assistance. One of the first steps was to organize some 300 boards of health throughout the islands, with Filipinos in charge in the majority of instances. In many cases the officials who composed these boards were brought to Manila and given a course of instruction in modern sanitation and hygiene, and to their credit it must be said that after they began to learn the whys and wherefores of things much cooperation and assistance was obtained from them. It was but natural that a people should resist measures which they in their inmost hearts believed were being enforced by the governing power for the express purpose of making them miserable, unhappy, and uncomfortable. As soon as the better class of Filipinos observed, however, that no cases of cholera occurred among the Americans who drank water that had been boiled and ate only food that had been cooked and was served hot, this simple plan had many imitators, and much of the success that was obtained in later cholera campaigns may be attributed to the measures which the Filipino people themselves invoked.

During the early years of the existence of the board of health plans were made for the vaccination of the people of the entire archipelago. This was first attempted by permitting the local Filipino health authorities to take charge and vaccinate the persons in their immediate districts, but not much success followed these efforts. It was found that in most instances the health officer did not appreciate the necessity and importance of vaccinating every individual in a community. Often his friends or those whom he considered had political or other influence which they might use to his disadvantage were permitted to go unvaccinated. The result was that so long as soil remained for the implantation of smallpox contagion the disease continued to exist. When it was demonstrated to the Filipinos that this plan would not work, partially with their assistance another plan was tried. It consisted in having an American physician, with some 20 or 30 vaccinators, begin at one border of a Province and literally march across it, only going forward when all of those who were behind had been vaccinated. Upon the completion of the first work the expected result became a reality. In Provinces that before vaccination had some 2,000 to 3,000 deaths annually from smallpox there was not a single death or even a single case of this disease after its completion. The success of this plan was so overwhelming that the insistence for doing it by the former plan was largely withdrawn, with the result that all portions of the Philippine Islands to which it was possible to ship vaccine in a potent condition have now been almost entirely freed of smallpox. In a Province which has been vaccinated it is a unique sight to see anyone to-day who has any pits of smallpox received since the vaccination was completed. In the six Provinces which immediately surround Manila, where formerly there had been probably for centuries 6,000 deaths annually from smallpox, there was not a single death from that disease in the year following the completion of the vaccination, nor have there been any deaths since that time among persons who were vaccinated in those Provinces. This work is still going on, and the net result is that there are now at least 30,000 less deaths annually than was the case before this work was begun.

Coincident with this work the island of Culion, which is roughly 20 by 10 miles, and, with the necessary deductions for indentations, has an area of a bout 150 square miles, was set aside for a leper colony. The property rights of such residents as were found on the island were purchased and the people removed to the near-by island of Busuanga. The construction of a modern town was begun, and when this had proceeded sufficiently far, the collection and transfer of lepers to Culion was commenced. By 1908 at least one collection of lepers had been made all over the archipelago, and in many Provinces a number of collections had been made, but there were necessarily quite a number who escaped the early collections and went into hiding, and also a considerable number who were in the incubation period of the disease from an infection which they had probably received through their association with cases of leprosy, so that, up to the present time, cases still come to notice, and these, as soon as discovered, are isolated and, at frequent intervals during each year, are transferred to Culion. Although it is entirely too early to furnish data with regard to this matter, it is roughly estimated that there were formerly at least 1,200 new cases of leprosy contracted each year, and it is believed that now, with the lessened opportunities for infection, this number has already been decreased one-half. If these estimates are correct, it means that at least 600 persons are being saved annually from contracting this most loathsome disease; that this number remain as useful members of society instead of being a burden upon the public during the remainder of their existence. The leper town of Culion, like towns in the United States, is constantly being improved and is assuming a more and more modern aspect. Houses of reenforced concrete are being built. A modern water and sewer system have been installed. A commodious hospital, with a capacity of 250 beds, where the acutely ill may be taken care of, has been provided, and there are constantly on duty the necessary doctors and nurses. The leper community has been made self-governing. No guards of any kind are employed. The people elect their own officials and govern themselves by laws which they make, so that not only are the people of the Philippine Islands relieved of the danger and undesirability of having lepers among them in places where they are constantly liable to convey the disease to healthy persons, but, on the other hand, the leper himself is no longer made to feel that he is an outcast. He has a place which he can call his home, where he is welcome and where he can indulge in most of those pursuits of human liberty which are held as necessary attributes to happiness.

In Manila a modern water system has been constructed at a cost of approximately $2,000,000, for which the water is now obtained from an uninhabited watershed. This improvement has already resulted in a reduction of approximately 800 deaths annually in Manila from the gastro-intestinal diseases. The quantity of water and the pressure has also been greatly increased, so that it is now available in all sections of the city, whereas heretofore it was limited to certain sections, and, unless storage tanks were placed on the roofs, water was not available above the first floor. At the cost of another $2,000,000 a modern sewer system was provided. This is one of the most modern of its kind and has been in very satisfactory operation for four years. The filthy latrine and cesspool are now rapidly giving way to the modern flush closet. Twenty-three miles of esteros have been cleaned of their accumulation of centuries, and, in most instances, are clean water courses and no longer canals for the reception of sewage. Hundreds of artesian wells have been bored throughout the islands, and work is under way for the installation of many hundreds of others. Wherever the water from an approved well has been exclusively used by a community, the death rate has often dropped 50 per 1,000. In other words, in a town of, for instance, 3,000 inhabitants there are now 150 less deaths annually than occurred before pure drinking water was furnished.

The jails throughout the islands have been cleansed and sanitary equipment installed. The loathsome skin diseases from which the prisoners suffered were cured, and the conditions have been made such that their contraction in the future is extremely unlikely.

Beriberi, which in former days caused frightful mortality in jails and other public institutions, and was responsible for 5,000 deaths annually in the archipelago, is now being rapidly reduced, owing to discoveries which were largely worked out in the Philippine Islands. It might also not be amiss to state, in passing, that it is estimated that there are at least 100,000 deaths from beriberi throughout the Orient each year, and through the efforts of the Far Eastern Association of Tropical Medicine, which had its origin and birth in Manila, the prospects are fair for united governmental action being taken with the view of greatly reducing the ravages of this disease, or perhaps of stamping it out altogether.

The evidence is almost conclusive that beriberi in the Orient occurs mostly among persons whose staple article of diet is white rice, which means rice from which the outer portion, or cortical layer, has been removed. Numerous experiments have shown that the disease is due to the fact that an essential element necessary to the proper nutrition of the human being is lacking from rice from which the outer portion has been removed. When rice is used as a staple article of diet there is no opportunity to obtain this lacking constituent from other foods. Europeans, for instance, seldom contract beriberi, because they use a diversified diet. Exactly what this missing substance on the outside of the grain is has not yet been definitely ascertained, but it has been repeatedly shown that if persons suffering from beriberi are given the outer portion of the rice grain, or, in other words, rice polishings, they soon recover from this disease unless they were hopelessly ill at the time treatment was begun.

Manila's streets are now swept daily, and it is the frequent comment of travelers that it is one of the cleanest cities of the world. Garbage is collected every night, so that there is no opportunity for the accumulation of filth of this kind, as was formerly the case. This condition does not apply to Manila alone, but to many of the towns of the Provinces.

Rules for avoiding cholera have been put into such simple form that it has been possible to teach them in the schools throughout the islands, and the pupils are now able to repeat them like a catechism. This campaign has not only benefited the pupils who were directly taught the means whereby cholera may be avoided, but their elders have been appreciably influenced by the example which their children have set them. It is now of frequent occurrence that when cholera makes its appearance in a community a request is immediately sent to the central government at Manila for the services of an expert who can advise the people of the stricken town as to the measures which should be invoked to bring the outbreak to a speedy close.

Plague has been completely extirpated, and no cases of this disease have occurred in the Philippines since April, 1906. Cholera has also been absent now for nearly a year, and even during the preceding year the number of cases was insignificant when compared with those which formerly occurred.

By making available better drinking water, and by active educational propaganda, the spread of amebic dysentery has been greatly reduced.

Cemeteries, properly laid out, have now been provided throughout the length and breadth of the island. All remains which are not cremated are decently interred, one in a grave, 3 feet under the ground.

Streets and alleys have been cut through the congested districts of Manila, so that the houses can now be approached by a street or alley. The improvement in the health of the people where this has been done can scarcely be estimated. In the event of the appearance of a dangerous communicable disease, it is possible to reach it promptly and remove cases to a modern "dangerous communicable disease" hospital, and thereby greatly reduce the danger of the spread of such diseases. Garbage carts now enter these sections daily, and in consequence filth no longer accumulates. A noteworthy incident in connection with the improved living conditions in these areas was the pride which the inhabitants themselves took in their new surroundings.

A modern insane hospital has been constructed in Manila, where there is room for at least all of the cases that are urgently in need of care. A large general hospital, with a capacity of 350 beds, has likewise been constructed in Manila. This is unquestionably the most modern and best equipped hospital in the Eastern Hemisphere, and will compare favorably with the most modern hospitals in Europe and America. Already patients are being treated at the rate of 80,000 a year in the out-patient clinic, which means that thousands upon thousands are receiving relief and are freed from pain, among whom only agony and distress existed heretofore.

A nursing school, with over 300 young Filipino men and women students, is in successful operation, and has already graduated two classes, the members of which have passed civil-service examinations and received grades which compare favorably with those received by American nurses. A medical school, with modern laboratories and the latest equipment for teaching by instructors who are specialists in their respective branches, was established six years ago, and has already graduated doctors from its five-years course. The entrance requirements, course of study, and practical hospital training are higher than the average in the United States. A modern hospital has been constructed in the very heart and center of the wild man's country, and with the assistance of the ministrations of the doctor and the nurse these people are being rapidly brought from a head-hunting, savage state to the paths of civilization, and are rapidly becoming useful, productive people.

A campaign against tuberculosis has been organized; camps for the treatment of incipient cases have been constructed at various places; many dispensaries have been opened; a hospital for incipient cases provided at Baguio and a hospital for chronic cases at Manila. A campaign of education has been waged on every hand; the aid of moving-picture films has been utilized; in short, everything is being done that is customary in enlightened communities of Europe and America.

INFLUENCE ON OTHER COUNTRIES.

The influence which this work has had upon other colonizing powers in the Orient it is almost impossible to estimate at this time. During the past four years representative sanitarians and others from Japan, China, Hongkong, Indo-China, the Straits Settlements, Java, India, the Federated Malay States, Australia, Ceylon, Siam, and other countries have come to the Philippine Islands for the purpose of studying the methods by which the results in the Philippines were brought about, with the view of having their Governments pass upon the question as to whether similar measures should not be introduced in their own countries. Many of these countries would perhaps resent having it stated that many of their sanitary reforms which they have brought about in the past few years were due to the example which had been set in the Philippines. Nevertheless, it can scarcely be gainsaid that the work of the United States in the Philippines must have been a very important factor in stimulating other countries to attempt similar measures. The success which has already been had by the introduction of sanitary methods has had a great influence in paving the way to the introduction of additional reforms. The recently organized Chinese Republic is making a noble effort to bring about the introduction of similar sanitary measures in China. With the view of having intelligent criticism passed upon that which they have done, a sanitary official from the Philippines was invited to come to China in order to suggest and advise them further with regard to their plans.

Many of the countries of the Orient no doubt feel themselves compelled to join the van of modern sanitation because public opinion, which is being slowly crystallized throughout the world, demands it more and more, as the results which America has accomplished in the Philippines become more widely known. Before the lepers of the Philippine Islands were segregated no country of the entire Orient, with the possible exception of Australia, had made any plans looking toward segregating the lepers found among the native peoples, whereas to-day at least three countries are arranging for this step, and contemplate accomplishing it in accordance with the plans and model which were used in the Philippine Islands.

At a conference which was held this year in Hongkong agreements have been reached among the oriental countries to impose similar quarantine restrictions. The desire to protect themselves was largely due to the success which has followed the quarantine measures which were enforced in the Philippine Islands. It is generally conceded in other oriental countries that the medical literature produced in the Philippine Islands is more voluminous and has a greater scientific value than that of all the other countries combined. These writings have also had an important influence in molding opinion with regard to medical and sanitary matters of other portions of the Orient.

The successful results in stamping out mosquitoes achieved in Panama and in many sections of the Philippines have been a great stimulus to other countries in carrying out similar work. No doubt the day is not far distant when the number of deaths from diseases which are conveyed by mosquitoes will be greatly reduced in many of the lands of the Orient, and this day is being greatly hastened by the example furnished by America.

Instead of viewing the medical men of the Philippines with suspicion, their medical brethren in other countries now meet them in full fraternity, and the effect that this has had in promoting a better understanding and the influence for progress can scarcely be estimated. The indirect effect of this has been excellent, because before America's advent into the Orient there was no fraternizing between the countries. Each remained within its own little sphere, and in many instances there was much wasted labor and effort expended in solving problems that had already been successfully solved in other countries. By the free interchange of ideas which now takes place the knowledge gained in one country is available in a very short time in others.

The fact that the traveler can now go in safety to sections in the Tropics which meant almost sure death heretofore and that commercial enterprises can now be profitably carried on where disease among laborers made it impracticable formerly is largely due to the efforts of the American sanitarian in Panama, Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines.

BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an able and eloquent address delivered by our colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. MOORE, at the anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DIRECT ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from Hon. Ernest Lister, governor of the State of Washington, and a bill introduced into this House, both in reference to the method of electing United States Senators under the new constitutional amendment where the State statutes do not provide for that method.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course I have no objection to printing the remarks of the governor of Washington, but is this a bill that is pending in the House?

Mr. BRYAN. It is H. R. 3379, introduced by myself sometime ago.

Mr. MANN. It has never been customary to print in the RECORD bills pending in the House unless it be in connection with the consideration of a bill. Is this a very long bill?

Mr. BRYAN. It is a very brief bill amounting to about 21 lines.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object to that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the fact that one of the distinguished gentlemen on that side of the House asked leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD some time ago, and printed all the bills which he had introduced in Congress in the RECORD. It seems to me that policy was wrong and ought to be objected to by both sides of the House.

Mr. MANN. I do not know to whom the gentleman from Colorado has reference, but whoever did that ought not to have done it. It is not good practice to print bills in the RECORD unless for some particular purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Of course it is not a good practice.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman from Colorado permit an interruption?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman will state to the House that it has not anything to do with anyone standing on the floor now? In other words, I am not the one referred to?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It was one of the gentlemen from Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Following are the letter and the bill referred to:

STATE OF WASHINGTON,
OFFICE OF GOVERNOR,
Olympia, July 24, 1913.

Hon. Wesley L. Jones and Hon. Miles Poindexter, United States Senators; Hon. J. A. Falconer and Hon. J. W. Bryan, Congressmen at Large; Hon. Wm. E. Humphrey, Congressman, first district; Hon. A. E. Johnson, Congressman, second district; Hon. W. L. La Follette, Congressman, third district, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: No action was taken at the last session of the legislature in our State authorizing or providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people. The two-thirds vote of the States was not known at the adjournment of our legislature, this being the reason for the action not having been taken.

I presume a great many other States are in exactly the same condition that is the State of Washington, each desiring not to be under the necessity of calling a special session of the legislature for the purpose of making it possible to elect United States Senators in 1914. Personally, I hope some method can be devised that will enable us to elect our United States Senator in Washington by a direct vote of the people in 1914 without the necessity of calling a special session of our legislature, and in this the great majority of people of the State agree.

I do not know whether or not it will be possible for Congress to pass a law doing away with the necessity of calling a special session. It might be, however, that a law could be passed providing for the selection and election of the next United States Senator in States where action has not already been taken by the legislature along lines followed and under the same conditions that now control in the selection and election of Congressmen.

I am writing this letter to each of our Senators and Congressmen in the hope that it will be possible for the Members of Congress from our State to work with the membership from other States who are in like position with us in this matter, and, if possible, formulate some method obviating the necessity of a special session.

Knowing that your interest in this matter is exactly the same as mine, I trust that this letter from me will be taken in the spirit in which it is sent, and I feel I can assure you if anything can be done it will meet with the approval of the great majority of the people in our State, and I presume that the same condition exists in other States.

Sincerely, yours,
ERNEST LISTER,
Governor.

A bill (H. R. 3379) to provide the method of electing United States Senators where no method is provided by State statute.

Be it enacted, etc., That until the legislatures of the several States provide a method for choosing United States Senators by direct vote and in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, candidates for the office of United States Senator shall have their names printed upon the ballots in primary elections, where there is a State direct primary law, and at general elections in each of the several States next preceding the occurring of a vacancy in the office of United States Senator in the same manner and after the same statutory method as the candidate for governor in each of the several States has his name printed thereon, and the vote on such candidates shall be counted, canvassed, and returned, and certificate of election shall issue to the successful candidate, or candidates, in case there are two Senators to be elected. It being the purpose of this act to apply to the election of United States Senators in each of the several States, until the legislatures shall provide otherwise, the elective system that is now provided in each of the States for the nomination and election of the governor thereof.

SWEET WINES.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the act of 1890.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the act of 1890.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what act the gentleman refers to.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that is the only subject on which the gentleman has not printed remarks?

Mr. RAKER. It relates to the sweet-wine act.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman be for or against the proposition when it gets before the House? How would the gentleman vote on it?

Mr. RAKER. It is a long ways off, and I can not answer the question until I get there.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, before getting permission, might inform us how he is going to vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DIGGS-CAMINETTI CASE.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of the agreement reached by the House by unanimous consent, I offer in behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary a privileged report on House resolution No. 212, and ask that the Clerk read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Rept. No. 39, 63d Cong., 1st sess., House of Representatives.]

UNITED STATES v. FARLEY DREW CAMINETTI AND MAURY DIGGS.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany H. Res. 212):

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the resolution H. Res. 212, submit the following report:

The resolution as drawn by the author is in the following words:

"Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives a copy of his telegram dated May 16, 1913 (more than one month prior to the date when Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, telephoned to the Attorney General in regard to a postponement of the Caminetti case), directing United States Attorney McNab to take no further affirmative action against Diggs and Caminetti under white-slave indictment until further directed by the Attorney General, and also copy of the memorandum placed in the files of the office of the Attorney General in connection with or relating to the sending of such telegram."

The attention of the Attorney General was called to this resolution, as has been done in other like cases. Afterwards, while the committee had the resolution under consideration, the following letter was transmitted to the committee by the Department of Justice:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., July 28, 1913.

Hon. H. D. CLAYTON,
Chairman House Judiciary Committee, House of Representatives.

SIR: The attention of the department has been called to the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives a copy of his telegram dated May 16, 1913, 'more than a month prior to the date when Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, telephoned to the Attorney General in regard to a postponement of the Caminetti case,' directing United States Attorney McNab to take no further affirmative action against Diggs and Caminetti until further directed by the Attorney General, and also copy of memorandum placed in the files of the office of the Attorney General in connection with or relating to the sending of said telegram."

In response to this resolution, I beg leave to herewith inclose a copy of the telegram.

In transmitting the file containing the correspondence in this case, in response to the first resolution, the fact that it did not contain the text of this telegram of May 16 was overlooked. You will observe, however, that this file contained a memorandum by the secretary to the Attorney General which specifically called attention to the fact that such a telegram had been sent. You will observe that the entire substance of the telegram was set out in the opening paragraph of Mr. McNab's response thereto, dated May 21, 1913, which was a part of the file sent to the committee.

I also inclose a copy of the memorandum mentioned in the resolution, as a formal response thereto. This memorandum is contained in the file sent to the committee in response to the first resolution and is also in the printed report of your committee.

The Attorney General is absent from the city.

Respectfully, for the Attorney General,

SAMUEL J. GRAHAM,
Assistant Attorney General.

The telegram and memorandum accompanying the foregoing letter are as follows:

MAY 16, 1913.

MCNAB, United States District Attorney, San Francisco, Cal.:

Please write me fully concerning charges against Caminetti and Diggs, and take no further affirmative action in respect of same until you receive advices from me. Answer.

MCREYNOLDS, Attorney General.

OFFICE OF THE PRIVATE SECRETARY,
May 21, 1913.

The telegram to United States Attorney McNab was sent by the Attorney General, personally, from his hotel on the evening of Friday, May 16.

COLE.

In view of the fact that copies of the papers called for by the resolution have been furnished and are embodied in this report and made a part hereof, your committee is of opinion that the purpose of the resolution has been accomplished, and therefore so report, and recommend that the resolution do lie on the table.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to comply with the views of the committee and make a brief statement as to the form of this resolution before going into the matter of the resolution itself.

This resolution is not in proper form. The proper form would have been to have inserted the words, as a qualification, where the Attorney General is directed to do certain things, "if not incompatible with the public interest." Since I have been a member of the Committee on the Judiciary for some years under the different administrations those words, "if not incompatible with the public interest," have always been inserted in resolutions, either by the authors themselves or by the committee by way of amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman contend that the words "if not incompatible with the public interest" are usually inserted in resolutions addressed to the heads of departments?

Mr. CLAYTON. It is the practice of the Committee on the Judiciary invariably to insert them.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not take up my time in discussing a matter that is immaterial.

Mr. MANN. I think that is so material that I do not desire it to go unchallenged, if the gentleman will permit. Whatever the Committee on the Judiciary may have done since the gentleman has been chairman it certainly has not been the practice of the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. That practice was established by the committee long before I became chairman.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that since I have been a Member of the House it has not been the practice of the House or of the Senate to insert those words in resolutions addressed to the heads of departments, but it has been the practice where a resolution has been addressed to the President.

Mr. CLAYTON. It has been the invariable practice of the Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. Speaker, under the chairman who preceded me during several Congresses.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this resolution is subject to criticism and perhaps would be deprived of its privileged nature by having inserted therein a parenthetical clause beginning with "more," in line 4, and extending down to the word "case," in line 7. It might fall under the rule of condemnation which holds that a "whereas," reciting facts, or a preamble to a resolution reciting facts, destroys the privileged nature of the resolution. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to waste any time upon this immateriality. The committee thought, in view of the action it was going to take, looking to a final disposition of this resolution, that it was not worth while "to stick in the bark" by insisting upon an amendment. So, Mr. Speaker, we come now to the consideration of this resolution. The matter concerned is of such recent occurrence that I deem it hardly necessary to go into all the detailed facts pertaining to this resolution or into its origin, and, I may say, its evolution, into the final form that we have it here to-day.

It will be remembered that on July 2 a resolution covering this Diggs-Caminetti case was reported to the House from the Committee on the Judiciary, and that at the same time a resolution by the same author and of the same nature relating to the so-called Western fuel case, was reported to the House. In the latter case the recommendation of the committee that the resolution do lie on the table was agreed to without dissent. In the other case debate was demanded, and the question of no quorum was raised from time to time. I need not dwell upon that further than to say that afterwards that original resolution 181 went to the table upon motion and was thus disposed of.

Then the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] introduced this resolution (H. Res. 212) touching the same case, but specifying two certain papers that he desired to be forwarded by the Attorney General and which he said had been omitted from the original report made upon the resolution 181. These two papers are, first, the telegram sent by the Attorney General from his hotel to Mr. McNab in California. A former statement as to that telegram of the Attorney General was embodied in McNab's statement and the substance of it is to be found in the printed report; and the second paper, being the memorandum called for by the last resolution, is printed in the former report made on resolution 181.

Hence the committee, in view of the information which has been supplied under resolution 181—all the papers touching the matters, except the copy of the telegram, having been furnished under that resolution, and all the papers called for under this resolution having been supplied to the committee and presented by the committee as a part of its report the committee took the position that the purpose of this resolution having been accomplished, to wit, the production of these papers called for, and recommend that, the purpose of the resolution having been accomplished, the resolution do lie on the table.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the history of the case. As to the merits of the controversy, that subject has been thrashed out over and over again in the public prints, and I do not know that the House has a very lively interest in any discussion of it here to-day; and I do not know that I could give any enlightenment to the House on the subject to-day further than the committee has already done. And in view of the fact that this resolution will go to the table as having accomplished its purpose, I now reserve the rest of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has used 13 minutes and he reserves the rest of his time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for two hours and a half.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Speaker would credit the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] with 40 minutes of that time, to be used after the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] finishes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yields a portion of his time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to take the time of the House now, but I intend to yield one hour to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

While the Caminetti case, in the phase in which it is brought before the House, is one of great interest, yet the House has been having before it in the last few days a more important event than any prosecution could be or even than the failure of any Attorney General could be.

When we desired to obtain some information concerning the Attorney General, and had not obtained all of it, as is now admitted, and desired to have the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] address the House for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that the Attorney General had not transmitted all of the papers in his possession to the Committee on the Judiciary, as he now admits, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], representing, I believe, the home district of the Attorney General, endeavored to prevent, and did successfully prevent, this side of the House from having any opportunity to discuss the subject.

The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was collaborated with by his distinguished colleague [Mr. MCKELLAR] and that side of the House, unnecessarily violating an agreement which had been made by the gentleman in charge of the measure on the other side of the House and myself on this side of the House, with the concurrence of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], as I remember, undertook by gag to prevent a discussion of the matter in the House, or any other discussion which did not meet with the approval of the majority; and for the first time in my service in Congress a minority Member of the House who desired to discuss a measure would have to go to the majority and ask whether the gag was to be applied to him or whether he would have a right to discuss a proposition in the House.

I hope that side of the House has discovered, as apparently it has by the surrender it has made, that no majority in any legislative body in this country can successfully apply the gag to the minority without at least proceeding to other important business. Day in and day out we have adjourned with nothing before the House, and the majority afraid, because the Attorney General and the administration were afraid—afraid to permit discussion and attempting to apply the gag. Well, whenever they do it they will find a healthy and smiling minority over here who will do what they can.

I yield one hour to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized for one hour. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, when the pending matter came up for discussion on this floor on the 15th of June in connection with House resolution No. 181, which called for all of the correspondence and data or memoranda on file in the Attorney General's office in the Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti white-slave cases, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] interposed an objection to the discussion, on the ground that the discussion was intended to embarrass the administration.

In my humble judgment it has been the effort to suppress any discussion of the cases in this House by some of the friends of the administration on this floor that has had a tendency to embarrass the administration. The gentlemen at the head of the present administration might well exclaim in this instance: "The Lord deliver us from our friends." "Embarrass the administration!" Since when have the President and his Cabinet become sacrosanct?

"Embarrass the administration!" Why, the administration has embarrassed itself in this matter. It has had neither the courage nor the candor to deal with the subject as it should have been dealt with. I hope to make that fact perfectly clear as I proceed in this discussion.

Mr. Speaker, it will be a sorry day for the Republic when Members of this House shall be denied the right of frank, free discussion of the conduct of the executive officers of this Government. It has been asserted all too frequently of late years that we are rapidly drifting toward autocracy; indeed, it has been too frequently asserted that already we have arrived at that stage.

When the time shall come that the acts of the heads of the executive departments of this Government can not be freely and fearlessly discussed upon this floor lest we might "embarrass the administration," our vaunted freedom will have perished and in its place complacent obsequiousness will sit enthroned within this Chamber of the representatives of a free people.

Mr. Speaker, both the President of the United States and the Attorney General missed a glorious opportunity in this case. According to the report submitted by the Committee on the Judiciary, the telegram of Mr. McNab to the Attorney General announcing his resignation was received at 9.45 a. m. on the 21st of June. Mr. McNab's resignation was received at the White House nearly two hours later—at 11.40 a. m. The big, patriotic, broad-gauge, high-minded thing to have done under the circumstances would have been to wire the United States attorney at San Francisco to withdraw his resignation; that the telegram of June 18 ordering the postponements was sent under a misapprehension; that a mistake had been made; and that upon further consideration the United States attorney is instructed to proceed in the cases as he had been directed on May 27. That, I say, would have been the big, broad-gauge, high-minded, patriotic thing to have done. And when the Attorney General failed to take that step it would have been the part of wisdom on the part of the Chief Executive to have directed him to take it. The whole country would have approved and applauded his course. It would have been a powerful demonstration of the President's determination to support a public official who was trying zealously, earnestly, courageously, to perform his whole duty, notwithstanding the pressure of powerful corporation influence and the exertion of insidious political pull.

Political pull! political pull!
You are a power most wonderful;
The rich and the poor, the high and the low,
In cities, in towns, and wherever you go
This potential power they all learn to know,
And they work their political pull;
Oh, yes; they exert their political pull!

That an effort was made to exert political pull in the white-slave cases of Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti and in the Western Fuel Co. cases, for conspiracy to defraud the United States, is abundantly evidenced by the documents and papers on file in the cases, either at the Department of Justice here in Washington or in the United States attorney's office in San Francisco. That the political pull did not work is due to the courage, the probity, and the integrity of John L. McNab, formerly United States attorney at San Francisco. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Of course, it is an easy matter to accuse a person who acts according to the dictates of his own conscience of being prompted by ulterior motives in the course he pursues. On Tuesday, the 15th instant, when this matter was up in the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] used this language:

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have always thought, and I think that everybody here in this House and the country believes, that the district attorney in California in sending his sensational telegram was simply burning a little red fire for his own personal and political advantage.

I have seen statements in print to the effect that Mr. McNab sent his resignation to the President because he hoped thereby to secure the nomination for governor of California. Mr. McNab has denied that he is a candidate. I am sorry for those unfortunate individuals who always look for the ulterior motive in every aggressive act of a man's life. They remind me of that individual, referred to by one of the great English literary lights, who never could see any beauty in the Thames River and could only see the dead dogs floating down that stream. I hope to show by the documents that have been submitted by the Attorney General and presented by the Committee on the Judiciary to the House that Mr. McNab's action was prompted by a high sense of duty and a due regard for his personal honor.

On the morning of Sunday, June 22, there appeared in the press of the country the resignation of John L. McNab from the office of United States attorney for the northern district of California. The resignation is as follows:

[Telegram.]

[The White House, Washington, 11.40 a. m., 21st.]

10 WU JM 460 NL

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 20, 1913.

The PRESIDENT, Washington, D. C.:

I have the honor to tender my resignation as United States attorney for the northern district of California, to take effect immediately. I am ordered by the Attorney General, over my protests, to postpone until autumn the trials of Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti, indicted for a hideous crime, which has ruined two respectable homes and shocked the moral sense of the people of California, and this after I have advised the Department of Justice that attempts have been made to corrupt the Government witnesses, and the friends of the defendants are publicly boasting that the wealth and political prominence of the defendants' relatives will procure my hand to be stayed through influence at Washington. In these cases two girls were taken from cultured homes, bullied and frightened, in the face of their protests, into going to a foreign State, were ruined and debauched by the defendants, who abandoned their wives and infants to commit the crime. On receipt of the Attorney General's telegram I prepared my resignation, to take effect at the conclusion of the trial of the Western Fuel directors and the J. C. Wilson stockbroker cases, both of which I had instituted and which I wished to bring to a successful conclusion before I could send my resignation. I received another telegram from the department ordering me to postpone the cases against certain defendants of the Western Fuel Co., and not to try them unless ordered by the department. In bitter humiliation of spirit I am compelled to acknowledge what I have heretofore indignantly refused to believe, namely, that the Department of Justice is yielding to influences which cripple and destroy the usefulness of this office. I can not consent to occupy this position as a mere automaton and have the guilt or innocence of rich and powerful defendants, who have been indicted by unbiased grand juries on overwhelming evidence, determined in Washington on representations on behalf of the defendants without notice to me. I seem unable to convey to the department an understanding of the serious situation in which its action will leave this office. If the department in future is to review the findings of grand juries and nullify their indictments, then this office might as well be abolished, for its functions will have ceased to exist. Neither my private honor nor sense of public duty can permit me thus to destroy the prestige of this office. With profound respect and regret that such step is necessary, I have the honor, in view of my absolute inability to agree with the department, to ask that I be, by wire, immediately relieved from duty in order that the Department of Justice may be permitted to carry out its policy in these cases without further obstruction by me.

JOHN L. MCNAB.

Mr. McNab had also sent a telegram to the Attorney General, which reads as follows:

[Telegram.]

1W. O. 262 N. L. 3 Ex. 167096-8.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 20, 1913.

ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.:

I am in receipt of your two telegrams in which you order me to continue until autumn the cases against Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti, and also postpone indefinitely trial of certain directors of Western Fuel Co., and in which you say you will hereafter determine whether to try certain defendants as heretofore advised. I am profoundly convinced the action taken will destroy the prestige and ruin the usefulness of this office and result in the ultimate escape from punishment of certain of these defendants. I have notified you that it is publicly charged in this State that the prosecution of the Diggs-Caminetti cases would be stopped by appeals to Washington. In the meantime corruption and subornation of perjury will weaken and destroy the cases long before autumn is here. If the Western Fuel defendants are innocent they need not apply to the department for protection, but should welcome the opportunity to present their defense to a jury and assert their innocence. The present grand jury yesterday again voted to indict all the directorate of the Western Fuel Co. With full appreciation of the delicacy of your position in the Caminetti case and with every desire that you shall not be embarrassed I will withdraw from this office therefore by reason of my inability to agree with the department's policy. I am compelled to respectfully tender my resignation to the President this day, and have the honor to ask that you secure if possible its immediate acceptance by wire. I will then have the cases continued as directed.

McNAB,
United States Attorney.
(9.45 a. m. 21st.)

These telegrams contain allegations of a most serious nature. They required serious consideration and a serious answer, if they were to be answered at all; but the same newspapers that carried the telegrams of resignation carried a story from Baltimore, Md., quoting the Attorney General of the United States as having commented upon the resignation in this language:

A Republican district attorney has resigned, and I am shedding no tears.

If the Attorney General made that flippant statement to Mr. McNab's serious charges—and I have never seen any denial from any source whatever—he made an egregious blunder. The day has gone by when any public official, no matter how exalted his station, no matter how great his personal popularity, can whistle down the wind with a supercilious sneer charges of as serious a nature as were contained in Mr. McNab's telegrams of June 21. When I read the thoughtless levity of speech of the Attorney General I concluded immediately that there would be a storm of protest throughout the country. The country demands the rigid enforcement of the white-slave laws, and any effort to impede court trials for its enforcement was bound to meet with protest. I felt that under the circumstances all the facts ought to be presented to the people of the United States, and therefore on June 23 I introduced in the House resolution No. 181, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit to the House of Representatives copies of all correspondence and other papers and memoranda on file in the office of the Attorney General or referred by the President to the Attorney General relating to the prosecution or trial of Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti, or either of them, for violation of the Mann White-Slave Act.

That a storm did break is evidenced by the lengthy and apologetical statements issued from the White House on June 24. These statements gave the administration's version of the case. Chief among the papers issued from the White House and published in the newspapers of the country on June 25 is a statement of the Attorney General, which reads as follows:

JUNE 24, 1913.

The PRESIDENT, The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In view of the somewhat heated and sensational dispatches given to the press by United States Attorney McNab on Saturday, June 21, in connection with his resignation, and the widespread misapprehension which would naturally result therefrom, I desire to lay before you the facts relating to the Caminetti-Diggs case, and the Western Fuel Co. case, to which he refers.

The department was closed on Sunday, June 22, and it was not until yesterday that I had opportunity fully to acquaint myself with the contents of all the files and confer with my assistants. I send you herewith what, I am informed, are the complete files in each case, and specially request that you examine them with particular care.

DIGGS-CAMINETTI CASE.

The earliest paper in the files relating to this case is a "report made by C. Herrington," dated March 26, 1913, the pertinent part of which follows:

"Farley Drew Caminetti, a married man about 27 years of age, residing in Sacramento and connected in some clerical capacity with the State government, in company with Lola Norris, and Maury I. Diggs, a young married man of about the same age, residing in Sacramento, in company with Marsha Warrington (who, like Lola Norris, is a young unmarried girl), about 19 years of age (also the age of the Norris girl), left Sacramento for Reno via Southern Pacific Co. in the early morning of March 10, 1913.

"On arrival at Reno they registered at the Riverside Hotel, Diggs under the name of C. E. Enright and wife, of Los Angeles, and Caminetti under the name of F. F. Ross and wife. They remained there one night, occupying connecting rooms. The next day Diggs, who appears to have furnished all the money, rented a cottage in the outskirts of the city from Real Estate Agents Peck & Sample, of Reno; bought a supply of provisions, coal, etc., and the party went to housekeeping. They remained there for three or four days, when they were taken into custody by Chief of Police Hillhouse, of Reno, and Chief of Police William Johnson, of Sacramento, on accusations against the men for having violated a State law.

"They waived extradition and returned voluntarily to Sacramento. To Assistant District Attorney F. F. Atkinson, of Sacramento, William Johnson, and Arthur D. Ryan, of the detective force of Sacramento, they admitted the foregoing facts, but they all claimed that their purpose was not an immoral one and that there had been no illicit carnal intercourse among any of them on the trip or after arrival at Reno.

"It appears that the young men claimed to be unhappy in their marital relations, they had become attached to these girls, and that as their intimacy had become known in Sacramento, and as one of the papers was about to print a 'scandalous story,' they decided that it would be best for all concerned to leave the country for a time until the affair had blown over. That after residing for the statutory period (six months) required by the Nevada law, they would secure divorces from their wives and marry these girls.

"The girls were interrogated at considerable length by Mr. Atkinson, but insisted that there had never been anything that was improper, though there had been much that was imprudent, in their relations with the young men. Some of Miss Warrington's clothes were found in the room occupied by Diggs, and some of Miss Norris's clothes were in Caminetti's room.

"If the story of the girls is true, it is indeed an exceptional state of affairs.

"Caminetti is the son of a State senator, and all of the four are prominent in social life of Sacramento. A great deal of publicity was given the affair, and the friends of the wives, as well as those of the two girls, were greatly incensed against the young men.

"Informations were filed against Caminetti and Diggs, charging them with violating the white-slave-traffic act. There will be a hearing before the United States commissioner the latter part of this week unless defendants waive examination, and the matter will be presented to the grand jury by the United States attorney, who requests the assistance of this office in investigating the matter, and, unless otherwise advised, I will give the matter attention."

On May 16 I wired McNab, directing him to forward me a full report and take no further affirmative action in the case until further advised. In response he wrote such a report, under date of May 21, and this reached me on the 27th. In this, which covers more than a dozen typewritten pages, he details a version of the facts, with his inference therefrom, and expresses the opinion that the case was aggravated and should be vigorously prosecuted; also that there might be attempts to interfere with the due course of justice by improper influences.

On the same date, May 27, I replied by wire, saying:

"I think proper course is for you to set the cases and proceed with them as you have planned, and you are so directed."

The matter needing no further immediate consideration, it of course passed out of my thoughts. This litigation is only one of a great number of cases pending in the department some phases of which are constantly being brought to my attention for suggestions or directions, and it is utterly impossible for me to carry in my memory the details of them all.

I had no occasion to give the matter any further special consideration for some three weeks—June 18—when Secretary Wilson telephoned to me and told me of the embarrassment in which he was placed by the request from the elder Caminetti, father of one of the defendants, for leave of absence in order to attend the trial of his son. The elder Caminetti, as you know, is the newly appointed Commissioner of Immigration. The Secretary explained the exigencies of his department, which he thought imperatively required the presence here of the commissioner. He has written me a letter stating his recollection of the circumstances, and I herewith inclose it.

Impressed by Secretary Wilson's statement of his embarrassment, and desiring, of course, if possible, to relieve him, without stopping to go through the files and so refresh my recollections concerning any particular circumstances of the case, I sent the United States attorney the following telegram:

"The Secretary of Labor advises it is a matter of public importance that Commissioner of Immigration Caminetti remain at his post here. I do not now wish Government to be in position of insisting upon trial of young Caminetti and Diggs, charged with violating white-slave law, during enforced absence of the father, who is performing necessary public duties. In view of all facts you are instructed to postpone trial of these cases until the autumn."

The postponement of a criminal case, so recently instituted as this was, is not an unusual proceeding, and it did not occur to me that any malign motive would be attributed to me. If I had anticipated that any fair-minded man, knowing the facts, would place such a construction upon this ordinary act, I would have been scrupulously careful to avoid it. It is essential not only that the administration of justice shall be free from partiality or improper influence, but that even the appearance of such things should be avoided. I do not even hope to escape mistakes, but I am profoundly conscious that my actions are free from unworthy motives.

Mr. McNab, as United States attorney, held a position of peculiar trust and confidence, demanding the utmost loyalty to the department. If, as such an officer should do, he had availed himself of the opportunity to send a dispatch recalling my attention to the peculiar conditions which he thought rendered the proposed action inadvisable, as I had always theretofore done, I should have given earnest consideration to his suggestions, and with them before me could have acted with the local conditions fresh in my mind. Instead of pursuing this manifestly proper course, he waited until June 20 and then published the sensational telegrams wherein he imputed base motives to me. His conduct has, of course, made it impossible for him to continue in the prosecution of this case, however desirable that otherwise might have been. Under the circumstances the only course open is to accept his resignation.

I therefore suggest an immediate conference between us for the purpose of selecting some counsel whose ability, character, and reputation are so high as to insure the proper conduct of the case, and that he be put in immediate charge, with instructions promptly and vigorously to prosecute it to a conclusion.

WESTERN FUEL CO. CASE.

This is an indictment against five directors of the Western Fuel Co., charged with participating in a conspiracy to defraud the Government on coal drawbacks. It was found in February last.

So far as I can recall, there was no occasion for me to give this case any personal consideration until April 30 last, when I received a letter from Secretary Lane, in which he inclosed one from Sidney V. Smith, a defendant, without recommendation. Mr. Smith's letter sought to show that the things complained of were done by others; that although he was a director he was not a participant in any criminal act; and that the case should be dismissed as to him.

I sent a copy of the Smith letter to District Attorney McNab, with a request for his views. On May 20 he replied, giving a review of the evidence, and expressing the view that all five of the defendants should be prosecuted. I thereupon advised the district attorney of my concurrence in his conclusion, and directed him to proceed.

Thereafter, as I recall, Mr. Pringle, a San Francisco lawyer, representing either Smith or Bruce, or both, came to see me. I turned him over to Assistant Attorney General Harr, with instructions to give the matter particular and careful attention. After considering all the facts Mr. Harr finally concluded that the just solution of the situation was first to prosecute the three who were both directors and officers of the company, and that the case against the other two should be deferred until he could examine the evidence presented and determine the propriety of further proceedings. He reported this conclusion to me. I thought it right, and in pursuance of our understanding he sent the district attorney the following telegram:

"Upon further consideration of matter, department feels grave doubt as to guilt of Sidney V. Smith and Robert Bruce, indicted in Western Fuel Co. case. In order to avoid possible injustice, you are instructed to continue case as to them until after the trial of the other three directors, who were officers of the company and active in its management. If latter are convicted, copy of proceedings at trial should be sent department, in order that it may determine what course should be pursued in regard to the two directors named. Wire receipt."

The receipt of this is one of the reasons alleged by Mr. McNab for giving out the dispatches described above and for imputing base motives to me.

I am still of opinion that the course recommended by Mr. Harr in respect of this case is the proper one to pursue. But in view of the insinuations spread broadcast by the district attorney, and for the same reasons as those stated for similar action in the Diggs-Caminetti case, special counsel should be selected to prosecute the cause under like instructions as those suggested there, and I think we should have an immediate conference for this purpose.

Respectfully,

J. C. MCREYNOLDS,
Attorney General.

Permit me to call to the attention of the House that almost at the very outset of his statement the Attorney General says to the President:

I send you herewith what I am informed are the complete files in each case, and specially request that you examine them with particular care.

I am satisfied that if the President did examine the papers in the white-slave cases "with particular care" he must have read Mr. McNab's report of May 21, which I shall refer to extensively later on, and which was so forceful a demand for early trial of the cases that upon its receipt the Attorney General himself directed the United States attorney at San Francisco to proceed and set the cases for trial. After having examined the files the President issued a letter to the Attorney General, which is probably one of the most remarkable state papers ever uttered by a President of the United States. It is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 24, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: Allow me to acknowledge with sincere appreciation your letter of to-day, giving me a full account of the way in which the Department of Justice has dealt with the Diggs-Caminetti and the Western Fuel Co. cases, pending in California, and transmitting the documents connected with the two cases necessary for their elucidation. I am entirely satisfied that the course you took in both these cases was prompted by sound and impartial judgment and a clear instinct for what was fair and right. I approve your course very heartily and without hesitation; but I agree with you that what we may think of what has been done does not relieve us of the obligation to press these cases with the utmost diligence and energy. I approve very heartily of your suggestion that, in the circumstances, special counsel be employed—the ablest we can obtain. I will be very glad to confer with you about the selection. I hope that you will do this without delay. I am very glad indeed that you are giving your personal attention to the immediate and diligent prosecution of the cases, which I agree with you in regarding as of serious importance from every point of view.

Sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. J. C. MCREYNOLDS, Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker, was there ever such an exhibition of backing and filling? The action of the President reminds me of the lines of the late William S. Gilbert in his celebrated satire, "Trial by jury":

Kind jurymen, take my advice;
All kinds of vulgar prejudice
I pray you set aside;
In stern, judicial frame of mind,
From bias free of every kind,
This trial must be tried.

And when amid the plaintiff's shrieks
The ruffianly defendant speaks
Upon the other side,
What he may say you need not mind,
From bias free of every kind,
This trial must be tried.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

It was evidently necessary to whitewash the action of the Attorney General. What McNab had to say was not to be minded. Translated into everyday English, the President's letter to the Attorney General amounts to this: I am perfectly satisfied that the course you took was right, but we can not afford to pursue it. Your demand for delaying the prosecution was actuated by "a clear instinct of what was fair and right," but we must prosecute these cases "with the utmost diligence and energy." Between the lines you will read that you have made an awful mess of things, but it is more than our lives are worth to admit it. [Applause on the Republican side.] P. S.—For heaven's sake, do not do anything like that again without consulting me. Yours, W. W. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] At least, that is the way in which the editor of the San Francisco Chronicle has interpreted the strange epistle, and I do not believe I can better the interpretation.

At the same time the President accepted the resignation of Mr. McNab in the following language:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 24, 1913.

JOHN L. MCNAB, Esq.,
San Francisco, Cal.:

I greatly regret that you should have acted so hastily and under so complete a misapprehension of the actual circumstances, but since you have chosen such a course and have given your resignation the form of an inexcusable intimation of injustice and wrongdoing on the part of your superior, I release you without hesitation and accept your resignation, to take effect at once.

WOODROW WILSON.

Why the President saw fit to scold and censure Mr. McNab and at the same time adopt his policy of proceeding promptly with the prosecution of these cases passes all comprehension. If McNab did right in insisting on the early trial of these cases—and both the President and the Attorney General now adopt his views and insist that the cases must be tried promptly and with the utmost diligence—why should McNab have been censured? If insidious political pull was being successfully used to cause the Attorney General to order a postponement of the cases, why should the censure not have fallen upon the shoulders of the Attorney General? These are some of the questions that the people of this country are asking themselves. These are some of the things the people want to know.

The Attorney General says that on May 16 he wired McNab, directing him to forward a full report and take no further affirmative action in the cases until further advised. This telegram was sent on the evening of Friday, May 16, from the Attorney General's hotel. There was no copy of it in the papers sent by the Attorney General to the Committee on the Judiciary in response to my first resolution.

The Attorney General says, in his letter to the Committee on the Judiciary, which was inserted in the report of that committee on the pending resolution, that it had not been sent to the House in response to resolution No. 181 because it had been "overlooked."

I hope to show before I get through that there were a number of other papers in the Attorney General's office that were "overlooked" and that might have thrown light upon this controversy.

The telegram of May 16 was sent on the evening of that date from the Attorney General's hotel. As I said, there was no copy of it in the papers transmitted by the Attorney General to this House in response to my former resolution. The telegram was sent in the evening from the hotel of the Attorney General. Who saw the Attorney General that evening and requested his interference in these cases? Why was it sent from the Attorney General's hotel? Why was it not sent from the office of the Attorney General? True, there is a memorandum about this telegram in the file sent down from the Attorney General's office in response to resolution No. 181, stating that the telegram was sent from the Attorney General's hotel on the evening of May 16, but that memorandum was put into the files on May 21, five days after the original telegram had been sent to Mr. McNab. Now, who asked him to send it? I repeat, Who asked him to send it? What was the insidious political pull that was exerted? These cases were on the calendar to be set on May 19. On May 16 they are abruptly halted in this fashion by the telegram of the Attorney General. That was over a month before the Secretary of Labor interfered.

There was also on the calendar of May 19 to be set the white-slave case of Earl Fullerton. He, too, had been indicted for white slavery. He had been indicted on May 1, four weeks after Diggs and Caminetti had been indicted. His case had been continued to May 19 to be set. It was the same day on which these other two cases were to be set. Did the Attorney General send any telegram on the evening of May 16 from his hotel to the United States attorney at San Francisco asking the United States attorney there to take no further affirmative action in that case until he was directed from Washington by the Attorney General to do so, and also to make a report? No. We have no evidence of anything of that kind anywhere. As a matter of fact, the Attorney General did not stop that case. The trial of Earl Fullerton, who was without political pull, who had no powerful influence, so far as we know, was set on May 19 for trial on June 11; and his trial was commenced on June 12. On June 18 he was convicted of white slavery by the jury, and on June 21 he was sentenced to two years in the State penitentiary at San Quentin, Cal. That is the difference between the case of a friendless man who has no political pull and the case of men who have powerful political pull. [Applause on the Republican side.]

How did the Attorney General come to send that telegram of May 16 about the white-slave cases? I can readily understand how he came to send the telegrams in the Western Fuel cases. It was because Mr. Lane, the Secretary of the Interior, had sent up to the Department of Justice a letter from Mr. Sidney V. Smith, one of the defendants in the Western Fuel cases, in which he asked Mr. Lane to present the matter to the Attorney General with a view of having his case nolle prossed.

That letter of Mr. Smith was sent to the Attorney General by the Secretary of the Interior. A few days later the Attorney General acknowledged its receipt, and in that acknowledgment he stated that he was sending to Mr. McNab in California for information and his opinion as to whether the case ought to be dismissed or not. Afterwards, when Mr. McNab's statement regarding this case was received at the Department of Justice, the Attorney General sent a letter to Mr. Lane, in which he told the latter that he had instructed the United States attorney at San Francisco to proceed with the trial of the cases.

So that we can understand how it is that he sent out for facts about the Western Fuel cases, but echo still asks, "Why, and under what circumstances, on the evening of May 16, did the Attorney General send out to California for facts in the Diggs and Caminetti white-slave cases? At whose request did he order the United States attorney, Mr. McNab, to take no further affirmative action until otherwise directed?" The answer has not yet been forthcoming. The department has not dealt candidly in this matter. It has not given the facts to the House or to the country, and we would like to know all the facts.

The statement of the Attorney General to the President shows that Mr. McNab forwarded a report in consonance with the request contained in the Attorney General's telegram of May 16, and that this report reached the Attorney General on May 27. On that date the Attorney General wired Mr. McNab. He had evidently promptly read the report of the United States attorney, Mr. McNab. He must have been convinced of the necessity for a prompt trial of the accused persons. He wired Mr. McNab as follows on that very day:

I think the proper course is for you to set the cases and proceed with them as you have planned, and you are so directed.

Mr. Speaker, that was the proper course for the United States Attorney General to take in these cases.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Concerning the telegram from the Attorney General, dated May 16, sent from his hotel, the gentleman in his last resolution asks to have any memorandum in the Attorney General's office in connection with that transmitted, does he not?

Mr. KAHN. True.

Mr. MANN. Has anything been transmitted by the Committee on the Judiciary that throws any light on the sending of that telegram?

Mr. KAHN. Nothing whatever.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say——

Mr. KAHN. And the only memorandum submitted was the one from the private secretary of the Attorney General, in which he states that the Attorney General sent it on the evening of May 16 from his hotel. But that memorandum is dated May 21—five days after the telegram had been sent. And there was no memorandum whatever inserted in the files by the Attorney General stating why he had sent the telegram, and his failure to insert such a memorandum is one of the things we want to have explained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I am yielding to the gentleman from Illinois just now.

Mr. MANN. If the Attorney General, as he states, is not able to carry the details of all these cases in his head, how did it happen that, without having the details in his head and the files at hand, he sent the telegram on the 16th of May from his hotel to stop the further prosecution of these cases unless somebody with a pull was reaching him at that particular moment?

Mr. KAHN. That is exactly what I have been asking. I can not see, and I doubt whether anyone can show, how the Attorney General would have sent a telegram of that kind from his hotel without having his attention called to the matter or without having a request made upon him on that evening to do that very thing.

Mr. MANN. Now, perhaps the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] can explain it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON]?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh, well, I want——

Mr. KAHN. Or for a short statement.

Mr. CLAYTON. I want to supply the information for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if he has not been satisfied.

The resolution of the gentleman from California says:

Also copy of the memorandum placed in the files of the office of the Attorney General in connection with or in relation to the sending of the telegram.

Mr. KAHN. True.

Mr. CLAYTON. The report to-day carries that very memorandum called for by the gentleman's resolution, and the memorandum supplies the desired information.

Mr. KAHN. It carries a memorandum supplied by the Attorney General's private secretary.

Mr. CLAYTON. And it is a part of the files.

Mr. KAHN. True; but I contend that there should be some memorandum from the Attorney General himself stating under what circumstances he sent that telegram on the evening of May 16 from his hotel.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well. There is no other memorandum touching that matter in the files.

Mr. KAHN. That is what I say, and that is what I complain of.

Mr. CLAYTON. And the Attorney General has said so in effect, because he has furnished to the gentleman all the papers and all the memorandums there. And I may say to the gentleman that the Attorney General procured a copy of this very telegram to which this memorandum relates from the telegraph company a few days ago and supplied it to the committee. There has been no concealment anywhere about it at any time, because it was printed in the report presented to the House on July 2.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KAHN. There is still some mystery about it. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Three gentlemen can not talk at once.

Mr. MANN. But we are doing it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. I thought the gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. KAHN. I yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. CLAYTON. If, on account of the heat, the gentleman is a little neurotic, I will excuse him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama says he has furnished all the memoranda in the office, and he has no other. Do I understand that it is the contention of anybody that the Attorney General of the United States, from his hotel or anywhere else, sends telegrams relating to cases, with no information before him, and makes no memoranda of it for filing in the case? Certainly no lawyer fit to appear before a justice of the peace would do that; and it is impossible to believe that the distinguished Attorney General, at the head of the Department of Justice, will from his hotel attempt to direct great prosecutions and furnish no information to his office concerning what he has done. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KAHN. I thank the gentleman for having put the matter in so forceful a manner. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary informs this House that the Attorney General had to go to the office of the telegraph company only a day or two ago to get a copy of this very telegram. It is a remarkable state of affairs when papers of this importance are not kept in the files of the Attorney General of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

When Mr. McNab received this telegram of May 27, directing him to proceed, he immediately sent a letter of thanks to the Attorney General, which letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR THE
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, May 28, 1913.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am just in receipt of your telegram of May 27, 1913, in which you state that you think the proper course is for me to set for trial the cases against Diggs and Caminetti and in which you direct me to proceed.

I wish to thank you very sincerely for this prompt reply to my report. It is precisely what I expected to receive from the department. I did not feel at liberty, in the report on the evidence, to express too strongly my views in regard to the local situation. Owing, however, to the peculiarly aggravated character of the offense, public opinion throughout the State has been burning at white heat, and the press watches with a scrutinizing eye every action that is taken in court in regard to these cases. The comment has been freely indulged in—and I think this is due to certain indiscreet remarks of certain men in Sacramento—that unlimited influence would be brought to bear at Washington and here to indefinitely defer the cases, if not dismiss them. I know how absolutely futile such efforts are, but I am extremely jealous of the high regard in which your department is held throughout the country, and was particularly anxious to have the cases promptly disposed of, along with all other cases of similar character. Your telegram is encouraging to everyone in the office, and on behalf of the entire force I thank you for your prompt and vigorous action. The case will be presented just as every other case is presented, without bias or feeling, but with a due regard to the serious facts involved.

Respectfully,

J. L. MCNAB,
United States Attorney.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, note this language in that letter:

The comment has been freely indulged in—and I think this is due to certain indiscreet remarks of certain men in Sacramento—that unlimited influence would be brought to bear at Washington and here to indefinitely defer the cases, if not dismiss them. I know how absolutely futile such efforts are, but I am extremely jealous of the high regard in which your department is held throughout the country, and was particularly anxious to have the cases promptly disposed of, along with all other cases of similar character. Your telegram is encouraging to everyone in the office, and on behalf of the entire force I thank you for your prompt and vigorous action. The case will be presented just as every other case is presented, without bias or feeling, but with a due regard to the serious facts involved.

Is that the language of a self-serving, aspiring office seeker, who wanted "to burn a little red fire for his own personal and political advantage"? I do not think a single Member can truthfully so assert. It is rather the language of a courageous, honest, sagacious, and efficient public servant who wants to perform his sworn duty to the best of his ability. It is the letter of a man whose loyalty to his superior officer stands out in every sentence. That letter of May 28, in addition to Mr. McNab's report of May 21, ought to have impressed the facts in the Diggs-Caminetti cases indelibly upon the mind of the Attorney General. Finally, when he had again turned down an appeal for continuance in the Caminetti case, Mr. McNab, on June 3, 1913, once more wrote the Attorney General regarding the matter, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, June 3, 1913.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On May 16, 1913, I received your wire directing me to submit a report of the evidence in the cases against Caminetti and Diggs and instructing me to take no further action until notified by you.

On May 21, 1913, I forwarded you full report, accompanied by recommendation, and asked for instructions.

On May 27, 1913, I received your telegram approving my report and directing me to proceed with the trial.

I am in receipt of telegrams from Senator Caminetti requesting that the cases go over until after July or August. I had a letter, written prior to his departure for Washington, asking this.

I have the utmost sympathy for Senator Caminetti and for his good wife in this matter, but I feel it my duty, in view of the repeated telegrams, to state that I believe your direction wired to me is the only proper course to pursue. I have set the cases for trial July 26, 1913. I have no hesitancy in saying that the Government's case will be impaired by a long delay. Witnesses whom it is material that the Government should use may not be available if long postponements are granted. Evidence which is at hand may be difficult to secure at a later period. Furthermore, I have written to Senator Caminetti with the utmost candor and frankness, informing him of the condition of the public mind and saying to him that both he and this office will be subjected to the bitterest criticism if the cases are again postponed. I think the good of the service demands that I proceed in accordance with your directions. I would be only too glad to do anything in the way of accommodating Senator Caminetti, particularly in view of the fact that his present duties may require his presence in Washington, but I am forced to the conclusion from my knowledge of the case that another postponement will make it increasingly more difficult for the Government to proceed.

This letter is written not in reference to any messages received from you, but because I believe it to be my duty to keep you informed as to the progress of a cause concerning which you have inquired and relating to which I have your instructions.

Respectfully,
J. L. MCNAB,
United States Attorney.

In this letter the United States attorney points out the fact that Senator Caminetti, the father of the defendant Caminetti in one of the white-slave cases, had repeatedly tried to procure postponements of the case and had been repeatedly refused. This letter, in the ordinary course of the mails, should have reached Washington about June 8 or 9, only nine days prior to the time when the Attorney General sent his wire instructing Mr. McNab to postpone the trial of these cases until the autumn.

But in addition to these letters from McNab giving reasons for a speedy trial, a telegram protesting against postponement was also sent by Mr. C. K. McClatchy, editor of the Sacramento Bee, a leading Democratic newspaper of California, to Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior. I am reliably informed that Mr. Lane sent this telegram to the Attorney General, just as he had sent the letter from Mr. Sidney V. Smith in the Western Fuel cases. This telegram was as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CAL., May 20, 1913.

To FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.:

Strong intimations from certain leading Democrats have led me to believe, or at least to suspect, that a systematic effort is being made with the authorities at Washington to have the white-slave cases against Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti either dropped or postponed, and postponed for the weakening of the prosecution or to permit pleas of guilty to carry with them totally inadequate sentences. It would be an infamous outrage if this were accomplished. It would be a stain upon justice in California. It would be a reproach to any Department of Justice which would permit this or even acquiesce therein. It would say to the people of California that there is one law for wretches without friends and a totally different law for wretches with a political pull, and it would provoke a universal contempt for all laws in this section of California, where the fathers and the mothers of growing girls are acquainted with all the facts of this most shameless case.

I say all these things also, although I am a warm personal friend of Senator Caminetti and also of Senator Marshall Diggs. But if there be one case above all others in northern California where justice should be allowed to have full sway, unhampered and uninfluenced, it is this Diggs-Caminetti case. I know personally that District Attorney McNab, while feeling strongest pity for the good folks of these defendants, feels that the strongest, most vigorous, and most tireless prosecution should ensue to the end that justice may be done, and that it should not be proclaimed once more in California that there is one law for the poor and friendless and another for the rich and influential. I have no acquaintance with the Attorney General, but you are at liberty to give him this telegram. I have no other object in sending it than a desire that justice shall not be frustrated and its administration stained.

C. K. MCCLATCHY.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be also just as well to order the Attorney General to send that telegram, as he has been ordered to do once before, when that side of the House laid the resolution on the table, saying that it had all the papers, when it did not have them?

Mr. KAHN. I had intended to refer to that matter later on, but will say to the gentleman that there are two or three other telegrams that are referred to in that very report made by the Committee on the Judiciary, but that were not sent to this House, and that I assume, therefore, were not in the files.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman from California think that the Attorney General keeps a record of all letters and telegrams, so that he knows what he does have on the files?

Mr. KAHN. It would not appear so from the papers on file in this case, although there is no question but that he should do so.

Strange to say, this telegram of Mr. McClatchy did not appear among the papers sent by the Attorney General to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, in response to my resolution. This telegram emphasizes the need for prompt action in these white-slave cases; it was sent by a prominent Democrat to a member of the President's official family. It had in mind the welfare of the present administration. It came from a source absolutely friendly to the administration. In fact, it came from a man who was on the friendliest terms with the father of young Caminetti—and who did not want to see a blunder committed by the administration. And yet, with all these repeated warnings as to the seriousness of the charges and the need for the prompt trial of the cases, the Attorney General, in his statement to the President, says that after having directed McNab by wire to proceed with the cases as he had planned, the matter needed no further immediate consideration, and it, of course, passed out of his thoughts.

I can not conceive how a case that had been so strongly presented could have passed out of the thoughts of the Attorney General; but he says that he had no occasion to give the matter any other special consideration for some three weeks when Secretary Wilson telephoned him and told him of the embarrassment in which he was placed by the request from the elder Caminetti, father of one of the defendants, for leave of absence in order to attend the trial of his son; and thereupon he sent to United States Attorney McNab the telegram which brought about the latter's resignation.

The Attorney General in commenting upon the action of Mr. McNab says that it did not occur to him that any malign motive would be attributed to him; that if he had anticipated that any fair-minded man, knowing the facts, would place such a construction upon this ordinary act he would have been scrupulously careful to avoid it. I dare say that if he had known Mr. McNab as we who live in California, and who learned to know his worth as a fearless public prosecutor, have learned to know him, he would never have sent the telegram of June 18. The trouble with the Attorney General was this: He assumed that Mr. McNab was one of the ordinary class of job chasers whose sole ambition is to become attached to Uncle Sam's pay roll. It is possible that an insistent demand for political jobs has given him considerable experience with this class of would-be officials in recent months.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. McNab is made of sterner stuff. He took a pride in his work. Even at the time of his resignation he was highly complimented from the bench by the judge of the court before whom he had been trying his cases. The Attorney General complains in his letter to the President that Mr. McNab imputed base motives to him, the Attorney General. The Attorney General is jealous of his own honor, and properly so. He is solicitous that no one should accuse him of acting from ulterior motives. Personally I believe the Attorney General to be a man of the highest honor. I for one do not want to be understood as questioning his integrity, his honesty, and his probity. In these cases he simply allowed insidious political pull to influence him in ordering a postponement of these cases. As an executive officer in an administration that proclaims there shall be no special privileges he should not have attempted to grant special privileges at the request of other high officials of this administration. Does not the Attorney General believe that Mr. McNab is just as jealous of his honor as the Attorney General is jealous of his own? When Mr. McNab had repeatedly written to him that it was openly asserted that personal and political pull would be exerted to secure an indefinite postponement of these cases in order that justice might be subverted, and that he, Mr. McNab, desired the office of the United States attorney at San Francisco to be kept free from the charge that he was unduly favoring these defendants, Mr. McNab was only making such representations in order to induce the department to prevent any possible attack being made upon his own honesty, his own probity as a prosecuting officer, and his own integrity as a man of honor.

Finding that his superior officer did not pay any attention to his repeated warnings, and in order to protect his own honor as a man, I firmly believe he was thoroughly justified in pursuing the course he did. The Attorney General, in his statement, complains that Mr. McNab did not send a dispatch recalling his attention to the peculiar conditions which he thought rendered the proposed action of postponement inadvisable, and says that if he had done so he—the Attorney General—should have given earnest consideration to his suggestion. Is not the boot on the other leg? Is it not the invariable custom for the chiefs of the departments, before overruling a subordinate officer upon the request of anybody, to send for that subordinate or to telegraph to that subordinate the facts that are being urged for a change in the course theretofore recommended by the subordinate officer, and calling for such comment as the subordinate officer might have to make in the premises? In all the years that I have been here in Washington I have found that that is almost invariably the course pursued in the departments. Obviously it ought to be the constant rule. I do not know of a single case myself where it has been departed from, and it seems to me that it would have been safer for the Attorney General if he had followed the usual course pursued in most cases. In other words, instead of demanding that Mr. McNab should have wired him protesting against the postponement after the telegram of June 18 had been received at San Francisco, the proper course, in my judgment, would have been for the Attorney General to have wired Mr. McNab, stating the facts set forth in the telegram of June 18, and asking him why the department should not carry out the suggestions contained in that telegram. That was what the Attorney General did when he sent the telegram on May 16, over a month earlier.

I will not go into the Western Fuel Co. cases, referred to in the Attorney General's letter to the President, further than to say that here the Attorney General admits that the personal attorney for an indicted director of the Western Fuel Co. had called upon him personally, here in Washington, in regard to the case, and that he had turned this attorney over to his assistant, Mr. Harr. Mr. McNab, in his telegram of resignation, uses this strong language:

> I can not consent to occupy this position as a mere automaton and have the guilt or innocence of rich and powerful defendants, who have been indicted by unbiased grand juries on overwhelming evidence, determined in Washington on representations on behalf of the defendants without notice to me.

He was not advised of the statements made by the attorney for the accused director. He was not present to answer or refute any possibly erroneous statements that might have been made and he was perfectly justified, in my opinion, in view of all the circumstances, in using the language that I have just quoted.

But to return to the white-slave cases. When Mr McNab's telegram of resignation, and the Attorney General's alleged flippant comment thereon, had been published by the press there came a wave of indignation that swept over the country from the Pacific to the Atlantic. The matter became serious. Popular indignation was voiced in the editorial columns of every reputable newspaper in the United States. The administration had to save its face. Somebody had to assume the rôle of "goat." Just then our former colleague, the present Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, for whom all those who were permitted to serve with him in this House entertain the highest personal regard, came "abuttin' and aboundin'" into the arena as the official administration "goat" in this episode. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] He sent a statement to the Attorney General on June 24, which reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 24, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. MCREYNOLDS: In view of the published statements that influence has been brought to bear upon you through the Secretary of Labor to postpone the trial in the Digge-Caminetti case, I desire to state to you that neither Commissioner General Caminetti nor anyone else either requested or suggested to me that I should ask you to postpone the trial.

The Department of Labor has been but recently created. It is in a formative state of organization. Congress has provided funds for the payment of the salaries of the Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Solicitor, private secretary and confidential clerk to the Secretary, and private secretary to the Assistant Secretary. Funds have not yet been provided for the other clerical help necessary for the proper organization and operation of the department. Consequently every person connected with the department has been working to his full capacity in an effort to keep up with the business. That is particularly true with regard to the Immigration Service. Any leave of absence at this time would seriously impair the service.

Before Mr. Caminetti took the oath of office he informed me that it would be necessary to ask for leave of absence in order to be present at the trial of his son. About the middle of June he again called my attention to his desire for leave of absence. I pointed out to him the difficulties we had to contend with; that the department was in a formative stage; that we had large contracts for feeding the immigrants at Ellis Island and other ports of entry to consider and dispose of; that Hindu immigration to the Pacific coast via Hawaii and the Philippine Islands was becoming an acute problem which ought to be worked out at as early a date as possible; that allegations were continuously being made that Chinese were being smuggled into the United States in violation of the Chinese-exclusion laws; that the administration of the immigration laws generally would require his close application for some time to enable him to grasp the details of the methods used by the department in enforcing the law; and that, in view of these conditions, it was imperative that he should remain here for a considerable period in order that he might assist in the work in this emergency and acquaint himself with the problems we had to work out. That, then, when he went to the Pacific coast he would be in a position to inspect the various immigration stations in a manner which would give beneficial results. I then asked him if it would not be possible for him to secure a postponement of his son's trial until the next term of court, so that he could attend the trial of his son and on the same trip inspect the Immigration Service on the Pacific coast. He replied that he did not know whether a postponement could be obtained or not; and I stated to him that I would take the matter up with the Attorney General and ask for a postponement of the case, with a view to carrying out the suggestion I had made. It was pursuant to this suggestion that I called you up on June 18, stated the circumstances, and asked for the postponement, which was granted.

Respectfully, yours,

W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

Of all the naïve utterances that ever came from the pen of any man in public life, commend me still to this statement of Mr. Secretary Wilson. At the very outset he remarks:

> I desire to state to you that neither Commissioner General Caminetti nor anyone else either requested or suggested to me that I should ask you to postpone the trial.

You see he frankly assumes the rôle of "goat"; and then he continues—> that the department was in a formative stage; that we had large contracts for feeding the immigrants at Ellis Island and other ports of entry to consider and dispose of; that Hindu immigration to the Pacific coast via Hawaii and the Philippine Islands was becoming an acute problem which ought to be worked out at as early a date as possible; that allegations were continuously being made that Chinese were being smuggled into the United States in violation of the Chinese-exclusion laws; that the administration of the immigration laws generally would require his close application for some time to enable him to grasp the details of the methods used by the department in enforcing the law; and that, in view of these conditions, it was imperative that he should remain here for a considerable period in order that he might assist in the work in this emergency and acquaint himself with the problems we had to work out. That, then, when he went to the Pacific coast he would be in a position to inspect the various immigration stations in a manner which would give beneficial results. I then asked him if it would not be possible for him to secure a postponement of his son's trial until the next term of court, so that he could attend the trial of his son and on the same trip inspect the Immigration Service on the Pacific coast. He replied that he did not know whether a postponement could be obtained or not; and I stated to him that I would take the matter up with the Attorney General and ask for a postponement of the case, with a view to carrying out the suggestion I had made. It was pursuant to this suggestion that I called you up on June 18, stated the circumstances, and asked for the postponement, which was granted.

Mr. Speaker, in the first place the Immigration Service is not in a formative stage. It was transplanted bodily from the former Department of Commerce and Labor to the present Department of Labor. The work in that service, so far as the present Commissioner General of Immigration is concerned, has been lessened, if anything, because under the new law creating this Department of Labor the Bureau of Naturalization has been segregated from the Immigration Service and has been created an independent bureau, with an independent commissioner. Besides, the Deputy Commissioner of Immigration, Mr. Larned, has proven an efficient officer, who is thoroughly familiar with all the details and the duties that devolve upon the officials of that service. He has held the post for years. He knows its every detail, and he was even recently acting in the place of his chief, for I understand that the present commissioner general was absent from his post of duty until last Saturday, and yet the service still lives; it is still performing its proper functions. The commissioner general was not even missed, so far as we have been able to learn.

The Secretary informed the Attorney General that he asked Mr. Caminetti if it would not be possible for him to secure a postponement of his son's trial until the next term of court, so that he could attend the trial of his son and on the same trip inspect the Immigration Service on the Pacific coast.

Therein becomes apparent the remarkable naïveté of the Secretary of Labor.

Of course if the commissioner general were to leave Washington to go to San Francisco to attend the trial of his son at this time he would have to pay the expenses of the trip out of his own pocket, but if the case could be postponed until autumn, when he could attend the trial of his son and on the same trip inspect the Immigration Service on the Pacific coast, he would be making the trip in the interest of the Government service and the Government would pay his expenses. Thrift! Thrift! Horatio, and no mistake. I do not think that the Secretary of Labor ever contemplated anything quite as guileless as that.

The Secretary further informed the Attorney General that Mr. Caminetti replied to his query that he did not know whether a postponement could be obtained or not. That, to say the least, was a remarkable statement, for prior to the time he left California and up to and including May 31 the present Commissioner General of Immigration had repeatedly tried to induce the United States attorney at San Francisco, Mr. McNab, to postpone the trial. On May 21 Mr. McNab received a letter from State Senator Anthony Caminetti, who has since become the Commissioner General of Immigration, dated at Sacramento, Cal. This letter reads as follows:

When talking to you on the telephone in re setting of the case of United States v. Diggs and Caminetti I stated I would like to confer with you concerning same. I had reference to a request I desired to make in view of the probability of my appointment to a position in Washington, D. C., which was daily expected at that time and since. I did not feel that I could consistently make the request unless the appointment was made by the President.

Under the present circumstances, and with the practical certainty of my early departure for Washington, D. C., to assume the duties of Commissioner General of Immigration, I respectfully request, if consistent with your duty in the premises, that the time of setting said cases for trial be continued, as it is very uncertain and a matter not now under my control whether I could be present in June or July in the event that the cases be tried in either month.

I feel it my duty, and it is the wish of Mrs. Caminetti, that I attend if a trial takes place.

In behalf of Mrs. Caminetti and myself I thank you sincerely for the kind sympathy you expressed at the time of my conversation with you.

On May 27 Mr. McNab replied to Mr. Caminetti's letter, as follows:

I should be very glad to grant any request that I could which would be consistent with my duty here. I have continued the case two weeks at your request, as I understood you wished to talk to me about it. The case has again been continued for two weeks on my suggestion to the court that you desired to see me; but I regret to say that I can not give any assurance that the case will go over past June or July. Personally, I have the kindest sympathy for yourself and Mrs. Caminetti in the unfortunate position in which your son is placed. I sincerely trust that you will understand that in prosecuting this case I am merely performing my duty as an officer; but I would remind you that you, as well as the officers in this office, will be placed under public criticism if this case is indefinitely continued. Your well-known political prominence has already brought forth suggestions that the case has been continued for political reasons. I, of course, very well know that no political pressure has been brought to bear on me, nor, if brought, would have the slightest effect; but out of justice to yourself, I would respectfully urge that you offer no objection to this case going to an early trial. You, of course, know your own feelings best in the matter, but I can conceive of no good that can be accomplished by indefinitely delaying the trial.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman 20 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for 20 minutes more.

Mr. KAHN. And I want to say, in passing, that everyone must have the sincerest sympathy for Mr. and Mrs. Caminetti, the parents of the accused. They have occupied an honored position in California, and the heart of every man and woman in that State beats in sincerest sympathy for them in their present unfortunate position.

On May 31, Mr. McNab received from Anthony Caminetti, who was then in Washington, a telegram, reading as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 31.

JOHN L. MCNAB,
United States District Attorney, San Francisco, Cal.:

By request of Secretary of Labor came on to Washington concerning duties of commissioner, etc. As anticipated in my letter to you, my services necessary in June and July to inaugurate work of departments. Hence, for reasons suggested in said letter, I would greatly appreciate your kindness if you would avoid setting my son's case for the time being and allow same to stand over until after July, for reasons above set forth. After consultation Department of Justice has no objection to this course. Please answer at earliest convenience to-day, if possible.

A. CAMINETTI.

Note the concluding sentences of this last telegram:

After consultation Department of Justice has no objection to this course. Please answer at earliest convenience to-day, if possible.

With whom at the Department of Justice was the consultation had to which Mr. Caminetti refers? Who, at the Department of Justice, authorized Mr. Caminetti to inform the United States attorney at San Francisco that the Department of Justice had no objections to allowing his son's case to stand over until after July? Surely Mr. Caminetti did not send this telegram without having had some assurance from some one at the Department of Justice that his request for postponement would not be met with objection by the department. Who gave him permission to send such a telegram? These are some of the facts that the House and the country ought to know. And yet, in the face of all of this correspondence by telegram and by letter, the Secretary of Labor tells the Attorney General in his communication that Mr. Caminetti had informed him that he did not know whether a postponement of his son's case could be obtained or not.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question,

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In the copy of the file submitted by the Attorney General, is there any memorandum of this consultation and this expression of opinion by the Department of Justice?

Mr. KAHN. There is not; at least not among the papers that the Committee on the Judiciary have reported to this House.

Mr. MANN. Another missing document?

Mr. KAHN. Well, this telegram was sent by Mr. Caminetti to the United States attorney at San Francisco. The department, perhaps, would not have a copy of that, but they should have a memorandum of the conversation.

Mr. MANN. They would have a copy of the agreement they had, unless Caminetti was lying?

Mr. KAHN. Well, Mr. Caminetti sent a telegram that there was no objection on the part of the Department of Justice for a continuance. Now, he must have had that understanding with somebody up there, and yet the files are absolutely silent on the subject. Mr. Caminetti certainly would not have sent that telegram unless he had had such an agreement.

Where is the agreement? With whom did he have it? That is another thing that the Members of this House would like to know. That is another thing that the people of this country are entitled to know, and that is another instance where the department has shown a lack of candor in dealing with these cases.

And now comes the most naïve statement of all the naïve statements in the letter of the Secretary of Labor. Without any suggestion from Caminetti to act in the premises, the Secretary of Labor stated to the former that he would take up the matter with the Attorney General and ask for a postponement of the case; that it was in pursuance to this suggestion that he called up the Attorney General and asked the latter for the postponement which was granted. You tickle me, and I will tickle you. Surely this is a case of "noblesse oblige," if there ever was one. Upon the mere request of the Secretary of Labor, the Attorney General, without again refreshing his memory from the files, issues a peremptory order for the postponement of certain white-slave cases. It is a remarkable story.

As I have already stated, on June 3 Mr. McNab sent a letter to the Attorney General, informing him of the efforts that were being made by Mr. Caminetti to secure a postponement in the white-slave cases. As I have already stated, that letter must have reached here either the 8th or 9th of June, only a few days prior to the order of postponement sent from Washington to Mr. McNab.

But while all this insidious political influence was being exerted for the postponement of the case of young Caminetti, what subtle and insidious influence was working the political pull for young Maury Diggs? That has not appeared anywhere on the surface. Young Diggs is the nephew of State Senator Diggs, of California. He is the young man who supplied the funds for the unfortunate escapade. It does not appear anywhere that his relatives were so occupied with governmental affairs, at Washington or elsewhere, that they could not attend his trial. Then why did the Attorney General order a postponement in that case? And why was the Diggs case always coupled with the Caminetti case? It does not appear in any of the records, so far as I have been able to learn, that the young men were to be tried jointly. And if the Attorney General had really become convinced that the presence of the elder Caminetti was absolutely necessary in Washington, why did he cause the hand of Mr. McNab to be stayed in the Diggs case? That also is a query the answer to which the country and those who have absolute faith in Mr. McNab's honesty and probity would like to know. But the official records submitted to this House and taken from the files of the Department of Justice are a blank upon that phase of the controversy. Truly insidiousness was never more patent than in the matter of what might be considered an indefinite postponement of the case of Maury Diggs.

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of Labor, in his written statement to the Attorney General, speaks of the enforcement of the laws regarding the smuggling of Chinese coolies into the United States. The records of the department will show that Mr. McNab has been singularly efficient in breaking up that practice. The business of smuggling Chinese into the United States has grown to be so dangerous, the chances the smugglers take are now considered so hazardous, that the price charged by the smugglers for every Chinese brought into the country in violation of the Chinese-exclusion laws has risen from $200 per contraband to $600 per contraband within the last year.

Mr. McNab at the time of his resignation still had three years to serve as United States attorney at San Francisco. He was ambitious to serve out his term and to do his duty fearlessly, faithfully, and honestly. As I have already stated, his letters to the Attorney General of May 28 and June 3 show the falsity of the statements of his opponents and those who seek to whitewash the action of the administration in this matter by saying that his resignation was prompted by political ambition.

That his course met the approbation of the people who knew him, the people among whom he lived, the people among whom he served, the people who had implicit confidence in him, is evidenced by this telegram sent by the grand jury of the northern district of California to the President of the United States at the time Mr. McNab's resignation was announced. And, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert that telegram in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks leave to extend his remarks by inserting the paper he has named. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand what it was.

Mr. KAHN. It is a telegram from the grand jury of the northern district of California to the President of the United States at the time that Mr. McNab's resignation was sent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. This telegram reads as follows:

WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States:

As the grand jury which returned the original indictments against the Western Fuel directors, we most respectfully, but strongly and vigorously, protest against the usurpation of power by the Attorney General of the United States in giving ear to the private appeals of certain defendants and then ordering that these defendants be relieved from prosecution. The defendants who have been thus selected by the Attorney General as marks of his peculiar favor were indicted on the same evidence introduced against all other defendants. For an administrative officer thus to single out certain defendants and refuse to permit them to be tried is to overthrow and destroy all established precedent and law; it is to publicly attempt to free a favored defendant after the exercise of influence in the privacy of the Attorney General's office, in the absence of the evidence and in violation of justice; it is an attempt to subvert the powers of the Federal grand jury, to make the Attorney General the substitute for the courts and to destroy the usefulness of the United States attorney's office. Any Attorney General who can thus declare men innocent can in the same way declare them guilty, and inevitable corruption and flagrant injustice will result. If these defendants were innocent, why did they not insist upon immediate vindication before a trial jury, instead of seeking to escape a trial by privately appealing to the Attorney General without notice from the United States Attorney? After the presentation of the evidence, leading to these indictments, our duty was plain. To have avoided it would have been to exhibit cowardice. We can not refrain from expressing our protest that after 10 days of earnest labor, devoted to the consideration of evidence against these defendants, our work is swept away by the autocratic act of an administrative official. This grand jury, reposing the highest faith in your rectitude of purpose, appeal to you to publicly discountenance the action thus taken and to uphold the hands of the United States attorney in a vigorous prosecution of all the defendants without fear or favor. This grand jury, which for four months was in almost daily contact with the United States attorney, John L. McNab, while he was engaged in the active performance of his duty, wish to declare that we repose the most implicit confidence in him, both as lawyer and as man, in all his official actions.

Burr D. Alton, James H. Ames, Walter N. Brunt, Giles N. Easton, Edward J. Duffey (foreman), E. W. Dunn, R. C. Dunbar, G. N. Dunster, T. H. Fallon, Jacob Goldberg, John J. Haviside, H. R. Hopps, J. D. Jessup, W. H. Little, Charles E. Lipp, A. C. F. Locke, William Mysell, Richard N. Nason, William J. Newman, H. V. Ramsdell, J. B. Stanford, W. A. Starr, W. B. Webster.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from California will be equally liberal when I prefer a similar request.

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection to any request by the gentleman from Alabama. I have always believed in letting in the light. That is what some gentlemen on the other side have not believed in.

Mr. Speaker, Judge Van Fleet, the judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, in expressing his regret in open court at Mr. McNab's resignation, used this language:

Mr. McNab, I would be stating less than the truth if I failed to express my sincere regret. Without referring to the circumstances which have led to your departure, I want to say that the Government is losing the most efficient, vigorous, and painstaking prosecuting officer we have had at this end of the Department of Justice.

Surely such commendation would not have been given, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, if it had not been justly deserved.

When the Committee on the Judiciary brought in its report and asked that my first resolution lie on the table, we were not permitted to argue the matter because the motion to lay on the table is not debatable. Yet, if we had been given an opportunity to show that the files of the Attorney General, as they were submitted to the committee, did not contain all the papers in the case, I feel that this House would not have taken that action, but would have insisted on having what the resolution called for, namely, all the papers in the case.

Mr. Speaker, I have already explained about the telegram of May 16; but the powerful telegram of Mr. McClatchy, the editor of a Democratic newspaper in California, which was sent to Mr. Lane, and which Mr. Lane sent to the department, does not appear in the files of this case. Why not? In the Western Fuel cases the letter of Sidney V. Smith appears. The acknowledgment of the Attorney General of Mr. Lane's note sending Sidney V. Smith's letter to the Department of Justice appears, and the final action of the Attorney General on Smith's letter appears in the Western Fuel cases; but there is no reference whatever in the white-slave cases to this important telegram, asking that the cases be promptly tried. And where does that leave our friend, Mr. Lane? It leaves the Secretary of the Interior in this unfortunate position: He sent to the Department of Justice, according to the face of the records in the Western Fuel cases, a letter from a rich corporation director asking that his case be nol-prossed; but the record in the white-slave cases is absolutely silent and does not show that he also sent to the Department of Justice a telegram from a prominent Democratic editor of the State of California asking for the prompt enforcement of the law with regard to these white-slave cases. That telegram ought to be supplied in that report, in justice to Mr. Lane. It ought to be submitted to this House. It shows the facts in these cases, and that is what the country wants. The country wants the facts.

I ask that the letter of the Attorney General to Mr. Lane in the Western Fuel case be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter to Secretary Lane. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

JCA—jsw

165862–7. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, May 27, 1913.

Hon. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LANE: I have received from United States Attorney McNab, of San Francisco, his report upon the letter of Mr. Sidney V. Smith, of that city, to you, of the 24th of April, asking that the district attorney be directed to dismiss the indictment against Mr. Smith.

The report of the district attorney clearly shows the existence of a conspiracy among several officers and directors of the Western Fuel Co. to defraud the United States and the accomplishment of the object of that conspiracy, so that the United States lost in several ways a large sum.

The district attorney states that in his opinion there was sufficient evidence to justify the indictment of Mr. Smith and Mr. Bruce and other directors of the company, and that the case should be submitted to a trial jury.

Upon the facts stated in the district attorney's report I thoroughly agree with him, and have therefore directed him to proceed to trial against all the defendants.

Faithfully, yours,
J. C. MCREYNOLDS,
Attorney General.

Mr. KAHN. But Mr. Lane's telegram from Mr. McClatchy in regard to the prompt prosecution of the Diggs and Caminetti white-slave cases is not in the papers submitted by the committee to the House. Was it, too, of such a character that it was incompatible with the public interest to have printed it? Is it not a fact that it was not in the files at all? There is no reply in the files from the Attorney General to Mr. Lane regarding the McClatchy telegram after he had heard from Mr. McNab about the white-slave cases. I repeat, Mr. Lane, according to the records presented by the Judiciary Committee to this House, is left in the awkward attitude of having sent to the Attorney General the letter of a wealthy director of a powerful corporation asking that his case be nolprossed, but as having failed to send to the Attorney General the powerful telegram of a prominent editor of a Democratic newspaper in California, in which that editor urged the prompt prosecution of the two violators of the white-slave law who had such powerful political backing behind them. It is an injustice to Mr. Lane to let this record stand as it is. It is only fair to Mr. Lane that these papers should be supplied before any action is taken to lay this pending resolution on the table. I repeat, I have positive assurances that Mr. McClatchy's telegram was sent to the Attorney General's office by Mr. Lane. It should be in the files in this case.

On page 11 of the report of the committee is a telegram from Mr. S. W. Finch to George F. Mikkelson, Esq., which reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF SPECIAL COMMISSIONER FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF THE WHITE-SLAVE TRAFFIC, Baltimore, Md., May 20, 1913.

GEORGE F. MIKKELSON, Esq.,
Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MIKKELSON: Referring to our conversation of yesterday, I would state that I find we wired Special Agent Herrington in reference to the white-slave case prosecuted in the northern district of California wherein the transportation was by means of an automobile. Mr. Herrington probably referred this telegram to the United States attorney, who for that reason sent you the wire concerning the Caminetti and Diggs case.

Yours, very truly,
S. W. FINCH,
Special Commissioner.

167096-2

Note the concluding sentence. Where is the wire that the United States attorney sent concerning the Caminetti and Diggs cases? It is not in the files presented to this House by the Committee on the Judiciary.

On May 17 Mr. McNab sent to the Attorney General his first answer to the telegram of the Attorney General of May 16 regarding a full report in the Diggs and Caminetti cases. That telegram reads as follows:

7W 0 27 G. R.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., May 17, 1913.

ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.:

Answering your wire, full report testimony Diggs-Caminetti case will be forwarded to you at once. Regard case as aggravated one.

McNAB,
United States Attorney.

On May 20 he sent his second telegram in answer to the Attorney General's telegram of May 16. It reads as follows:

[The Western Union Telegraph Co.]

P. M. 7.46

Received at 120 A. S. D. 134 Govt. rate.

P. O., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., May 20, 1913.

ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.:

In your wire of May 16 you direct no further affirmative action against Diggs and Caminetti under white-slave indictment until directed by you and ask for report. Full report testimony mailed you to-day. I desire to know if your direction is intended also as instruction to refrain from setting for trial indictment against Diggs and his attorney, Harris, for conspiracy to suborn perjury in same cases. These cases all on calendar for setting before Judge Farrington, of Nevada, who comes by request to try these and other cases. Judge Van Fleet reluctantly granted request for two weeks' continuance and notified counsel for defendant in court that cases must be disposed of in June, owing to peculiarly flagrant circumstances of all cases. Respectfully ask earliest practical reply.

McNAB,
United States Attorney.

7.44 p. m.

In his second telegram—in answer to the Attorney General's telegram of May 16—Mr. McNab propounds this inquiry to the Department of Justice:

I desire to know if your direction is intended also as instruction to refrain from setting for trial indictment against Diggs and his attorney Harris for conspiracy to suborn perjury in the same cases.

Where is the answer of the Attorney General's office to that query? Was it ever sent? If it was sent, why is it not among the papers in this file? If it was not sent, is that the way the Attorney General's office does business? This was a pertinent inquiry, and surely a proper inquiry from a United States attorney asking for information from the Department of Justice as to the course he is to pursue in a certain case ought to evoke some answer from the Department of Justice.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Do I understand that Diggs and one of his counsel were indicted for perjury or subornation of perjury?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. In this case?

Mr. KAHN. Growing out of the prosecutions in these cases.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield the gentleman 15 minutes more. If the gentleman will permit an inquiry, the question submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin is fully answered in the letter of the district attorney to the Attorney General, which the Judiciary Committee and the Democratic Members of the House suppressed.

Mr. KAHN. The Committee on the Judiciary expressed some misapprehension that some of these papers——

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman is in error. There was no letter of that kind suppressed by anybody.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will allow me to print it in the RECORD, we will put it in with a full explanation in the letter itself which the committee suppressed.

Mr. CLAYTON. They are all before the House.

Mr. MANN. It was in the files transmitted to the Judiciary Committee, but not reported to the House.

Mr. KAHN. The situation is as the gentleman from Illinois has expressed it.

The committee in its report expresses apprehension that the publication of some of the papers or some parts of some of these papers in the file might be incompatible with the public interest. It refers in particular to the statement of facts in the case contained in the report of United States Attorney McNab to the Attorney General under date of May 21, 1913, and yet this report has been printed in almost its entirety in the newspapers not only here in Washington but even in California. I believe McNab's report should have been printed in full by the committee. Its contents were generally known not alone by the defendants but by the citizens and residents of Sacramento, where the defendants and their victims had been living. There is nothing therein, in my opinion, that is incompatible with the public interest. The publication of the report in full by the committee would have shown that Mr. McNab was fully justified in his attitude, and I therefore ask that this report be printed in full as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LLOYD). The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to print in the RECORD the report of Mr. McNab.

Mr. CLAYTON. I would like to hear what the gentleman's request is; there were so many talking near me I did not hear him.

Mr. KAHN. The report of Mr. McNab, May 21. It has been printed in almost its entirety in the Washington papers, the California papers, and some of the New York papers.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. The report is as follows:

MAY 21, 1913.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of your telegram of the 16th instant, in which you direct me to forward to you a statement of the facts in the cases pending here against Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti, and in which you say that you wish no further affirmative action taken until directed by you.

THE INDICTMENTS.

The defendants Diggs and Caminetti are jointly indicted in this district for conspiracy to violate the white-slave traffic act in inducing two young women, Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris, to go from Sacramento, in the State and northern district of California, to Reno, in the State of Nevada, and to secure transportation for them to said place for immoral purposes, viz, that the young women should live with them as their concubines and mistresses, etc.

In addition to the conspiracy indictments, each defendant is charged in a separate indictment with a direct violation of the act, Diggs with having induced the Warrington girl to go and with having furnished transportation for her, and Caminetti with having been guilty of the same acts with regard to the Norris girl.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The testimony before the grand jury was not taken down. It was as follows: The defendant Diggs was a draftsman in the office of the State capitol in Sacramento. He is married and has two young children. He comes of a rich and locally powerful family, and his record has more than once brought that family into disgrace. But a short time before the actions hereinafter narrated he was involved in a forgery charge, and for a long time, by common repute easily substantiated by evidence, he maintained what has been denominated as a "private harem" at his rooms in a downtown block in Sacramento. Here, according to charges laid before me, he enticed many young women to go to serve his immoral purposes. Caminetti was his bosom companion. The defendant Caminetti has a vicious reputation for seducing young girls, and I have shocking instances which I can produce to establish this fact.

The two girls in question, both of whom are about 19 years of age, come of most respectable families. Marsha Warrington is the only daughter of the agent of the Santa Fe Railroad; Lola Norris is the only daughter of a retired business man of Sacramento. The girls had been reared in beautiful home surroundings and had only a short time before been permitted freely to attend social functions. Owing to certain clerical work done by one of the girls about the State capitol, the young women became acquainted with Diggs and Caminetti, who rapidly ingratiated themselves into their good graces. The girls allowed themselves to be led into indiscretions. They were induced to go on auto rides, and finally clandestinely to go to wine suppers at a free-and-easy, but outwardly respectable, French restaurant. After going with the young women for some months the two defendants, who had determined to entice the girls away from home and take them to another State, began a systematic campaign of coercion and inducement to get them to flee the State with them. They told the young women that Mrs. Diggs and Mrs. Caminetti had found out about their relations and had procured warrants for their arrest from the juvenile court and were only awaiting the appropriate time to serve them. Repeatedly they were told that Chief of Police Johnson held warrants for their arrest, and that they were being shadowed night and day; that they would be taken into custody some night on their return home; that Mrs. Diggs and Mrs. Caminetti were relentless and intended to expose the whole matter, and that the families of the girls would be disgraced and ruined; that the matter had been given secretly to a leading morning paper, and that the girls' pictures were about to be published with lurid details of their escapades; that the only way to save the girls from disgrace was secretly to leave the city and go to another State, where they would acquire a residence; the men would divorce their wives and marry the girls, etc. This is only a brief résumé of the countless devices invented by the young men to prey upon the sensibilities of the girls, and all of which were unfolded by the young victims to the grand jury. The young women were in absolute terror. They repeatedly appealed to the defendants to allow them to remain at home and not to disgrace them, and begged to be allowed to unbosom their indiscretions to their parents and have their advice. The defendants had a powerful influence over them and never permitted a day to go by, after their planned journey, without impressing the uttermost necessity of their going and for secrecy. After several meetings at which the journey was proposed the four met by appointment at the Saddlerock Restaurant, in Sacramento, and the trip was then definitely decided upon. The girls bitterly reproached the men for their plight and entreated them to be allowed to remain at home. The four went to the Southern Pacific Depot in Sacramento and the men arranged for the transportation. Caminetti gave Lola Norris $20 to get her ticket, but at the station it was agreed between the men that Diggs should purchase all the tickets for the moment, and that he and Caminetti should subsequently settle between themselves, each man to pay for himself and for one of the young women. While awaiting the overland train at midnight the Warrington girl again rebelled, and finally refused to go, saying that she was convinced that there must be some trick back of it and that there could not be any charges pending against them; that while she had been indiscreet, she wanted to go back to her parents and make a clean breast of it. The young men taunted her and dared her, until finally both young women boarded the train and then, according to their testimony, evidently for the first time, abandoned all hope of going back and threw themselves in despair in with the plans of the men with whom they felt they had now cast their lot. The defendants had secured but one stateroom, and Diggs induced the Warrington girl to sleep with him; the Norris girl occupied the other berth with Caminetti.

Up to this time, according to the uncontradicted evidence, Diggs had been criminally intimate with Miss Warrington for a few weeks; the Norris girl had never had intercourse with a man in her life before this trip to Reno, and evidently did not have on the train, as will be shown hereafter.

On arrival at Reno in the early morning the party went to the Riverside Hotel, where Diggs registered for himself and Miss Warrington as "Enright and wife"; Caminetti for himself and Miss Norris by another name "and wife," all from "Los Angeles, Cal." They were assigned to bedrooms, Diggs and Miss Warrington occupying one room and Caminetti and Miss Norris the other. According to the testimony of the young women, they were wholly in the hands of their male companions. They had never been away from home or their parents before and felt that they were powerless to save themselves. They had no definite aim nor did they definitely know where the men were going to take them. Shortly after their arrival the men went to a real estate agent, secured a list of furnished cottages, and rented one. They then paid their bill at the hotel, and asking the clerk about the trains for Salt Lake stated they would walk to the depot rather than go by the bus. Instead of going to the depot they took the girls to the cottage they had secured. They then ordered a stock of provisions and such appurtenances of housekeeping as kitchen aprons and the like. There were two bedrooms in the house. Diggs and Miss Warrington slept in one bedroom, Caminetti and Miss Norris in the other. There they repeatedly had sexual intercourse. This, as suggested, is the first time that Miss Norris had ever had complete sexual intercourse. Her hymen was broken and her gown and bed linen were besmeared with blood that followed the first successful sexual act. The linen is in my possession. Appealing to the men to know what was to be done with them, the young women were told that their ruin was complete; that they would not desert them, but that the young women were to continue to live with them as their mistresses, and that they would take them to Salt Lake, where they would go into a "house." Whether this was to be a house of prostitution or a house where their shame would be that of private mistresses was not made clear to them except by inference. The grand jury had ample evidence before it in these statements to decide that the intent was to put them in a public place of prostitution; the purpose to keep them as mistresses was of course overwhelmingly proved and can not of course be denied.

The party was traced, and early in the morning of a subsequent day was caught in the house. An old-time friend of the Warrington and Norris families, Martin Beasley, accompanied the chief of police to the cottage. The men, half dressed, came to the door. They denied their identity. Beasley entered the house and called the girls by name. They rushed into his arms, sobbing pitifully, and begged to be taken home. They would not suffer themselves to leave Beasley and kept begging to be taken home, their chief fear being that their parents would never receive them and that on their return to Sacramento they would be taken into custody by the juvenile court as threatened by the defendants. Whenever they were in company of the men they were completely under their influence. They had been coached to say that there had been no breach of the sexual relation, etc., and tried for a time, when in the company of the men, to keep up the pretense. Released from their association they poured out their story of shame with the utmost freedom and every evidence of penitence.

Diggs, when arrested and taken to the station, turned to the young women and said, in the presence of several witnesses: "Now, remember, girls, it is up to you whether we go to the pen or not." Later, to an officer of his acquaintance, he boastingly stated that had he been given a few hours' start the party never would have been caught; that he had a friend, whose name we have secured, who had a ranch near Reno and from whom he could have procured all the funds he wanted; that then he and Caminetti were to take the girls to Salt Lake, where they could not have been found and where they could use the girls for their purpose.

The defendants, immediately after their arrest, affected to treat the matter lightly and then defiantly. They were secretly taken from the train and brought into Sacramento by auto to avoid lynching by the enraged citizens. Defendants secured counsel; among these is Charles Harris, of the Sacramento bar. He and Diggs immediately set about to defeat justice by corrupting a witness. Diggs wrote an appealing letter to Miss Warrington, under an assumed name, urging her to stand by a certain agreed story he had drilled her in while in Reno. The letter is in my possession. Then he and his attorney, Mr. Harris, met in the latter's office. They called on the telephone Miss Nellie Barton, a most estimable young girl of about 18 years, whom they knew to be a very intimate friend of Miss Warrington. Insisting that she could help Miss Warrington out of serious trouble, Mr. Harris prevailed upon Miss Barton to come to his office. On entering she found Mr. Diggs with Mr. Harris. They told her that if Mr. Diggs should be convicted Miss Warrington would also go to the penitentiary, and asked her if she would be willing to assist Miss Warrington out of that danger by taking a message to her. Miss Barton's parents were in quarantine for fever, and she had no one upon whom to rely for advice. On the urgent representation that Miss Warrington would go to prison and that she could save her Miss Barton was prevailed upon to call Miss Warrington on Mr. Harris's phone to arrange a meeting with her. The mother answering said Miss Warrington was ill, but would, of course, be glad to see her friend at the house. Harris and Diggs then drew a diagram of the Reno cottage and impressed upon Miss Barton that she must have Miss Warrington testify that the two young women slept in one room and the defendants in another; that the girls purchased their own tickets; and, on Mr. Harris's advice, she was to swear at the trial that she could not remember who paid for the Pullman reservation, as he "regarded that as immaterial, and it would look better to concede something and not make it look too strong." The bewildered girl left their office and called upon Miss Warrington and rehearsed the whole story. Miss Warrington repudiated the suggestion, and said she would frankly tell the whole truth in court. Miss Barton and her father then placed the whole matter before the grand jury. The grand jury has indicted Harris and Diggs for conspiracy to suborn perjury.

The representations made by Caminetti and Diggs that the girls were under suspicion and might be arrested were false.

The plan of the defendants was to take them to another State and live with them as their mistresses and, the evidence indicates, to put them into prostitution when they were through with them.

The results have been most unfortunate. Mrs. Caminetti, a young and faithful wife and mother, with a 5-weeks old babe, has been cast adrift in the world without a home, and has gone back to the mountains in Tuolumne County to start life over again.

Mrs. Diggs, with her children, must either take back the husband who has betrayed her or fight out the matter of securing a living alone.

Miss Warrington has given birth to a dead fetus as a result of her relations with Diggs and the fearful strain under which she labored.

Mrs. Norris is in despair and her reason is threatened. Both the Warrington and Norris families are left in a situation too painful to contemplate. The parents are eager for prosecution.

When this matter first came up many of the leading citizens, including the district attorney of Sacramento, appealed to this office. Not only was it to my mind a clear violation of the white-slave traffic act, but no State law could afford adequate remedy. Furthermore, if it could, I was assured by scores of the best men of Sacramento that the money of the Diggs family would corrupt any local jury that could be secured, and numerous instances were brought to my attention in which this appears to have been true. This prediction was followed by attempts of Diggs and Harris to corrupt one of the principal witnesses for the Government. I may add that I have the active assistance of the district attorney's office at Sacramento.

The friends of defendants are reported to have stated repeatedly that they could "easily fix the case"; that they had too much money and too much influence to command to cause them to worry. This seems to have come principally from the Diggs end of the case. I have not heard that Caminetti has made any such assertion. Caminetti is the son of Senator Caminetti, of the State senate, a man for whom I have high respect and keen pity. I have had a conference with Mr. Howe, of the Sacramento bar, representing the defendants, who stated to me that Mr. Caminetti would in all probability plead guilty. At Senator Caminetti's request I continued the setting of the case two weeks, as he stated that he desired to confer with me, but he did not call, and I heard no more from him.

No case in this part of the State has brought forth such universal condemnation; no case has so aroused the sense of public decency or called forth such bitter strictures from the press of California. The press, public, and bar of northern California are giving the Department of Justice more vigorous support in this case than any other this office has ever undertaken.

I, of course, have no means of knowing what appeals or representations of facts may be made to the department at Washington, but I sincerely trust that I may be permitted to immediately submit this case to a trial jury. It was on the calendar on May 19 ready to be set for the month of June. Acting on your instructions, I continued the cases two weeks; but in view of the fact that Judge Farrington, of Nevada, is to be here with the expectation that the case will be tried in early June, I most earnestly and respectfully ask that you wire me permission to set the case as planned. Judge Van Fleet wishes the case disposed of and so stated in open court. For these reasons I respectfully ask for your directions by wire.

I trust that you will not misunderstand the unfortunate situation which will arise here if the case is permitted to go over from week to week. The well-known political prominence of the defendants' relatives will subject this office to the public criticism that this office is unduly favoring these defendants, and I know that nothing is closer to your wishes than that this office is kept free from such strictures.

I trust you will pardon this suggestion, based upon an intimate knowledge of the conditions in this State: That should the department direct that no further affirmative steps be taken in the case I should be compelled in utter discouragement of spirit to give up any attempt to enforce the law or maintain the prestige of this office, which we have so sedulously striven to enhance. Such result, I know only too well, the department does not for a moment contemplate, and for this reason I have stated all facts at greater length than perhaps was necessary, so that you may see the entire situation.

Very respectfully,

JOHN L. McNAB,
United States Attorney.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KAHN. I decline to be further interrupted at this point. I have only a few minutes and I want to conclude.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary also presents a letter from Mr. Clayton Herrington, which is printed on pages 11 and 12 of their report. It reads as follows:

5783. Report made by C. Herrington. Period for which made: March 24, 1913. Place where made: San Francisco. Date when made: March 25, 1913.

Title of case and offense charged or nature of matter under investigation: United States v. Farley Drew Caminetti and Maury I. Diggs, white-slave case.

Statement of operations, evidence collected, names and addresses of persons interviewed, places visited, etc.:

GENERAL PASSENGER AGENT SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO.,
Flood Building, San Francisco.

SIR: Will you please secure the signed portions of tickets sold at your depot ticket office, Sacramento, Cal., and used on train which left Sacramento for Reno at 12.40 a. m. Monday morning, March 10, 1913? These tickets were bought by Maury I. Diggs for himself and Mr. Caminetti, Martha Warrington, and Lola Norris. The party traveled together, occupying the same compartment in the standard Pullman on that train. This may enable you to identify these particular tickets.

I would also like to have the name and address of the conductor who handled this train into Reno; also the name and address of the Pullman conductor and Pullman porter of that particular car.

The information is needed by the Government, and I would appreciate it if you would secure this at the earliest possible moment, using the wire if necessary.

Respectfully,
CLAYTON HERRINGTON.

* * * * * * *

Copy of this report furnished to: Mr. John L. McNab, San Francisco, Cal.; Special Commissioner Sid. Finch, Baltimore, Md.

It simply shows in which direction Mr. Herrington was trying to get evidence, but the statement of the case by Mr. Herrington is carefully omitted from the papers submitted in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary. In speaking of Clayton Herrington's statement, the report says:

Your committee is also of the opinion, and so report, that the reports of the special agent of the Department of Justice should not be published at this time, because incompatible with the public interest, except the copy of the letter signed "Clayton Herrington" on the first page thereof, which copy is hereto attached.

I presume that letter is the one to the general passenger agent of the Southern Pacific Co. that has just been read. As a matter of fact, the statement of the Attorney General submitted to the President on June 24 quotes extensively from the report of Mr. Herrington, dated March 26, 1913. In order to bolster up the position of the Attorney General for having ordered the postponement of the white-slave cases, Mr. Herrington's report is not incompatible with the public interest, but when that report is called for under a resolution of the House it is suddenly discovered by the Committee on the Judiciary and by the Attorney General that to publish that report would be incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say in passing in reference to Mr. Herrington that he, too, sent a red-hot telegram of resignation, but you on that side have not yet found out what office he is going to run for. I suppose you will assert he did that from ulterior motives also and that he, too, was looking for political preferment.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am willing to admit it.

Mr. KAHN. I say that you will be saying that, but nobody will believe it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Nobody has made any such charges, but I am willing to admit it.

Mr. KAHN. I said that you probably would charge it.

After Mr. McNab's resignation had been accepted, namely, on June 24, he sent a letter to the Attorney General, which is as follows:

[Copy.]

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
San Francisco, June 24, 1913.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have your letter of June 17, 1913, "WRH 165862-9," in which you state to me that you do not consider the letter addressed by Sidney V. Smith to the Secretary of the Interior admissible against the other defendants in the trial of the Western Fuel Co. case.

I thoroughly understand that the declaration of a conspirator is not admissible against his coconspirators unless the declaration is made during the continuance of the conspiracy. However, you have been advised that the Western Fuel Co. directors have all been indicted again since the writing of your letter, and the letter of Sidney V. Smith is admissible. Furthermore, it would have been admissible against Smith himself as an individual defendant. It matters very little whether I take issue with the department now upon these matters or not, but I can not refrain from saying in closing my connection with this case that the policy of the Attorney General's office in instructing a United States attorney as to what evidence he shall or shall not use tends to the discouragement of the service. No man who cares a rap for his position is going to conduct a case along lines suggested by somebody else. If evidence is admissible at all, and tends to prove the guilt of a defendant, it ought to be admitted so long as its introduction sustains the Government and tends to convict the guilty. This, as I say, is written subsequent to my resignation and can in no wise affect any of my future conduct, but you may be glad to know that the United States attorneys in the various districts feel that they are crippled whenever suggestions as to how they should or should not conduct cases are sent to them by the department.

Respectfully,
J. L. MCNAB,
United States Attorney.

There is a world of meat in the suggestion that the policy of the Attorney General's office in instructing a United States attorney as to what evidence he shall and shall not use tends to the discouragement of the service. It is true that no man who cares a rap for his position is going to conduct a case along the lines suggested by somebody else. It is true that if evidence is admissible at all and tends to prove the guilt of a defendant, it ought to be admitted so long as its introduction sustains the Government and tends to convict the guilty. That letter is another evidence of the disinterestedness of Mr. McNab and the patriotic motives that impelled him to send his resignation to the President of the United States when he was ordered, over his repeated protests, to postpone until autumn the trial of these cases.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the people of the United States are determined to wipe out white slavery. Any prosecuting officer who fails in his duty in that regard will meet the just resentment of the people of the United States. Congress has appropriated large sums for the vigorous enforcement of the white-slave laws. Since the publicity that has been given to these prosecutions of Diggs and Caminetti under the provisions of the Mann White-Slave Act, it has been announced here in Washington that the law aids blackmail; that it has been assailed by the authorities here; that the cases brought under its provisions swamp our officials, and so forth. What bears the earmarks of an inspired article against the law appeared in the columns of the Washington Post of June 30 last. But such tactics will not succeed. The Mann white-slave law is one of the most popular on our statute books. It has come to stay. The people demand that prosecutions for its violation shall continue.

Mr. Speaker, instead of having been blamed and condemned, Mr. McNab should have been commended by the President of the United States. If the President had called upon him to withdraw his resignation and proceed with the trial of these cases, he would have made himself infinitely stronger with his countrymen. I believe he would have even aroused patriotism to the highest pitch of enthusiasm by such an approval of the spirit of fair play and the maintenance of official integrity. Instead of that he said one thing to Mr. McReynolds, but did the very thing that Mr. McNab had wanted done.

And how is it to be done, Mr. Speaker? By special counsel who will be paid large fees for doing the very thing that the United States attorney would have performed as a matter of duty. Oh, the administration has not come out of this controversy with honor and credit, and it is small wonder that the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS and Mr. MCKELLAR] did not desire any discussion of these cases. Small wonder that they did not desire the light of publicity on the conduct of the Attorney General and the President of the United States in this matter.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LLOYD). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I have only a few minutes left. After I have concluded, if I have the time, I shall be glad to.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice above all others must be above suspicion. It has long been believed by the masses that there is one kind of law for the rich and the politically powerful in this country and another kind of law for the poor, the friendless, and the weak. The action of the department in the Diggs-Caminetti cases and the Western Fuel Co. cases would seem to stamp these charges as true. Mr. McNab did the country a signal service when he sent his forceful resignation to the President of the United States. He did the country a signal service when he refused to be a party to a program that would have given verisimilitude to the statement that Diggs, Caminetti, and the Western Fuel Co. directors, being rich or politically powerful, could secure delay and thus possibly defeat justice. The Department of Justice and the President of the United States in the final analysis were compelled to accept his recommendations that these cases be tried promptly, but wherever there are honest, patriotic men and pure, chaste women in the United States they applaud and approve his course despite the gratuitous and undeserved reprimand of the President of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LLOYD). The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from California, as I understand it, asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. I think that in this case there ought not to be any revision.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California modifies his request and asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know the reason for the objection on the part of the gentleman from Illinois. What is the distinction between revising and extending?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, under unanimous consent to revise his remarks in the RECORD, the gentleman from California might change them. I am not saying that he would, but that would give a Member the right to leave out or add to, whatever he might see fit, which would not be right in a case of this character, I think.

Mr. KAHN. I have no intention of doing that.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the gentleman has.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] extending his remarks in the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I was one of those who interposed an objection to unanimous consent and who made a point of order against the consideration of this case in the House, I feel that it would be proper for me at this time to give my reasons for so doing.

I want to say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that I have had a mere passing acquaintance with the distinguished Attorney General of the United States. Though he comes from the same State from which I come, I never had the pleasure of his acquaintance until he became the Attorney General of the United States. I have had no conversation with him about this matter, directly or indirectly, or with anybody else connected with this administration. I want to say here that in interposing points of order, aiding my friend here [Mr. BYRNS] by objections, it was upon my own initiative, and I alone am responsible and have no apologies to make.

I believe I will take that back, Mr. Speaker. I feel that I ought to apologize. I have not felt like apologizing before, but since listening to the labored effort of my distinguished friend from California and knowing how eloquent he is on ordinary occasions, how able in argument, after listening to the kind of speech that he made to-day, I feel that I owe this House an apology for not letting him unburden himself of it several days ago.

And, Mr. Speaker, from the daily papers and from the immense amount of manuscript I have seen the gentleman bring in here from day to day when he expected to make a speech, I was convinced that the Mexican controversy was to be nothing as compared with the explosion that he was going to make in the Caminetti case. I thought the great tariff and currency questions were going to be put out of business in this session of Congress by reason of the explosion to be made by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. But what have we heard? Why, Mr. Speaker, if we were trying this as a lawsuit before either court or jury and I occupied the other side, I would be content to submit the case to the court without further argument. But I want to say here that I am glad of one thing, namely, that the House has at last found out what reason the gentleman had in wanting to discuss the case and what was the cause of the whole trouble. He says it was because the Attorney General of the United States did not know McNab.

My God, Mr. Speaker, what a charge to bring against the Attorney General of the United States! He did not know McNab—McNab, the great statesman! Why, no man in this House can be so ignorant that he did not know McNab. McNab, the great reformer; McNab, the great publicist; McNab, the great patriot. Why, the children in California cry out, "We know McNab." The Hottentots in the far-off seas constantly ring with applause of McNab. Why, they tell me the wild animals in Africa that were chased by Mr. Roosevelt some time ago all unite in praise and commendation, to use the words of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], of the great McNab.

The Attorney General of the United States, this unknown man from the little old State of Tennessee, is charged with the foul crime of not knowing McNab. Well, if it is parliamentary, I would like to know myself who in the blank is McNab? As it is not parliamentary, I will not use the word. I do not suppose, until the gentleman got to talking about it, or until this last telegram was read, that there were 15 people outside of California that ever heard of McNab. I am one of the ignorant kind myself. When I found the Attorney General was being abused for not knowing McNab, this great attorney in California, it seemed to me it was time to prevent an exposure of such ignorance on his part as to that.

But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California says that my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and I declined to allow the light to come in. What light? Has the gentleman said anything that would make this House change its vote on that resolution? I doubt if there is a gentleman in this House who is not disappointed at the failure of an explosion over on the other side.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to give my reasons, and I think they have been substantiated by the speech that has been made here. The political harangue against the administration that has been made here this morning convinces me that my friend and myself were right when we interposed an objection. The idea of taking up five hours of time of this House in discussing whether the Attorney General should postpone a case for two or three months. The mere postponement of a case does not mean that there will be any harm done or injustice done to anybody. The majesty of the law is certain to be upheld when the department tries the case, and yet five hours of time of this House is taken up.

And in spite of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the great Committee on the Judiciary of this House has unanimously reported—Republicans, Bull Moose, and Democrats—that there was nothing in this resolution, and that it ought to go to the table, why should we waste time in listening to the tirade of abuse about such an inconsequential and chinquapin point as the postponement of a case for two or three months, when no harm was done—a case of petty politics? That is all.

There is another matter that has arisen here, and for bringing it up I want to thank my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], whom, I want to say, I admire most extravagantly and have admired ever since I have been here.

Mr. MANN. That must be something awful. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCKELLAR. There is an objection over here. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, but I am not going to heed it. The gentleman from Illinois stated this morning that there is something more in this matter than the Caminetti case. He asks whether the gag law shall be applied in this House. I want to call the gentleman's attention to what he said a day or two ago. He stated to this House that we ought to sell the courthouses, the Federal courthouses, of this country. Why? Because the Attorney General had directed the postponement of a case in far-off California about two months and a half. Oh, I can not believe that the gentleman believes any such "rot" as that; and when I use the word "rot" I use it in quotations, because that is a favorite word of his. And I want to say that I do not believe he would have given to this House any such "rot" as that unless he had been excited. He would not have said that this great Government ought to sell its courthouses, forsooth, because there had been a short postponement of a single case.

But be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that another reason why I was opposed to hearing this case at this time was because I did not believe that this House ought to usurp the functions of the courts. What jurisdiction has this House got over the Caminetti case or any other case pending in the courts? If those cases are improperly tried, if justice is not done in those cases, then is the time for this House to act, but certainly not before they are tried.

I want to call the attention of gentlemen on that side of the House to this fact, that a distinguished gentleman in your party a few years ago—President Roosevelt—undertook to prejudge a case that was then pending in the courts by charging that the defendants were "undesirable citizens." Did that statement have any effect? No. It had no more effect than what we shall say here to-day. It was regarded as political buncombe, and that was all it was, and that is what this matter is going to be. I believe in the courts. I do not believe like the gentleman from Illinois we ought to sell our courthouses, because I believe the courts are the bulwark of our liberties.

I want to say here and now that I believe that the white-slave act is one of the most beneficent acts that this body ever passed, and I believe that the courts ought to enforce that act in every case, and if they do not do it, then will be the time for this body to act, and no objection shall then be heard from me.

In the next place, Mr. Speaker, there was another reason why I objected. There is no one in this House who has more admiration for the ability and skill and eloquence of the gentleman from Illinois than I have. It happens that he is in a hopeless minority in this House. We Democrats have about two-thirds or more, and as I understood the gentleman from Illinois the other day—it may be I saw it in the public print as coming from him—he said this House would do no business until this debate was allowed by the majority. I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois, however great his ability, however high his standing in this House or any other one Member of this House has the right to say what business shall and what business shall not be transacted by this House. In the short time I have been here I have had measures in which I was interested, and which measures should have been passed by this House, held up by a point of order by the gentleman from Illinois. I notice he makes points of order whenever he likes, and his points of order are always taken as a matter of course; but when anyone else exercises his right to make a point of order the gentleman from Illinois thinks it is a dreadful thing. It pleased me greatly last week to find that in spite of the gentleman's protest that we would do no business in this House, it did do business. My action was a protest against the dictatorial tactics of the gentleman from Illinois. I realize fully his greatness. I admire his splendid ability, but I think it is unfortunate that we members of the majority let him lord it over us as he so frequently does, and I for one want to say now I am unwilling that he should do it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will, if I have time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McKELLAR. If I have time I will, but my time is nearly out. No; I decline to yield.

Mr. MANN. Then I will yield a minute to the gentleman.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. MANN. I desire to say that the greatest strain I have ever had put upon me in the House, so far as influence was concerned, was when I was persuaded to help the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] in passing a bill for a bridge at Memphis. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and I remember that the gentleman from Illinois said he was just as much in favor of it as I was, and that is the way I got it through. It was a railroad project. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for that favor.

Mr. MANN. That was the greatest strain I ever had put upon myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. While I am on that subject I want to say I have examined the records somewhat, and found that the gentleman from Illinois has not always been so solicitous about prosecutions in the Department of Justice. In 1910 there was a provision before this House appropriating $500,000 for the use of the Attorney General's office for the prosecution of the trusts, and a proviso was offered appropriating $100,000 of this sum for the prosecution of the Steel Trust in particular, and the gentleman from Illinois was right there on his feet with a point of order against this worthy proviso. He was unwilling that the Department of Justice should prosecute the great Steel Trust. He was unwilling to furnish the sinews of war for such a prosecution. But, oh, what a hullabaloo he has raised in this House when a Democratic Attorney General postponed a case for two or three months in California. Where was the gentleman's voice in favor of prosecuting the violators of the law then? In this connection I might ask where were the voices of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from California when the late Paul Morton was under fire in the Roosevelt administration? He was charged by the newspapers for taking rebates for a railroad company, of which he was the president, in violation of the Sherman law. And yet these gentlemen were as silent as the grave about it. But when a case is postponed merely—no wrong done to the cause of justice and no wrong done to anyone, simply a matter of routine business—we find our distinguished friend using this chinquapin matter as an excuse for slinging mud at the administration. But when it comes to the prosecution of the Steel Trust the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is on his feet with an objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not now, because I have not time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will submit the RECORD on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, it is easy for anyone to criticize. At the same time we all know that the three most prolific sources of criticism are ignorance and malice and politics. You can stand on any prominent street corner of this or any other city, where loafers congregate, and hear men, who have never done anything in their lives except gossip about their neighbors, criticize the President of the United States, criticize the Senate, criticize this House, and even criticize the Supreme Court. The fact they know nothing about the matter concerning which the criticism is made does not deter these worthy gentlemen in the least from making the most caustic criticism, as we all know. The criticism we have heard of the President and the Attorney General to-day must remind us of this street-corner, hotel-lobby criticism.

I want to say to you gentlemen on the other side of this aisle, you who are criticizing our able and fearless President, our upright, vigorous, and splendid Attorney General, that when the records of every man on that side of the House shall have passed away forever from the memory of man the name and fame of Woodrow Wilson will stand out as a shining and splendid example of one of America's greatest Presidents. There is no man in this country who has the confidence of the American people to a greater extent than has this kindly but firm and determined President of the United States. And the reason that you gentlemen are barking at him is that he has been a great disappointment to you. You imagined he was but a schoolteacher, and you found him an intellectual giant. You thought he was an untried professor, but you have found him to be a statesman of the highest order of ability. You thought he was a weakling, and you found him strong in righteousness, strong in truth, strong in purpose, and strong in action. You may say what you like about him, but the people of this Nation will not agree with you. They believe he is on their side. They know you are against them. He is able; he is courageous. He knows what the American people have elected him to do, and he is performing the service and performing it well. He has not made a mistake, but hits the bull's-eye every time, whether he charges the insidious lobby or whether he breaks up a worn-out and useless precedent. The darts which you gentlemen are attempting to fling at him and the members of his administration are too weak to hurt and fall harmless at his feet. It is doubtful if he even knows that you are even attempting to hurt him. You might as well be throwing confetti as this kind of Caminetti at him.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] desire to proceed now?

Mr. MURDOCK. I should like to go ahead for about 10 minutes, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. CLAYTON. I had agreed to yield at this time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and if it will suit the gentleman from Kansas I will yield to the gentleman from Texas 10 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I was delighted, about three years ago, when I listened to a speech by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. I did not realize then that the lofty principles he enunciated and the wholesome epigrams to which he gave birth would so suddenly and so certainly change when the shoe shifted to the other foot. I was so convinced of his patriotism and of his lofty purpose in defending public men against muckrakers abroad in the land that I circulated his speech in my district because I thought it was worth while for the youth of the land to know with regard to politics that Presidents and Supreme Courts and public men were generally honest and that muckrakers were generally wrong.

In that delightful speech the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] adverted to what the muckrakers had said of the father of our country. As I now recall, they accused him of using the Continental Army to preserve his tobacco crop and of having committed theft against the Treasury of the United States. I remember distinctly that in this antimuckraking speech of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] he called attention to the fact that the muckrakers of those days had said that Thomas Jefferson, whose hand penned the immortal Declaration of Independence, had defrauded his sister-in-law out of an estate of £10,000 and that he was the father of three negro children. In that same speech the gentleman from California told what the muckrakers had said of Andrew Jackson and what they had said of the immortal Abraham Lincoln. What he said about the muckrakers who traduced Lincoln appealed to me then because it was pathetic. He said:

Mr. Lincoln was so outraged by the obloquies, so stung by the disparagements, his existence was rendered so unhappy, that his life became almost a burden to him. Lamon, his lifelong friend, says that one day he went to the President's office and found him lying on the sofa greatly distressed. Jumping to his feet, he said:

"You know, Lamon, better than any living man that from boyhood up my ambition was to be President; but look at me. I wish I had never been born. I had rather be dead than as President be thus abused in the house of my friends."

My friend from California [Mr. KAHN] then prophesied that what had happened with reference to the muckrakers of other days would happen with reference to the then muckrakers against the then Republican administration—that their memories would rot in forgotten graves.

Now, I have just as little respect for a Democratic muckraker as I have for a Republican muckraker. I am not surprised that muckrakers charged the Father of our Country with defalcation and peculation in office. I am not surprised that muckrakers charged the author of the Declaration of Independence with defrauding an estate. I am not surprised that they broke the heart of the martyred Lincoln and made him rue the day that he was born; but I am surprised that the Congressman from California should lend his voice in this year 1913 to the smallest, most infinitesimal piece of muckraking I have ever heard of. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You know it is bad enough when we turn our committee rooms wide open to a cheap blackmailer like Mulhall, who received $1,500 a year for 10 years, which was four times as much as he was worth. But my friend from California [Mr. KAHN] now wants to open all the newspaper columns, stop all the wheels of progress, and turn the public mind upside down on account of a little fornication case in California. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States is an honest man. The President of the United States was an honest man; the President of the United States will be an honest man. The Supreme Court is all right. The Department of Justice is all right; you are all right; the Congress and the Senate is all right; but, you know, if the gentleman from California and gentlemen on this side continue to make mountains out of mole hills—if we continue to make great important characters out of a $1,500-a-year Mulhall, who sells a Republican House with as much nonchalance one day as he turns over a Democratic House the next day—the gentleman from California will revolutionize and sensationalize this country by this character of proceeding, and I do not know what we will come to.

I do not know anything about the Attorney General of the United States. I think he is an honest man. I think the Attorney General who was in office when the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] made the muckraking speech was an honest man. As I read the history of my country, I do not recollect of an Attorney General of the United States who has not been an honest man. Grant that Mr. McReynolds was honest, grant that he was doing what he could to enforce the laws of his country and do his duty as a public servant, does not my friend from California think he is doing his country an injury, the public service an injury, to use this incident as a petty partisan political advantage? You had better teach the youth of California that McReynolds is honest; that all of our public men do their duty; you had better tell them that Taft was a great and good President; and you had better tell them that Mr. Wilson is the fountain of justice of the administration in this our great Republic; that everything was pure when Taft was at the White House, and that they are pure to-day, when the great New Jerseyan controls the destinies at the other end of the Avenue. Because while you know it is all right, and the Speaker knows that it is all right, and we all know that the country is in the hands of these patriots, you are going to fool a lot of muckrakers and small-headed uplifters into believing what you say, and that the fountain of justice and the administration has grown corrupt in this country, and then you will cry out, as we all will, for the mountains to fall upon us. Because when you teach the citizens of this country to believe that the public service is dishonest, we all, Republicans and Democrats alike, will rue the demagogic expression of partisan advantage that drove us to teach that damnable and pernicious doctrine. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the speech of the gentleman from California, the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee, and that of the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Tennessee said that this debate was buncombe. I think upon second thought he will change his mind. To my mind this debate goes beyond any mere partisan desire to attack or any mere partisan anxiety to defend. I think this debate, more than any previous one in this session, embodies something more than a mere game of battledore and shuttlecock between the political parties. I think the gentlemen here to-day, the gentleman from Texas in particular, have touched intimately upon the gravest thing before this country—popular distrust in the administration of justice.

Attorney General McReynolds first was the choice of President Taft, a Republican. He was latterly the selection of President Wilson, a Democrat. I submit to you that had Attorney General McReynolds been attacked a year ago, he would have been attacked by Democrats, and he would have been defended by Republicans. As it now is he is attacked by the Republicans, and he is defended by the Democrats.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suppose the gentleman desires to be correct. The Attorney General was appointed to office by Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. MURDOCK. Whoever appointed him, he served under President Taft, under the last administration, and the precise thing that I have recited would have taken place. I am not concerned with the partisan proposition in this case, but I say to you that the thinking men and women of the United States are concerned seriously with some of the revelations of conditions in the administration of justice of which these cases are indicative.

You have heard recited at great length the Caminetti case, where privilege did seek special favor in the law. But I think that the Western Fuel case shows as clearly, and in a different way, the same insidious element working in the law. I think the story of Sidney Smith is typical of the time. Sidney Smith has been a practicing attorney for 40 years in San Francisco. He is one of the leading lights of the bar there. He is a man of high repute and much learning. He was a director in the Western Fuel Co. The Western Fuel Co. has a monopoly of the coal business in the harbor of San Francisco. Recently its officers and directors and some of its employees were indicted. The Western Fuel Co. did, among other activities, three things: It imported coal, it exported coal, and it sold coal to the Government. In the indictment found by the grand jury the directors of the Western Fuel Co., its officers, and three employees—who will be brought to answer to the law, depend upon it, as were the sugar employees—were charged with three things: With short weighting the Government on incoming coal imported, thereby lessening the customs duties to be paid; with registering overweights on the coal dispatched in American bottoms, upon which a drawback is permitted, and so depriving the Government of revenue at that point; and also with delivering coal to Government transports in short weights—that is, with short weighting the Government there, the practice alleged to be the weighing of 4 buckets out of every 60 delivered, with those 4 buckets overweighted and the others only partially filled. These manipulations amounted, it is charged, in the aggregate to profits on 60,000 tons of coal.

When the indictment was brought, as shown by the records submitted here, Sidney Smith turned first to the prosecuting attorney and sought to have his case nolled. The district attorney refused to do that. Then Mr. Smith turned to Washington. He wrote a personal letter to Secretary Lane, of the Interior Department, saying that he did not know of the false weights, and asked Mr. Lane to intercede for him and a fellow director, Robert Bruce. Secretary Lane sent that letter of Mr. Smith's to the Attorney General, Mr. McReynolds. Mr. McReynolds at once sent a copy of this letter to Attorney McNab at San Francisco and asked him for his view of the case. Mr. McNab on May 20—and I ask gentlemen to note these dates—wrote back to Mr. McReynolds a full statement of the Western Fuel cases, and thereafter on May 26 Mr. McReynolds wrote to Mr. McNab telling Mr. McNab to proceed with the case against the directors and to make no exception of anybody.

That letter I want to read into the RECORD:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
May 26, 1913.

JOHN L. MCNAB, Esq.,
United States Attorney, San Francisco, Cal.

SIR: I have your letter of the 20th instant, in reply to mine of the 7th, reporting upon the indictment against Sidney V. Smith, Robert Bruce, and others, directors of the Western Fuel Co.

I inclose for your information copy of a letter sent this day to the Secretary of the Interior.

I think there is sufficient evidence to justify the filing of indictment against these two directors, and the question of their guilt should be determined by the petit jury.

Please proceed accordingly.

Respectfully, (Signed) J. C. MCREYNOLDS,
Attorney General.

On May 27, the next day, the Attorney General, Mr. McReynolds, wrote to Secretary of the Interior Lane, saying that he had so instructed Attorney McNab in San Francisco.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has said that the documents and files in the Western Fuel case as submitted are complete. I do not think so. On June 18, 1913, this telegram was sent in cipher to the United States attorney at San Francisco.

[To be sent in cipher.]

JUNE 18, 1913.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
San Francisco, Cal.:

Upon further consideration of matter department feels grave doubt as to guilt of Sidney V. Smith and Robert Bruce, indicted in Western Fuel Co. case. In order to avoid possible injustice, you are instructed to continue case as to them until after the trial of the other three directors who were officers of the company and active in its management. If latter are convicted, copy of proceedings at trial should be sent department in order that it may determine what course should be pursued in regard to the two directors named. Wire receipt.

MCREYNOLDS.

What happened between May 26, when Mr. McNab was ordered to proceed with this prosecution, and June 18, when he was forbidden to proceed with it? The record is silent. What happened in the interim? I think that Attorney General McReynolds owes it to this House and he owes it to the country and to himself to say what occurred between May 26 and June 18 which caused him to send this latter telegram.

Equally significant with this whole proposition and going to the heart of the matter which leads to this debate this afternoon is the attitude of Sidney Smith, a fellow citizen. I am not trying Smith. He asserts his innocence, and I hope he is innocent. But let us consider his action, characteristically responsive to the privilege-seeking spirit of the hour. He was learned in the law. He had practiced for 40 years. He knew the processes of justice in this country, the administration of justice, its usages. And yet, after 40 years of practice, brought face to face with the law, did he ask for speedy, open, public trial? Did he seek an absolving verdict from his peers? Did he ask for vindication? No; he turned for favor; he sought special privilege. He wanted some advantage through the private and personal processes of the law. He sought to nolle.

I say to you gentlemen who speak of muckraking, to you gentlemen who talk about buncombe in a debate of this kind, that the people do not think that this question as to this administration of justice is buncombe. [Applause on the Republican side.] I say to you there is an increasing number of people in this land who believe that there is one way in the law for the influential and another way in the law for the uninfluential. I say to you that the most insistent and earnest demand in this country to-day goes to this matter of the integrity of the administration of justice. I do not believe, and I think this debate to-day evidences it, that there is any relief in this country in this matter in the two old political parties [laughter]—fighting as usual your old sham battle and getting nowhere, as usual, parleying, as you have done for years, with privilege.

Mr. CLAYTON. Which side is the gentleman fighting on?

Mr. MURDOCK. I am fighting on the side that most of the people of the United States will be fighting on.

Mr. CLAYTON. On which side was the gentleman six or eight months ago?

Mr. MURDOCK. On my own side—the side, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, which, if given power, does not propose to parley or compromise with privilege.

Mr. CLAYTON. Were you not fighting with the G. O. P. eight months ago?

Mr. MURDOCK. I was not.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, a year ago.

Mr. MURDOCK. I was not. I have been fighting this thing for years, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. CLAYTON. When did you cease with the G. O. P.?

Mr. MURDOCK. I decline to yield further to the gentleman from Alabama. I want to say to him that the new party, if given power, will fight privilege, will fight it without compromise and without paltering with it.

Mr. DIES. And will never continue a case?

Mr. MURDOCK. And I will say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] that the only way to fight privilege is to make serious war upon it all along the line and not to indulge in a partisan debate over a serious matter of the administration of justice. There was action to be taken in this case, and it should have been taken, and if the Progressive Party had been in power it would have been taken.

I yield 10 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has used 13 minutes, and reserves the balance of his time, and yields 10 minutes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] is recognized.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-seven minutes. How much time did the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]?

Mr. MURDOCK. Ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will not take the 10 minutes.

I have listened to this debate from the time the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] began his remarks until the present, and I feel, as has been well said, that it is not buncombe by any manner of means. It is not a matter of interest only to the people of California. It is not a matter of interest only to the Republican Party, but it is a matter which touches on every issue facing us. At this session of Congress there will be considered a number of important issues. The tariff question has already been considered, and the currency question and many others will come before the Sixty-third Congress.

We have heard and will hear all kinds of champions advocating all kinds of measures as panaceas for the evils of the day, but I say to you that no panacea will cure all the evils in this Nation. No particular measure will deal with all the problems and bring contentment and prosperity to the people. But there is one principle that will guide in the solution of all these problems that will be before this Congress; there is one principle of action which, if carried out, will be sufficient to solve them all, and that is the principle that was advocated by Thomas Jefferson, but which has been broken faith with in this instance by the party which claims him to-day. It is the principle of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. That is a principle big enough to solve all the issues and problems to-day, and that is a principle that is involved in this question under consideration.

Here is a monopoly charged with crime against the Government, and I make the charge and believe it true that whenever you have a monopoly without obligation of public service you will have crime against the Government. That has always been the result of private monopoly without the obligation of public service, and it will always be the same. This is the case of the Western Fuel Co. out in San Francisco, which had a complete monopoly of the coal trade of San Francisco Harbor. It had the business of handling the coal that went into the Government transports, and cheated by overweights. It imported its own coal, and cheated the Government by underweight, thus lessening the duties paid. It exported the coal, and by overweighting cheated the Government again on the drawback. When brought to book for such nefarious methods, the persons connected with it took the course monopoly always takes. They employed the tactics of all monopolies, namely, not to have a contest, not to have a fair trial before their peers, but to use subterranean influence and by means of star-chamber proceedings to secure special privilege and undue advantages.

We see that in this case Sidney V. Smith applied to the prosecutor in his office at San Francisco, and failing there, applied to Washington. We see the apparent result in the two decisions of the Attorney General, when he made a statement on May 26 that there was no reason why this case should not be dealt with at once, and on June 18 gave an order that it should be continued and should be postponed.

That suggests a query, and the report does not answer it. The question is, Why was that action taken by the Attorney General when he had demanded that there should be an immediate trial? There is the vital point of this case. There is a hiatus between these two messages, and in that hiatus is the only important point connected with the Western Fuel case. What is the reason for this change of mind, and why should there be this delay in the administration of justice?

Now, it may be said by some that it would be incompatible with the public interest to answer this question and make it public before Congress. I want to know what makes it incompatible with the public interest? What is the interest of the public in this matter?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania know the name of the Assistant Attorney General who has practical control of all these criminal prosecutions?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The record shows that an assistant by the name of Harr dealt with this particular case.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman know that the Asssitant Attorney General is a Republican, and not a Democrat?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am not dealing with the partisan aspect of this case at all.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman know that fact?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It has nothing to do with the case, as I see it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman think that it has no bearing, when all these matters are submitted to him and upon his dictum these cases are continued? How can the gentleman fairly charge the Democratic Party when the hand of this Republican Asssistant Attorney General is seen in every continuance and in every discontinuace of a prosecution?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I want to assure the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] that I made no charges whatever on partisan grounds. Disclaiming all partisanship in the statement, I contend that there is a widespread feeling, a growing feeling, among the people of this Nation, brought about by many events, that there is one law for the rich and another law for the poor, and that special privilege, by subterranean influences and regardless of partisanship, always goes to the heart of the matter and seeks to secure advantages against the common good. That is what they have tried in this case, and they were successful in securing their desires. That is the point I was making, and I was paying no regard to the partisan side of the affair.

Now, what is this incompatibility with the public interests? What makes full publicity incompatible with the public interests in this question? I would like to know why the public should not have full light and information upon this matter. Why should a committee of this House, the creature of this House, be permitted by its own dictum to say what is incompatible with the public interests and it shall in its wisdom permit the public to see? It seems to me that right there is the question that reaches to the bottom of this matter, and that if this really is a Government in which the people's sovereignty is complete, the people certainly have the right to know about a matter which is so vitally important as a reflection on the administration of justice in this Nation. I believe that the people, sovereigns in power, have the right to know what influences prevented the Attorney General from prosecuting this case as he set out to do at first. I do not believe that if there is anything incompatible with the public interests it is the attempt to conceal the truth.

I wish to disabuse the idea in any gentleman's mind that there is any partisanship in my position on this matter. The people of this country are not declaring that because Mr. McReynolds was in a Republican administration as Assistant Attorney General he was guilty of any crime, or that because he is in the Democratic administration as Attorney General he is guilty of any crime. The people of the country want to know how justice is administered in this Nation. They want to know whether it is really true that we no longer have in force Jefferson's old mandate of "equal rights to all, and special privileges to none." They want to know whether rich men rule the law in this Nation, or if justice leans to the side on which the purse hangs. They want to know what influences have brought about the conditions of to-day, and they will learn that in spite of all the gag rules which this House can enforce upon the membership in an effort to prevent discussion of a question of this kind. The people are determined to know the whole truth, and they will know it in spite of halfway reports which come out from committees, with unanimous motions to lay important matters on the table without discussion.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does the gentleman have any idea what influences were brought to bear on Mr. Roosevelt when he was President of the United States to cause him to consent that the United States Steel Corporation might take over its greatest competitor, the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co.?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is far afield in mentioning things which have nothing whatever to do with this case, when we are considering this point. If the influence of special privilege was brought to bear in that case, it is just as much a matter of condemnation as in this, and no one would attempt to claim, because a man is a party hero or anything of that kind, that he was always right. We are now facing these questions of to-day, in a case where gag action on the part of the majority of this House prevented, for weeks, fair discussion of a matter which the people were determined to know about and which they had every right to know about, and no distorting of the issue will avail. We are discussing the matter of a half report, where a resolution required all the papers and where all the papers were not given and where they are not before this House at the present time. We are asking the question whether or not special privilege in this Nation has laid hands on the administration of justice and taken control of the prosecuting attorney of the Nation and of his office and dictated action in a matter which is vitally important to the people of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how much time I have remaining, how much time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as remaining, and how much time the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] as remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has 17 minutes, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has 14 minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama has 1 hour and 54 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield to a question purely for information?

Mr. CLAYTON. With pleasure.

Mr. FERRIS. I have been unfortunate in being out of the Hall of the House and have not heard all of this debate, and I have not read all the articles in the newspapers about it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Lucky man! [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. I feel that I am. However, I want to ask the chairman of the committee having charge of this matter if there has been any question raised as to the sufficiency of the bonds of Caminetti and Diggs?

Mr. CLAYTON. It has not been raised here or anywhere else.

Mr. FERRIS. Does it not seem to the gentleman, as chairman of the committee having this matter in charge, that in order to make this a bona fide, nation-wide scandal they ought to make some attack on the bond and ought to show that it is insufficient before this really can amount to a scandal in any sense?

Mr. CLAYTON. They at least ought to bring some charge against somebody of having done some wrong somewhere; but there is an entire absence of any such charge.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Just long enough to reply to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. COOPER. May I ask the gentleman a question, then?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. In my opinion the sufficiency of the bond has nothing to do with it at all. Is it not a most significant fact that District Attorney McNab, of whom the judge of the United States district court, who knew him well——

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not make a speech. The gentleman need not eulogize anybody. He may ask his question, and I will endeavor to answer it.

Mr. COOPER. Is it not most significant that he wrote to the Attorney General of the United States that already they were attempting to buy witnesses, that already he had indicted one lawyer for the defense for subornation of perjury——

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech, and I now decline to yield further. I was perfectly willing to answer a question, but not for the gentleman to make a speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER. I will ask the question——

Mr. CLAYTON. I decline to yield further to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker. It seems that his interrogation point has been lost.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. CLAYTON. For a question, with pleasure.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Is it not always considered, in the practice of the law, a great advantage to the defendant in a criminal case to have a postponement of the trial?

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, I would not say always. Sometimes it is.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Generally that is true.

Mr. CLAYTON. And also in a civil suit it is sometimes considered of advantage to the defendant to have a continuance.

Mr. DIES. And sometimes it is not.

Mr. CLAYTON. And sometimes not. That depends upon the circumstances of the case. If I were defending the gentleman from Oregon, charged with crime, I should consider it a distinct disadvantage to have the case continued, for I would want my good and pure client vindicated right then.

Mr. LAFFERTY. You are my lawyer. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much interest to the discussion in this case that has been so long pent up in the gentleman from California and have analyzed that two-hour speech, and the gist of the whole offense charged is that the Attorney General agreed to and advised the postponement of a case that ordinarily could have been tried under the adultery or fornication statutes of the State of California. That is the offense that is charged. Now, that there may not be buried in oblivion acts of the preceding administration, when Mr. Wickersham, from the Republican Party, was Attorney General, I might mention that in the northern district of Texas a Federal district court, presided over by a Federal judge of the Republican faith, with a Federal district attorney of Republican faith, Hon. W. H. Atwell—a splendid gentleman, a magnificent officer, a lifetime friend of mine—a special grand jury was called in session to investigate certain acts done by the Standard Oil Co. and subsidiary companies and private individuals in the State of Texas under the Sherman antitrust law.

That grand jury was in session, hearing the witnesses, taking the testimony, and returned into court indictments against the Standard Oil Co. and other companies operating in the State of Texas and against private individuals, including Mr. Archibald and Mr. Flagler, of the Standard Oil Co., and warrants were issued by this court, presided over by a Republican judge and prosecuted by a district attorney who was a Republican. And yet some influence somewhere was brought to bear on the Attorney General then in the office so that the warrants should not be served in these cases on the higher officials of the Standard Oil Co. who resided outside of Texas. I do not know; it might be that the solution the gentleman from California offers may be the solution in that case. It might be by reason of political pull these warrants were not permitted to be served. In that case Mr. Wickersham, when an appeal was made to him, had District Attorney Atwell come 2,000 miles from the State of Texas to his office in Washington and confer with him about the indictments in these charges. Mr. Atwell insisted that he had a good case; that the case ought to be tried, and the warrants ought to be served; and he left with the conclusion, after conferring with the Attorney General, that that was what would be done.

What did the Attorney General do? He directed not that these cases be postponed, but he demanded that they be dismissed, and they were dismissed. If it be treason for a Democratic official to postpone a case that could be tried under the statutes of the State, a criminal offense involving moral turpitude, then there is no word in the English language strong enough to express the conduct of Mr. Wickersham in ordering these cases against this great corporation to be dismissed from the docket. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But that is not all. Recently in Texas, under the antitrust statute in our State, based on the same facts, a suit was brought by our attorney general against this same concern and affiliated oil companies, and they did not get any further with the testimony than to take certain deposition testimony in the State of Texas when the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey threw up its hands and wired their attorneys to settle the case, and that did they do by paying $500,000 into the treasury of our State for violating the antitrust laws of the State, and that is a case which was based on the same facts that were in the Federal case at Dallas when it was ordered to be dismissed. That, Mr. Speaker, was the record of the Attorney General of the Republicans. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would not feel inclined to occupy the time of the House in discussing this controversy were it not true that to keep silent would do violence to my own sense of justice and fair play. I hold no brief upon this floor for the Attorney General of the United States nor for the Commissioner of Immigration. I have but slight acquaintance with the Attorney General and none whatever with the Commissioner of Immigration and have never talked to either of them concerning these California cases. But it is so apparent that the enemies of this administration have sought to magnify and color this otherwise unimportant incident for petty political purposes that I can not refrain from calling the attention of this House to the blatant inconsistencies of those who are seeking to use the incident to revive a little life into their own dead political carcasses.

I desire also to state, before I proceed further, that I do not stand here as the defender of either young Diggs or of young Caminetti, who are charged with a violation of the white-slave law. If they are guilty to the extent indicated by the reports which have reached us through the newspapers, they should receive the swift and certain punishment which their offense deserves. But whether they be guilty or innocent, they are entitled under the Constitution of the United States to a fair and impartial trial, and the tribunal before which such a trial may be had is not the House of Representatives. We are not concerned here with their guilt or innocence, for that question must be determined alone by the courts of law. The only legitimate inquiry which we are at liberty to make here is whether there was any improper or unworthy motive which procured the postponement of the cases against Diggs and Caminetti and against the Western Fuel Co., which was given by the spectacular district attorney as the reason for his sensational resignation.

What are the true facts, Mr. Speaker, in connection with this whole affair? Two young men, Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti, both of them married and having children, as I now recall, went from Sacramento, Cal., to Reno, Nev., in company with two young women of Sacramento for immoral purposes. It is useless to speculate as to the circumstances accompanying such conduct. If this charge is true, there is no condemnation too severe to be placed upon their conduct, and I include in that condemnation the young women as well as the young men. It would be silly to contend that any of them were blameless. The young men were indicted in the Federal court for a violation of the white-slave law.

It so happens that one of these young men, Drew Caminetti, is the son of a Democratic officer under the present administration. Before he took the oath of office as Commissioner of Immigration he informed the Secretary of Labor that he would have to ask for a leave of absence in order to attend the trial of his son. The Secretary of Labor, without any request from the elder Caminetti, suggested that he would undertake to have this case postponed because of the fact that the commissioner's services were greatly needed in his department; that the Department of Labor had just been created, and that it was necessary for him to remain in Washington at that time on account of the peculiar conditions surrounding the office which he occupied. He then volunteered to request the Attorney General to postpone the trial of the cases for a few weeks until the Commissioner of Immigration could be spared from his official duties. This request was made, and the Attorney General, acceding to a natural and ordinary request from a fellow Cabinet member, directed the district attorney to continue the cases until fall, explaining the reason therefor. This is one of the réasons given by the district attorney, Mr. McNab, for his resignation.

The other reason given by him is the fact that the Attorney General directed that the cases of Sidney Smith and Robert Bruce, indicted in connection with certain executive officers of the Western Fuel Co. for frauds against the Government, be not tried until the officers themselves were tried, and that if upon such trial the evidence were sufficient to warrant the conclusion that Smith and Bruce were guilty that they be then tried. Smith and Bruce were not executive officers of the Western Fuel Co. They could be punished only in the event they had guilty knowledge of the frauds of the executive officers. It was not only a natural but a proper thing to desire that those whose guilt was most certain should be tried and convicted first. No sensible prosecuting attorney would ever try his weakest case first where men were jointly indicted unless he desired to make the acquittal of the innocent man the excuse for turning all the others loose.

Upon these facts the district attorney resigned in a huff and threw up his hands in holy horror at what he called the interference of the Department of Justice with the enforcement of the law.

There might have been some reason, Mr. Speaker, for the manufactured indignation of this bold protector of the race if there had been any effort to declare men innocent, as is charged by Mr. McNab. If he had been instructed to drop the prosecutions against any of these men, there would have been grounds for at least a part of the noise which he made over the affair. But no such state of facts existed nor was intended to exist. Everybody who knows anything about criminal courts knows that it is a common thing to continue a criminal prosecution. But the gravamen of this offense, the milk in the political cocoanut, in this case was the fact that one of the defendants was the son of a Democratic officeholder recently appointed by President Wilson. Therefore no means must be spared to embarrass and humiliate the father and to place a false construction upon the acts of the Department of Justice. It was too good a chance to make a golden flare-up and administer a kick against the party in power. How his bosom must have expanded with pride as he thought of himself as the modern Perseus, going out after the Medusa's head, stopping on his triumphant return to break the chains that bound innocent womanhood to the lusts of men.

This whole outcry was born of political malice, and its occasion was the effort of a political mountebank to advertise his wares to the world. When did this holy district attorney discover that his pride and moral sensibilities were so delicately attuned that he considered any interference or manifestation of authority from Washington as evidence of a corrupt plot to defeat justice? Surely his conversion must have been recent, for only last year, according to Mr. McNab's own statement, a Republican Attorney General interfered with him by ordering the release of three notorious women and a dive keeper, charged with a violation of the white-slave law. Why did he not resign then? Were his moral nerves shocked by this despotic act of a Republican Attorney General? If they were it was not visible on the surface.

When did the good district attorney become the knight errant of innocent childhood? When did he become the bold crusader that he now proclaims himself? Certainly his enlistment in this cause was also strangely recent, for only a few months ago he was appealed to by a young and respectable woman in California to protect her by prosecuting a prominent physician, perhaps one of McNab's political or personal pets, who had sent to her a shockingly indecent letter through the mails of the United States. Did he march forth then with sword aflame and loins agirt to do battle against a dirty cur who had insulted a helpless woman? No. He spurned this woman's appeals, and gave as the miserable excuse for his failure to do his plain duty that the girl was an actress, and that good Dr. Samuel Weiss had been aroused by her acting upon the stage. What a wonderful man this man McNab must be. When he is directed to postpone a couple of cases for a couple of months by the Attorney General, acting in good faith, for reasons which he deemed sufficient, he hastens to bedaub the escutcheon of all who are connected with the Government and to proclaim himself to the world as the original saint. But when a helpless and insulted woman comes to him for redress against a cruel wrong he at once becomes the defamer of the weak and a libertine's apologist.

Mr. Speaker, I admire a brave man, one who can bare his breast to the storm of public denunciation without flinching, when conscious of the rectitude of his own purposes. I can applaud the man who is willing to suffer himself rather than that wrong and injustice be done to others. But I hold in superlative contempt the coward, who seeks to elevate himself upon the misfortunes of others, drawing his ample folds about him with saintly grace and sanctimonious hypocrisy and cries, "Lord, I thank Thee that I am not as other men." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is almost inconceivable that men could be found upon this floor who are so petty as to seek to make political capital for themselves out of the misfortunes and sorrows of an old and honorable man. It is manifestly unfair that the Commissioner of Immigration should be held responsible for the conduct of his wayward son. Neither should he be criticized for wanting to attend his trial. If any gentleman on that side of this House, or anywhere else in this broad world, says that he would do otherwise himself under similar conditions, I reply that he has neither heart in his bosom nor blood in his veins. When God gave to man the wonderful gift of reproduction, He gave him also the gift of love, and no matter how far our children may wander from the path of righteousness, we follow them with our prayers and hopes, and when misfortune or retribution overtakes them and they are compelled to reap the whirlwind, we cry aloud, like David of old, "O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" For these young men I have no sympathy except that sympathy and pity we all feel for sinful and wayward men. But for the innocent who must suffer, the mothers and fathers of these young women and boys, whose hearts are crushed by this heavy sorrow, and for their wives and little children, I have the deepest sympathy. So have we all.

In order, Mr. Speaker, that this House and the country may have some knowledge of the feeling that prevails among the fair-minded press of California as to this coup de politics, I desire to call attention to the following editorials of some prominent California newspapers, Democratic and Progressive Republican. I submit the following from the Redlands Review of July 3, 1913:

NARROW PARTISANSHIP STILL SURVIVES.

There is less of the old-time blind, bitter, and unreasonable partisanship exhibited by even party organs to-day than was formerly the rule. But enough of the narrow-minded partisanship of former days is still exhibited to prove that the political millenium has not been attained so far. This has been particularly demonstrated in the passage at arms between United States District Attorney McNab and Attorney General McReynolds over the Diggs-Caminetti cases.

Many of the newspapers of California and the country are just and impartial, maintaining a fair and judicial attitude throughout. Others are bitterly partisan, and it is easy to see that the desire to make political capital at the expense of the Wilson administration has actuated them in the stand they have taken. Of course this exhibition of implacable political hostility and partisan bias has been manifested principally by the standpat Republican papers, followed by a few progressive papers, but not many. The aim has been to attribute the highest and best possible motives to Mr. McNab and the basest and most unworthy to Mr. McReynolds. President Wilson has also not been spared.

Granting for the sake of argument that Mr. McNab was right in desiring an immediate trial of the cases (including that of the Western Fuel Co.), the manner of his resigning, his telegrams to Attorney General McReynolds and President Wilson were theatrical and so framed up as to put the administration in a hole and prejudice public opinion. Without regard to the fact that Mr. McNab may have been entirely right in desiring no postponement of the trials, his dramatic performance looked very much like a grand-stand play for political effect.

The request made by Attorney General McReynolds to postpone the cases until fall was not extraordinary, neither was it necessarily contrary to demands of justice. If the evidence in the cases is as plain and conclusive as it is supposed to be, it is difficult to understand how justice would be thwarted by a delay. And the request from Secretary Wilson to Attorney General McReynolds for such delay was not unreasonably granted, notwithstanding Mr. McNab's insistence upon immediate trial.

It is absolutely unjust and an exhibition of narrow and malicious partisanship to charge Attorney General McReynolds with unworthy motives in deliberately endeavoring to protect the guilty and cheat justice in these cases. There is no evidence to justify it, and the Attorney General's record is all against such an unjust charge or assumption. Attorney General McReynolds may have made a mistake in ordering a postponement of a trial of the cases in view of all the circumstances and conditions, but, on the other hand, and especially in view of Secretary Wilson's statement that he made the request in order that Commissioner of Immigration Caminetti might not be compelled to leave Washington until fall to attend the trial, as he was needed there in reorganizing his department, the order of the Attorney General was not so strange. If Mr. McReynolds had not made the rather flippant remark when Mr. McNab's resignation was received, to the effect that he was shedding no tears over the resignation of a Republican officeholder, there would have been little to criticize in the action taken by him; and in any case, for any mistake in judgment which may have been made (and it was one that any official might have made under similar conditions), he made immediate amends by proving the sincerity of his desire and purpose to have justice take her course without delay.

President Wilson has been criticized for not having asked for Attorney General McReynolds's resignation, or for not having at least reprimanded him. Under the circumstances we do not see how he could justly have done so, even admitting that the head of the Department of Justice erred in judgment. And that is the most that can be fairly urged against him. But with a United States district attorney who did not take the trouble to ascertain the reasons for the postponement order, or who did not give his superior an opportunity to reconsider it upon further representations, but who sends a not very respectful telegram of protest to him, in which innuendo is conspicuous, together with a resignation to the President in a way that was a reflection upon him President Wilson did only what he should have done—immediately accept his resignation and, upon becoming acquainted with the facts, request an immediate prosecution of the cases. And in appointing Thomas F. Hayden as successor to United States District Attorney McNab and Matt I. Sullivan as special prosecutor to try the Diggs-Caminetti cases he made most excellent appointments. In the case of Mr. Hayden he selected one of the strongest and best progressive Democrats of San Francisco and placed the impress of his approval upon those who had been connected with the graft prosecutions in San Francisco. Both Mr. Hayden and Mr. Sullivan were connected with the graft prosecutions, the former as deputy district attorney and the latter as a volunteer with Hiram W. Johnson after Mr. Heney was shot. President Wilson's action in this matter has not only been above reproach, but he has also indicated on what side his influence will be exerted in San Francisco politics, which is certainly not the one which has sought to ostracize socially and defeat politically those who supported and carried out the graft prosecutions.

Of course the minority in the House of Representative, under Representative MANN, the reactionary leader, seeks to embarrass the administration in order to make political capital out of the affair, but nothing will come of the exhibition except to prove that old-time partisanship which seeks to put the other party in a hole, irrespective of the real merits or importance of the subject debated, still survives at Washington as elsewhere.

Also the following from the Fresno Herald of June 26:

CAMINETTI.

Anthony Caminetti, of Amador, was born at Jackson, in that county, of Italian parentage. He has represented his district in Congress, and for many years was a member of the State legislature, as assemblyman and senator. He has enjoyed educational advantages of which he has made the best possible use, and is a man of wide and deep learning, especially upon sociological questions and governmental affairs. In his profession as a lawyer he ranks high at the California bar. As a legislator he has consistently been thoroughly progressive, leading the movement for reform years before many of those now identified with that movement had seen the progressive light.

Added to these qualifications, Caminetti is one of the most industrious, untiring, hard workers in the United States. An iron constitution seems to make it possible for him completely to ignore all the rules of hygiene which other people are compelled to observe to continue their working power. To Caminetti's political and legislative associates, he is a marvel of unwearying industry. Not occasionally, but for days and weeks in succession, he will engage himself from very early in the morning until long after midnight in his legislative, political, and professional duties, and after but three or four hours of sleep, will have eaten his morning meal, read the newspapers, dealt with a voluminous mail, and be routing his associates out of bed long before the usual hour of rising of the average man.

Those who know Caminetti well, and therefore appreciate his ability, regard his appointment to the position of Commissioner General of Immigration as in every way admirable. He has made a deep study of immigration problems. Perhaps better than any other man on the Pacific coast he senses the problems which will be created by the influx of European immigrants to the Pacific coast consequent upon the completion of the Panama Canal. He is emphatically the right man in the right place, and apart from constitutional hastiness of temper, he is fitted in an extraordinary degree to the performance of a task likely to prove exceedingly onerous.

The selection of Caminetti, an Italian by descent, although a native-born Californian, was President Wilson's answer to the calumny industriously circulated during the campaign by the Hearst newspapers and other anti-Wilson agencies that Wilson held the people of southern Europe in contempt. That calumny, based upon an isolated sentence from his History of the American People, found its best answer in the appointment of Caminetti. That the wisdom of the appointment will be demonstrated there is no doubt.

Also the following from the Highland Park Herald:

M'NAB'S STYLE OF PROSECUTION.

United States District Attorney McNab's career as a prosecutor of crimes against the white-slave act is a fair subject of review.

About six months ago the readers of the daily press were startled by the details of a particularly revolting circumstance which occurred in San Francisco, and in which case the action of McNab was universally criticized, and with great severity.

Dr. Samuel Weiss, of San Francisco, sent a shockingly indecent letter to a young and respectable woman, who happened to be a chorus girl. It was a case akin to white slavery.

The district attorney's duty, of course, was to vigorously prosecute and unsparingly flagellate the dirty dog. Instead of doing so, he berated the woman in a newspaper interview, though she had pursued the only proper and lawful course she could in the matter by sending the letter to McNab's office. McNab declared she was "entitled to no consideration"; that her "chief ambition in life was to see herself clad in tights on the front page of the daily paper"; and that "her antics on the stage awakened Weiss's passion."

Also the following from the Sacramento Union of May 29, which was a comment upon the appointment of the elder Caminetti:

CAMINETTI'S APPOINTMENT.

If it be true, as asserted, that the only opposition to Senator Caminetti's appointment as Commissioner General of Immigration comes from Japanese, two things are true—first, it is to his credit that no man of Caucasian birth is found to oppose him; second, inasmuch as we may be presumed to manage our own affairs, Japanese opposition should not be counted as very formidable.

As a matter of fact, Senator Caminetti went further to gratify Japanese views than did most of our legislators. He voted to amend the act that was passed in accordance with the desire of President Wilson, and it was only on the failure of such amendment that he voted for the bill that is to be our law if it is not overridden by the people. Herein he stood very nearly alone, and herein, too, he came nearer to gratifying Japanese desire than did a majority of the legislators. If under such circumstances Japanese would protest against his appointment, there is almost no Californian to whom they would not object.

The people of California are delighted with this presidential appointment. They feel that Senator Caminetti has deserved well of any Democratic administration, and they are pleased by the honor thus accorded to him.

The San Francisco Star of July 5 had the following to say:

The past week has been full of significant events whose keynote is the growing recognition of the deathless value of publicity in all human affairs. "We, the people," are determined to have all our machines work in the open air, not in a lackey-guarded cellar. This especially applies to our social machines, such as county boards of supervisors, mayors, governors, and all the way up. Like Toddy, we want to "shee se wheels go round." One instance of this determination is the recent series of explosions over the Caminetti-Diggs and the Western Fuel Co. prosecutions. The President has undoubtedly managed the whole thing exceedingly well. It is also plain that canny John McNab means to rake up every scattered straw of political hay while the daylight holds, because he has honorable, though as yet unnamed, ambition. Nevertheless, McNab and his friend Herrington have gone quite too far in their continued criticisms of the Attorney General and of the President. They can not both have their cake and eat it. They seem to have expedited justice. Let them now retire and live on the consciousness of their virtue. The incident is closed, and further remarks from these gentlemen will only amuse the public.

But these things are incidental. The main point is that the demand made by the average citizen upon his employee, whether judge, Senator, or President, is, in plain Missourianese, "Show me, and stick all the facts out in plain sight."

Also the following from the Churchill County Standard of June 25:

Speaking of a potpourri of nonsense reminds one of the political capital that has been made over the resignation of John L. McNab, United States attorney for the northern California district. McNab alleged in his tendered resignation to the President that he had been hampered and ordered to discontinue prosecutions in white slavery and restraint of trade cases before the Federal court. The truth of the matter is that McNab is a Republican, and with his head due to fall into the basket he sought to make his official exit as spectacular as possible, which brings to mind the old saw that "No rogue e'er felt the halter draw with good opinion of the law."

On the 11th of July the San Diego Examiner contained the following editorial upon the Caminetti-Diggs cases:

"WHITE SLAVERY."

With the phrase "White Slavery" as a text, the Los Angeles Tribune makes a protest against the misuse of phrases.

The phrase was certainly misapplied in the case of Lola Norris and Marsha Warrington, who eloped with Drew Caminetti and Maury Diggs to Reno. It was a plain case of two girls, old enough to know better (one was 19 and the other 20), who eloped from their homes in Sacramento to Reno, 150 miles away, and began housekeeping with two young libertines.

The Mann law, designed to suppress the practice of importing women for the purpose of prostitution, made it crime for a man or woman to bring a woman from one State to another for immoral purposes. Diggs and Caminetti, therefore, unwittingly put themselves within the scope of that act. They were not guilty of "white slavery," as that queer term is generally understood; and had they remained at Truckee, on the western slope of the Sierras, within the boundaries of California, instead of traveling the remaining 38 miles to Reno; had they fled to San Francisco, to Los Angeles, to San Diego, or anywhere else within the borders of the State, they would not be liable to prosecution under the terms of the "white slave" act.

The chief sufferers thus far have been the innocent. Caminetti's father, an honest man, who has devoted most of his life to the service of the people, seems to have been hard hit, and the parents of the unfortunate young women are said to be heartbroken.

The law, supposed to be for the protection of women, has only been an added source of anguish and disgrace to the women involved in this case. The prospect of the trials of Caminetti and Diggs, of course, kept the unfortunate affair alive in Sacramento, where they live, and the dramatic resignation of McNab gave the case a nation-wide publicity that has effectually disposed of any chance the young women ever had of "living it down."

Attorney General McReynolds doubtless thought it a case of little importance when he granted Secretary Wilson's request to postpone the prosecutions until October. He did not reckon on the skillful use which Mr. McNab made of the "white-slave" phase of the case nor of the odium that could be pinned to the defendants with that phrase. He doubtless thought he was acting for the good of another department of the public service when, to permit Mr. Caminetti both to perform his immediate duties at Washington and to attend the trial of his son, he ordered a postponement of the cases until October. Mr. McReynolds made a mistake in considering the cravings of a father's heart; a public official should be a Brutus in such affairs.

Mr. McNab, notwithstanding the limelight halo about his righteous head, does not impress us as being altogether disinterested in his clarion call for justice. The peace officers at Reno and the Misses Norris and Warrington are the chief witnesses against Caminetti and Diggs. The young women are living in Sacramento under the parental roof and the parental eye. They have been there since February, and it is likely they will be there in October. As for the Reno peace officers, no one ever yet knew a sheriff to disappear during his term of office just because the defendant in a criminal prosecution wanted him to. When cases are tried sheriffs are usually to be found assisting the prosecution. The term of the present sheriff at Reno will expire on January 1, 1915, and it is safe to say he will be found there as late as the following Monday, when the county commissioners audit his salary account.

Mr. McNab's case would have presented a better appearance had he not in his zeal to "get back" at McReynold's assistant, revealed the fact that he (McNab) had seen fit to keep silence since the previous October—under another administration—about what he claimed was a perversion of justice in a genuine "white-slave" case.

Altogether we feel that Mr. McNab has cause to congratulate himself upon his smartness. Brother of the notorious Democratic machine politician and corporation representative of San Francisco, Gavin McNab, he has proved his superior in the domain of publicity. And in this day of the penny whistle and the big drum, the tinkling cymbal and the shrieking megaphone, that is the highest praise.

To sum it all up, Diggs and Caminetti will get five years apiece—for their conviction is practically assured—the two girls are disgraced for life, and their parents are heartbroken. And McNab will get a governorship—perhaps.

Also the following editorial in the Stockton Record of June 23:

MR. M'NAB.

"Suspend judgment pending investigation" was the advice Capt. Sigsbee wired from Habana to his enraged countrymen the morning following the destruction of the Maine.

It will be well at this time for California to suspend judgment and not hastily adopt John L. McNab's version of the causes leading up to his resignation.

The prosecution of Caminetti and Diggs and of the Western Fuel officials will not be quashed.

There is not one fact in evidence to show that Attorney General McReynolds ever contemplated more than a postponement of the trials.

Doubtless the records of California courts the last week will show that there have been a hundred cases postponed. We admit that in many instances the postponements have probably not been made in the interest of justice, but to assume that all have been made to defeat justice would be utterly unfair.

Nobody questions the right or propriety of Mr. McNab resigning if he thinks that he is not being properly supported by the Department of Justice. But the manner in which he proceeded suggests shoddy politics.

Several postponements of the Caminetti-Diggs case have been made up to this time. McNab does not charge that Attorney General McReynolds was responsible for these postponements. It is not of record that he opposed the postponements. In the Western Fuel cases it was only last week that Mr. McNab announced that the cases had gone over in order to permit him to prepare more effectively for the prosecution. On Friday additional indictments against some of the offending officials were returned. Mr. McNab's explosion of virtue was spectacular, but it is significant that he never before indulged in such excessive sentiment; and, further, the manner in which he gave out his letters to the President and Attorney General before those messages had barely reached their destination suggests that he was not averse to creating some sensation and doing a little politics. For be it remembered Mr. McNab was appointed United States attorney last year by President Taft, and he won his office for his well-known opposition to progressive policies. There is no official record that Mr. McNab ever before burned with noteworthy zeal for the enforcement of the white-slave act or for the punishment of malefactors of great wealth. It stands to reason that he has been expecting early decapitation, as the heads of the Federal stand-pat brigade in California are dropping into the basket with painful regularity. By seizing on the Caminetti-Diggs and Western Fuel cases Mr. McNab gained an opportunity of going out of office as a martyr to virtue. That he had the stage well set for his performance is suggested in the fact that those papers in opposition to the Wilson administration had his message to the President and Attorney General in type almost as soon as the recipients had the messages in hand.

Now, it is utterly ridiculous and preposterous for any yellow journal or stand-pat politicians to say that Woodrow Wilson or James Mc-

Reynolds seeks to aid white slavers to escape or to allow the Western Fuel officials to escape legal responsibility for their frauds.

Woodrow Wilson's whole life has been one of singular personal virtue and brave stand for public morals.

Mr. McReynolds was a special prosecutor of trusts in Roosevelt's time. He was dropped by President Taft not because he was not prosecuting the big malefactors effectively, but just the contrary. McReynolds had a reputation as a special prosecutor of trusts long before Mr. McNab was discovered by Mr. Taft and placed in his present office.

The Record desires to see the cases at issue go to trial soon. And we believe they will, and with a new district attorney prosecuting them. There is no occasion for undue excitement. There is good reason to view inquiringly the attitude of those yellow papers who seize the robes of virtue as cover for an attack on officials of highest character and intentions.

Likewise the following editorial from the same paper on the 25th of June:

M'NAB GETS HIS ANSWER.

"But, since you have taken such a course, and have given your resignation the form of an inexcusable intimation of injustice and wrongdoing on the part of your superior, I release you without hesitation and accept your resignation, to take effect at once."

With this pointed statement, President Wilson accepts the resignation of John L. McNab. It disposes of Mr. McNab very effectually.

If political influences have been at work in Washington in behalf of Caminetti, what shall be said of the shoddy procedure of Mr. McNab in seeking to involve the President in a "scandal," the circumstances of which the President knew nothing until it had been exploited over the country by a yellow and hysterical press?

Last Monday the Record said that the Caminetti-Diggs and Western Fuel cases would be prosecuted. And they will be. Not only will the President appoint a new district attorney who will act with firmness and circumspection, but he will also employ special prosecutors to insure a vigorous presentation of the charges against the indicted persons. This will be his answer to the attempt of a few schemers to make it appear that he or members of his Cabinet were seeking to obstruct the processes of justice.

Further, Mr. McNab's general charges against Mr. McReynolds are overturned by the direct and candid statements of the Attorney General, who admits that while in following ordinary procedure in consenting to a postponement of the cases he may have made an error of judgment but not of intent as to the proper final disposition of the cases.

The Record takes some satisfaction in the fact that it is the only paper that has yet come to notice which did not fall for the McNab play.

On Monday, while some of the papers were playing politics and others throwing themselves in the hysterics of virtue, the Record said:

"Now, it is utterly ridiculous and preposterous for any yellow journal or stand-pat politicians to say that Woodrow Wilson or James McReynolds seeks to aid white slavers to escape or to allow the Western Fuel officials to escape legal responsibility for their frauds. Woodrow Wilson's whole life has been one of singular personal virtue and brave stand for public morals. Mr. McReynolds was a special prosecutor of trusts in Roosevelt's time. He was dropped by President Taft not because he was not prosecuting the big malefactors effectively, but just the contrary. McReynolds had a reputation as a special prosecutor of trusts long before Mr. McNab was discovered by Mr. Taft and placed in his present office. The Record desires to see the cases at issue go to trial soon. And we believe they will, and with a new district attorney prosecuting them. There is no occasion for undue excitement."

We doubt if there is a single person of rightly ordered mind and pulsating heart who does not sympathize with Anthony Caminetti in the trying position into which the sin of his son has plunged him. While equal and exact justice must prevail, regardless of the personality or connections of an offender, men would be less than human if they did not go far to condone the zeal of a father in seeking to save his son from the ignominy of imprisonment. Broken-hearted parents are always the chief sufferers from an act like that committed by Caminetti junior. God pity the parent who has so far lost the divine instinct of parenthood as to stop short of any reasonable effort to defend even a guilty son.

We may assume, Mr. Speaker, that these papers have given expression to the sentiments of the fair-minded people of the great State of California, who have been actuated by a sense of justice rather than one of puny partisanship.

But in this hour of national night, we console ourselves with the reflection that God always raises up a leader when one is needed. In every clime, in every zone, in every crisis of man's experience, He has brought forth some great figure to bring deliverance to the children of men. When Israel was in bondage, and her children blistered under the lash of Pharaoh's cruelty, He spoke to Moses from the burning bush and commanded him to go forth and lead them into the land of Canaan. When Belshazzar feasted at a sumptuous table, surrounded by the glitter and glare of regal wickedness, it was Daniel who read the riot act to the assembled hosts. When the streets of Paris ran red with the blood of Frenchmen, and anarchy possessed that tempestuous city, it was the grim figure of Napoleon that rose out of the horizon to bring order out of chaos. When the American colonists revolted against England, declaring that taxation without representation was tyranny, it was into the hands of George Washington that God delivered the destiny of a new nation, the rays of whose light of liberty were to search out the corners of the earth. And later, when that Nation was rent with civil strife, when passion and prejudice walked hand in hand over the graves of their victims slain in fratricidal combat, it was Lincoln who, southern born and northern reared, was commissioned from on high to bind the Nation's wounds and bring peace to the bloody field. And so, even now, in this hour of national woe, when the black clouds of despair hover low above our heads, and a nation writhes in agony of soul, crying "Lord, what shall we do to be saved?" we need not lose heart or grow despondent. For out of the western sky there arises a stately figure, and upon the golden shores of California he stands forth in self-acknowledged purity as the chosen redeemer of a lost nation, the anointed prophet of the New Jerusalem, summoning a wicked and depraved people to forsake their wickedness. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I hold no brief from anyone to say anything with reference to the matter now under discussion. I would not have anything to say had it not been for the fact that certain references have been made to me and to my action by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in the past and also by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to-day. Because of the fact that I happen to represent the district from which the present distinguished and high-minded Attorney General comes, the gentleman from Illinois has attempted to draw a conclusion that in my action in undertaking to prevent a discussion of this case I was acting at his instance or as a result of some sort of understanding with him.

I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I acted upon my own initiative. I had no conference, no understanding, direct or indirect, with the Attorney General or anyone else when I made the objection to a discussion of this case and moved to lay the former resolution on the table.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] refers to gag rule. He seems to be laboring under the delusion that somebody on the floor of this House is trying to prevent a full and free discussion of this case. Mr. Speaker, I am certain that no man on this side of the Chamber desires to prevent a full and free discussion of this matter, but, for my part, I have thought it was improper for this case to be discussed in advance of the date set for its trial in California. I have thought that the House of Representatives was not the place in which to try a criminal lawsuit. I have felt that the courts of this country, and that in this particular case the court in California, was the place where the lawsuit should be tried, and that it was highly improper for a Representative of this great Republic to take advantage of the fact that he had a seat upon this floor, for the purpose of gaining political advantage, to rise and undertake to discuss a case now pending in the courts, and which is to be tried, as I understand it, next Tuesday—one week from to-day.

Now, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has undertaken to criticize me because I have said that somebody was trying to gain political or personal advantage out of this matter. He undertook to criticize me because I said Mr. McNab desired to promote his own political advantage. I have understood, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. McNab was looked upon at one time as a possible candidate of his party for governor of California, and I got my information shortly after this incident occurred from an interview in one of the Washington papers, with a Republican Representative from California, one of the gentleman's own colleagues.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] now states that Mr. McNab is not a candidate for any office. I am not surprised that Mr. McNab at this date has come to the conclusion that he will not ask the people of California to elect him to an office. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] should pardon me for thinking that perhaps he was interested in this matter to a certain extent on account of politics. I remember a few years ago that there was a great protest raised in this country because a Republican President of the United States—Mr. Roosevelt—permitted the United States Steel Co. to absorb the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., in direct conflict with the law. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was upon the floor of this House, if I mistake not, at that time, and yet, Mr. Speaker, the records of Congress fail to disclose that he sought to criticize a Republican President because of that act. I remember that a short time ago a Mr. Townsend, if I mistake not, an Assistant Attorney General in the Department of Justice, made a report to a Republican Attorney General and to a Republican President as to the Harvester Trust—a report of facts which clearly justified a proceeding against the Harvester Trust—and yet a Republican Attorney General failed to proceed upon that report. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] at that time had a seat upon the floor of this House, and yet he failed to rise in his seat and utter a single protest.

Mr. Speaker, we have just heard from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] of a more recent case—a case arising in the State of Texas—where Mr. Archbold and some one else connected with the Standard Oil Co. were indicted by a grand jury in that State. We have heard how the recent Republican Attorney General, Mr. Wickersham, ordered the indictment quashed and refused to permit these men to be carried to the State of Texas, where they ought to have been carried and given a trial before a jury composed of their peers. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] had a seat in this House at that time, and yet he did not see fit to rise in his place and condemn the Attorney General, Mr. Wickersham, for his unjustifiable action in that matter.

I remember also, Mr. Speaker, in the case of the great Tobacco Trust—a trust which was prosecuted in the civil courts by the present Attorney General ably, conscientiously, and fearlessly—I remember, I say, that there were some of us on the floor of this House who knew something of how that trust had oppressed the people in the tobacco-growing sections; we knew how it had denied the people who grew and raised tobacco a just remuneration as compensation for their labor. We felt that the men who controlled that great Tobacco Trust which the Supreme Court of the United States had declared was existing in violation of the law ought also to be criminally prosecuted under the Sherman antitrust law. I, for one, introduced under a Republican administration a resolution in this House calling upon the Attorney General to prosecute those who controlled and owned the American Tobacco Co.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] had a seat upon the floor of this House at that time, yet he failed to raise his voice or render any assistance, so far as I know, in securing the passage of that resolution. So I say, and I plead it in extenuation, that I think, Mr. Speaker, I have had possibly some just ground for my assumption that the gentleman from California was perhaps actuated, at least to some extent, by partisan and political motives in this particular matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that at last he has been permitted to take the center of the stage with Mr. McNab. But I can not refrain from commiserating with him to a certain extent at the same time, because the galleries have been largely deserted. The gentleman was not playing to the crowded house which he so fondly expected to play before, and I could not help thinking as he proceeded in his discussion of more than an hour that he fully realized that fact. I failed to catch the force, and the fire, and the eloquence which he usually displays in discussing a proposition.

The people, sir, are not in sympathy with any political play which may be made upon the floor of this House. Neither will they applaud the efforts of certain gentlemen to make a football of this case merely in order to reap some political advantage. They are more interested in knowing whether our laws are to be enforced without favor or partiality and whether the guilty shall be given just punishment, regardless of their situation or position in life.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] takes pride in the fact that he is the author of the white-slave act, and he has a just and proper cause for doing so. It is a wise and most wholesome law. But the gentleman does not do credit to himself if he lends his great ability and power to a vain effort to make the American people believe that the President of the United States and the Attorney General are not as sincerely anxious to see that law enforced to the fullest extent as he or any other citizen of this great Republic. The people, Mr. Speaker, have confidence in the patriotism and sincerity of the President and the Attorney General. But if it be true that their confidence in the administration is so little that it can be destroyed by any such effort as has been made here to-day, then that confidence is indeed very small.

Now, what are the facts in regard to this case? A certain member of the Cabinet requested his colleague in the Cabinet, the Attorney General, to continue this case for a month or two, in the interest of the public service in his department. The Attorney General agreed to do so. The postponement was only for a short time.

The request was not unusual, and I dare say that the records will show that there have been thousands of such instances in the past. But the district attorney out in California, Mr. McNab, a stand-pat Republican, out of sympathy with the policies of the administration and the great majority of the people of the United States, and realizing that he was soon to be succeeded in office by some one who was in sympathy with the administration, seized upon it as an excuse to create a sensation and to promote his own political fortunes at the expense of the administration which he had opposed and endeavored to defeat. Had the case been an ordinary one, free from sensational features, and if he had been actuated only by a desire to serve the people, I dare say he would never have thought of taking the course which he did take. He would have pursued a course more in accord with the sense of duty which should actuate every public official. He would have privately urged that the case be brought to trial before rushing into public print. The fact that he did not do so is to my mind the best evidence of his unfitness for the public office which he was holding.

Mr. McNab is commended in the speech made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], but the gentleman from California did not attempt to excuse Mr. McNab for this effort on his part to rush into print before he first called the matter to the attention of the Attorney General, and such is my confidence in the fairness of the gentleman from California that I believe that he intentionally refrained from offering an excuse for him.

Instead of doing what every fair-minded and conscientious official would have done, this man McNab sent a sensationally worded telegram to the President, and before it was received by the President gave it to the newspapers for publication, thereby showing that his action was not influenced so much by a desire to secure justice to the guilty in California and to protect the womanhood and purity of the State as it was to reap notoriety for himself. In all my observation I have never heard of a cheaper attempt to play to the galleries, and such is my faith in the discernment of the people of California that I was not surprised to hear the statement that he would not be a candidate for any office.

Mr. Speaker, those who are charged with this serious and disgraceful crime should be brought to an early trial, and if they are guilty they should be promptly and properly punished. The Attorney General has taken care to see that this is done, for he has ordered the trial set for August 5, and there is no reason, therefore, for this display of partisanship on the other side of this Chamber. But, disgraceful and serious as the crime is, all right-thinking people wish the defendants to have a fair and impartial trial, and for that reason, I repeat, I deplore the efforts of certain gentlemen to try this case on the floor of the House before it is heard in the courts. This is a legislative and not a judicial body, and I can not believe that it is proper for Representatives of the people to attempt to usurp the functions of the court, either to make political capital or for any other purpose. But, sir, in my judgment, there is something else behind the recent attacks which have been made upon the Attorney General throughout the country.

The gentleman from California is innocently lending himself to those who have a motive for these attacks. The President is in favor of enforcing the antitrust laws, and, firmly possessed with that idea, he has chosen an Attorney General for his Cabinet who has a record of performance behind him. He has chosen an Attorney General who is in thorough sympathy with the idea that laws are on the statute books to be enforced, and who at the same time has the courage and the ability to do his duty under all circumstances. It was Attorney General McReynolds who was charged with the stupendous task of undertaking the dissolution of the Tobacco Trust, which for so many years had oppressed the people of my section and other tobacco-growing sections of the country in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. He fought that case to a final and successful conclusion with an ability which brought him to the attention of the whole country. I regret that in drafting the decree of dissolution the former Attorney General did not permit him to have his way. If he had, the result of that victory would have been more lasting and beneficial to the tobacco growers.

He has recently brought to a successful settlement the suit against the Harriman merger of railroads, and over the combined opposition of the powerful railroads involved he has brought about a settlement in the interest of the shippers and the people. It has been my privilege to know him for over 20 years, and, in my judgment, at the end of his 4 years of service he will have made a record for ability and fearless devotion to duty unsurpassed by any of his predecessors in office. I am not surprised that the special interests which are doing business in violation of the laws of the country desire to be rid of him, and that they have seized upon this incident, which involved nothing more than the temporary delay of a case local in its nature, in order to try and manufacture sentiment against him. I regret that, as usual, their efforts find some aid and comfort on the Republican side. But these efforts will fail, Mr. Speaker, and in the end this distinguished and high-minded official will have more than justified the confidence reposed in him when he was chosen for this important position, and he will play his part toward carrying out the high purpose of the President to redeem the pledges of the Democratic Party and restore this Government to the people, to whom it belongs. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART].

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, this whole matter has arisen out of an ordinary continuance which was granted in a white-slave case for a period of two weeks by District Attorney McNab to the two defendants under indictment at the request of Mr. Caminetti, the father of one of the defendants, and without the suggestion of anyone else. There was a further postponement of the cases for two weeks, and that was the only continuance granted at the request of the Attorney General. But this controversy has arisen because the Attorney General suggested that the cases might be continued until autumn. In one of the letters of McNab he states that he might be able to try the cases on July 26, three days ago. It is only six weeks from that time until autumn. And yet this man, who was willing to continue the case at the suggestion of the father of one of the defendants——

Mr. CLAYTON. And did continue it.

Mr. TAGGART. And did continue it at his request, became so incensed that for the first time he addressed the President of the United States in a letter, couched in the language of wrath, in which he resigned his office and suggested that special counsel be appointed. Why did he not request the President to order that the Commissioner of Immigration should have time to attend this trial? Why did he not request the President to appoint him as special counsel? He knew more about the case than anyone else. He was not in the employ of the Attorney General. He was the servant of the United States, and it was to the United States that he owed the highest duty and not to the Attorney General. There is no statute of the United States that required him to consent to a continuance, even at the suggestion of the Attorney General. There is no statute of the United States that would for a moment bind the trial court in the case to grant a continuance even at the suggestion of the Attorney General or of the district attorney. McNab had the matter wholly in his hands. And yet for the purpose of creating this sensation this man wrote that letter to the President of the United States, resigning his office. He is not entitled to the respect of the American people or of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The two unfortunate girls who were concerned in this matter are entitled to the sympathy of the great-hearted American people. The two married men who took them from their homes to another State ought to have inflicted upon them the full penalty of the law. [Applause.] But I say to this House that this man McNab has inflicted on those two girls a more terrible penalty than the law will visit upon the two men who took them out of the State for the purposes of immorality. He has blighted their lives. He has covered them with shame!

Mr. MANN. Too bad!

Mr. TAGGART. He has made their names a by-word among a hundred millions of people. He has held them up to the ridicule and scorn and prurient curiosity of every evil-minded person under the flag. Their pictures have been featured in the newspapers. In all this broad land there is no spot where they can find refuge from curious eyes, and the remainder of their lives must be lived in the agony of silence, when words would break the swelling heart.

I want to say also that the man McNab has visited upon their respectable parents a more terrible penalty than can ever reach these defendants. He has done all that for the purpose of creating a sensation.

But gentlemen say that because these defendants had parents or relatives who were rich and influential, they for that reason had concessions and special privileges granted to them. I wish to say to the gentlemen on the other side of the House that they are not in a position to discuss matters of that kind.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAGGART. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Has the gentleman seen or heard any statement going to show that the prosecution in these cases has lost anything by this continuance?

Mr. TAGGART. On the very contrary, the President of the United States, with his usual tact and ready ability to grasp every problem, immediately directed that special counsel be employed, and, as I understand it, the cases will be tried at once.

I was a prosecutor for more than five years, and I believe that within the sound of my voice there are dozens of men who have performed the same duty, and we know that there was scarcely ever a criminal case tried in a court of the United States, or any other court, that involved a penalty so great as in these cases where a continuance was not had either on behalf of the prosecution or on behalf of the defendant. I want to say to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], whose ancient morality has been stirred up [laughter] by the shocking revelations of this suggestion of a continuance, that I challenge him to produce the records made by Attorney John L. McNab in all of his cases, and I will abjectly apologize to the House if there was not a continuance in every case he ever had where the penalty was as great as in this case, unless there was a plea of guilty.

The defendants in this case may be sentenced to five years at hard labor in the penitentiary. They were indicted in March last. McNab says, in his letter of May 21, that he intended to try the cases in June.

According to the statement of Attorney McNab in his letter of May 21, Caminetti, one of the defendants in this case, will in all probability plead guilty. This same attorney, who deserted the United States in the breach, and who is entitled to the same consideration as the soldier who deserts his colors in the face of the enemy—this same man had such respect for Commissioner Caminetti and was so influenced by the high character of Mr. Caminetti that he agreed to a continuance in the case.

But to come to the point before I close, I want to call the attention of the House to a few cases that have occurred in past administrations. In the administration of the distinguished gentleman who has now retired from the White House, and whose "corse to the ramparts we hurried" last November, without "a drum being heard or a funeral note," there is much interesting history. In the Beef Trust case the civil case was dismissed by order of the Attorney General in order to avoid delay in the prosecution of the criminal cases and the danger of immunity pleas should testimony be taken simultaneously with or before the trial of the criminal case.

In the celebrated Standard Oil case, where Judge Landis imposed a fine of $29,000,000, upon appeal the case was remanded for a new trial, and at the rehearing the decision was adverse to the Government. The court directed a verdict for the defendant.

In the New Haven Railroad case, in the same administration, the case was ordered dismissed by the Attorney General on June 26, 1909. The State of Massachusetts having passed an act, which was approved by its governor, authorizing the holding of stocks of the Boston and Maine Railroad Co. by the Boston Holding Co., a corporation controlled by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., the Attorney General directed a dismissal of this action, inasmuch as the community most directly affected had consented by the act of its legislature to the combination theretofore complained of.

And in the administration of that great personage who is represented on the floor of this House by the distinguished gentleman from Kansas, that hero of the charge on the empty trenches at San Juan Hill, where he put a period to the military career of some child of Andalusia who was running for his life [laughter], there were two cases that attracted a great deal of attention. I will read the history of them.

In the celebrated Harvester Trust case——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask the House to extend the time a little, and I will give the gentleman two minutes more of my time.

Mr. TAGGART. The prosecution of the Harvester Trust was ordered to be dropped by President Roosevelt in a letter to Attorney General Bonaparte on August 27, 1907, it being stated in this letter which is on file and can be found in Senate Document No. 604, Sixty-second Congress, second session, that George W. Perkins, of blessed memory, for he has now become only a recollection [laughter]—George W. Perkins, of the International Harvester Co., had requested that before the company was exposed to the certain loss and damage that the mere institution of a suit would entail, the investigation by Mr. Smith, Commissioner of Corporations, as required by Senate resolution, should be carried to completion.

And there was the Santa Fe Railroad rebate case in Roosevelt's administration, involving Paul Morton, a member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet. This is the case in which Gov. Harmon, of Ohio, and Mr. Judson, of St. Louis, were employed as special counsel, who recommended the prosecution of officials of the railroad, including Mr. Morton. The Attorney General held, however, that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant proceeding against the officials, whereupon special counsel resigned. Proceedings were then brought against the corporation, resulting adversely to the Government. The correspondence in this case is published in Senate Document No. 140, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.

Gentlemen of the other side of the House, these cases are a part of the reasons why you are now so lonesome and so good. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] You are trying to make a Pikes Peak out of the merest excuse of a molehill. You are trying to make it appear to the American people that the Attorney General arbitrarily and for the purpose of defeating justice ordered the dismissal of cases when he only suggested the continuance of one case and the continuance as to two defendants in another case.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has made a vicious assault on Commissioner Caminetti, a distinguished and respected citizen of his own State. He said that Mr. Caminetti asked that the cases should be continued till autumn, so that he might be present at the trial of his son, and at the same time perform some of the duties of his office on the Pacific coast. Then the distinguished gentleman from California descended to the level of saying that the commissioner would have his expenses paid, because it would be an official trip, and the opportunity would arise to save his expenses. To clinch this argument, he quoted Hamlet, shouting "Thrift, thrift, Horatio." How astonishing that the distinguished gentleman's experienced fancy would lightly turn to thoughts of thrift. Ex-District Attorney McNab has more respect for Senator Caminetti than the gentleman from California. With all of McNab's talent for sensationalism, he still has a grain of reverence for the parental relation. He knows that the dictates of common humanity would revolt at the idea of refusing the parent an opportunity to be present at the trial of his son. Out of this very sentiment of humanity, invariably recognized by court and prosecutor throughout the civilized world, has come the whole proceedings that have caused this controversy. Secretary of Labor Wilson, whose reputation throughout his whole life has been without even a shadow of reproach, who distinguished himself in this House as the champion of those who work for a living, and whose high purpose, manifested in all his acts, is to do whatever he can to equalize the heavy burden of American life, was prompted by this sense of humanity and by the exigencies that required the presence of Commissioner Caminetti here in Washington for the next few weeks, to ask the Attorney General to request a continuance of the case until autumn, and the request was granted. This is the whole story. But Attorney McNab wrote the Attorney General on June 20, the day he resigned, that—* * * in the meantime corruption and subornation of perjury will weaken and destroy the cases long before autumn is here.

We know that the principal witnesses are the two unfortunate girls. On their testimony alone the defendants can be legally convicted. Will they be corrupted or suborned? The tickets that were purchased were signed, and the general passenger agent of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. was requested to secure them. Does McNab mean that the passenger agent will accept a reward to commit perjury? Will these witnesses disappear? Will the officers who made the arrest in Reno and who discovered the men, under circumstances that would warrant a conviction, commit perjury, or depart from the country? Will the railroad conductor and others who saw these parties on the train accept a bribe as the price of false testimony? Will the dozens of citizens of Reno, including the people in the hotel, who know the facts, sell their testimony for a price? Under the blizzard force of all this evidence, the defendants will have no refuge, and there is not the remotest chance of an acquittal. In his letter of May 20, to the Attorney General, McNab speaks of an indictment against the defendant, Diggs, and his attorney, Harris, for conspiracy to suborn perjury in the cases. He does not say whom they tried to corrupt or whom they suborned. Perhaps they sought for witnesses who, for a price, would contradict the testimony on the part of the Government. The whole correspondence of Attorney McNab shows conclusively that it would be impossible successfully to impeach or contradict the powerful array of testimony that is at the command of the Government in these cases. It is plainly evident that these statements of Attorney McNab were not made in good faith, but were made for the purpose of attempting to compromise the Attorney General.

The difficulties of featuring the Western Fuel Co. case in "yellow" journals, and the fact that it presents poor material for muckraking, makes it a rather uninteresting companion piece to the Diggs and Caminetti case. Five defendants were indicted for conspiracy to defraud the Government on coal drawbacks. Attorney McNab was instructed by the Attorney General to proceed against three of the defendants and continue the case against the other two until after the trial of the first three. McNab was not directed to dismiss any case by the Attorney General.

All of the cases will soon be tried by the ablest counsel that can be procured. Attorney McNab has deprived the Government of his services in the name of patriotism. His whole conduct in this matter forfeits to him the respect of every right-thinking man and woman in the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time allotted for discussion be extended 20 minutes, that I may have 10 minutes of that time, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the time be extended for 20 minutes, that he shall have 10 minutes, the gentleman from Illinois 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to what time will that bring the debate?

Mr. CLAYTON. To nearly 6 o'clock is my recollection.

Mr. MANN. It would undoubtedly bring us beyond 6 o'clock, because we did not begin until about 1 o'clock and there were five hours to begin with, and that has been interrupted somewhat.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think we began about 10 minutes after 12.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, until what time will that run the debate?

The SPEAKER. The debate began at 12.40 p. m., and this extension will run it until 2 minutes after 6. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, for one I am glad the hour that marks the end of this discussion is drawing to a close. I am pleased for a number of reasons. Am pleased to think the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], my colleague, has at last had an opportunity to get rid of this terrible load he has been carrying around for the last two or three weeks. His friends from California have been seriously concerned in regard to him, fearing he would not survive the terrible ordeal of delivery, but he has, and it now appears after a few days of rest, he will be himself and clothed again in his right mind. I am pleased to know and to hear from the gentleman's own lips just what the duty of the President of the United States is. I am glad to know what the duty of an Attorney General is, and what the duties are of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Labor, and the Commissioner of Immigration, for he has told us. I feel highly honored to-day to think that the man who has this remarkable ability to tell what these men in high places should do, hails from my native State—California. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] I trust if the time ever comes when it is necessary to establish a new branch of the Federal Government and to appoint a man who shall be commissioned to tell the other Cabinet officers and the President what they should do, that the name of the gentleman from California, Mr. KAHN, shall not be forgotten. I know of no one who would be more willing to accept the task or who would start with greater confidence, knowing that he could fulfill the duties and rise to the occasion in every instance. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Telling other people what to do is such an easy task, but how hard sometimes it is to know what one should do himself. Sometimes the problem is vexing to the heart. How often weak humanity stands at the crossroads looking and wondering what course to pursue, and afterwards, when it is too late, wakes up to the fact, in spite of it all, that they have taken the wrong way. How often the foundation supposed to be of solid rock turns out to be shifting sand. How often at nightfall, when the day of life is almost done, men and women who have been searching and sighing for the truth find mistake and blunder has marked every foot of the way. When I was younger I felt able to tell other people what they should do, but that notion has passed with the years. I have made so many mistakes that my power to criticize others has almost gone. In becoming better acquainted with myself I have lost the disposition to judge my fellow man. My colleague [Mr. KAHN] and myself seem to have learned a different lesson in the great school of life. The task that seems so easy to him seems to me so hard. To me he is a marvel. He tells what President Wilson, the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Labor, and the Commissioner of Immigration should have done. He does this notwithstanding he is but half clad with knowledge on the subject. He is hardly acquainted with the men about whose duty he knows so much. Mr. Speaker, an average man would have been obliged to have stood in these men's places and sat in these men's chairs in order to know what they should have done; would have demanded real information before he would have considered himself qualified to tell the world what these gentlemen should have done; but not so with the gentleman from California.

Unacquainted with the men and their work, viewed from his own angle, and surrounded with a cloud of thick darkness in reference to the whole subject matter, he rises as a judge, discerns the secret thoughts and intents of the heart, and tells the less fortunate and waiting people of this country the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and astounds one and all by showing these distinguished and heretofore highly respected men of this country to be guilty of entering into a plot to enable two young men charged with the violation of the white-slave law, to escape punishment. How strange the revelations which he has made; strange that President Wilson, always moral and high-minded heretofore, should stoop so low; that James McReynolds, now Attorney General, should be caught in such a net. How strange that Secretary Wilson, the poor man's friend, and Secretary Lane and Commissioner Caminetti should fall like Lucifer of old into such a pit, and now to this modern prophet, to this genius from the West, on behalf of the less fortunate, but ever appreciative people of these United States, I thank you for the astounding revelations which you have made.

However, I did not rise to speak along this line. In my judgment the fundamental desire causing all this explosive talk is to discredit certain Democratic officials and more particularly Senator Caminetti, Commissioner of Immigration, the father of the young man now charged with crime. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in whose ability I have great confidence, especially in his ability to bring on and maintain a filibuster on this floor, on the 26th day of June held Senator Caminetti up for ridicule, and in derisive tones used the following language:

> Fine man to place in that position, whose principal object is to leave his office in order to go to the side of his 27-year-old son under trial for a white-slave offense.

My purpose in rising was to say a few words in behalf of Mr. Caminetti, Commissioner of Immigration, the heart-broken father, the man referred to in the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, and if I did not do so I would not consider myself worthy to enter these doors; but in doing so I fully realize no words of mine can place Caminetti's name higher than he has placed it during his long, conspicuous, and useful public career. I am glad the honor of a good man does not depend upon words of praise, and I am equally pleased to know that malicious and explosive words hurled at the head of a good man have no more effect upon his name than the bellowing of an angry bull has upon the mountains of the moon.

Anthony Caminetti is my friend; and a man who will sit idly by and hear the name of his friend reviled is not worthy to have a friend. Caminetti is a native son of the best State of the Union, the great sovereign State of California; born in Amador County, where his home now is and where he has lived all his life. Some of his revilers may have found it necessary for financial reasons and, as far as I know, for reasons of personal safety to move from one State of the Union to another, but Caminetti never has. Fifty-eight years ago he was born in Amador County, which is situated on the western slope of the great Sierra Nevada Mountains, a county from which the miner in days gone by brought down buckets full and tubs full of glittering gold; and I tell you the name of Senator Caminetti shines to-day back on his native hills, regardless of the dull words that have been spoken against him here, as the miner's gold shone 60 years ago.

At the age of 21, in the county in which he was born, he was elected district attorney, which position he held for six years. It is no small credit for a young man to be elected the highest peace officer of his county at the very moment he reaches his majority. From the office of district attorney he was sent to the State legislature, where he has been for the past 24 years save only the 4 years he spent as a Member of this body, being elected to the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses of the United States. His last term of State senator terminated with the year 1912, after which he almost immediately assumed the position of Commissioner General of Immigration of the United States.

I have read that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country." Commissioner Caminetti has reversed this wise old saying, for the people of his own land honor and love him as a brother, for back in California, God's country and Caminetti's country, he is honored and loved by all who know him. No man west of the Sierra Nevada Mountains has ever pointed the finger of scorn at him. His political adversaries have, however, focused upon him searchlights of investigation for the last 30 years, and baying, malicious, political bloodhounds have been upon his track for upward of a quarter of a century, but never yet have they startled or quickened his footstep. He never occupied a position of trust in his life that he did not fill to the full satisfaction of his constituency. The cause of the common people has always been his cause, and men and women of his native State believe in him and rely on him, because they know he is right; but out here upon this floor, 3,500 miles from home, for the first time in his life he is ridiculed, and insinuations are made that he is not a worthy man.

What has he done to call forth these denunciations? Simply asked for the privilege of being present at the trial of his son; asked to be permitted to stay in the court room and hear the verdict of the jury which would either incarcerate or liberate a member of his household.

Shame should fall deeply upon the faces of the men who seek to belittle Anthony Caminetti because his son is charged with crime. From Mount Sinai it was said 4,000 years ago that God would visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, but nowhere in history, sacred or profane, is there one example of either God or man holding responsible a faithful and loving father for the conduct of a wayward son. Had such a merciless doctrine been in vogue in this world many of the illustrious names now decorating the pages of history would have been lost from the great treasure house of the world. It is nowhere written that the honor of venerable, thoughtful, deserving fatherhood depends upon the inexperience and impulses of youth. I do not know whether young Caminetti is guilty of crime or not. If he is he should be convicted and punished according to the laws of the land, but I do know that Anthony Caminetti, having a father's love in his heart and a father's interest in his son, was clothed not only with a right but an imperative duty to attend, if he could, his son's trial and safeguard with a father's care the legal rights of his legal son. I know of no higher duty than this. A king for this purpose would be justified in laying down his crown and abdicating his throne.

I can not understand the spirit that possesses my friends on the other side in denouncing the elder Caminetti. They seek to debase the purest sentiment of humanity—a father's and a mother's love. Do you not know parental love follows the child from the cradle to the grave, and just in proportion as the storms gather about the head of a son or a daughter, just in that proportion does parental affection seek to spread its protecting wing above the loved and threatened head? Do you not know the laughing, cooing, cradle-child never grows so large and old to the father and mother but what it is their child still—child to love and child to protect? Do you not know, or does it not appeal to your cold, political mind and heart, that the parental love that caused Anthony Caminetti to ask for a leave of absence is a natural impulse implanted by the Creator in the parent's heart; and when you denounce him and insinuate, as you have, that he is not fit to occupy his present position because he possesses this quality, you lift your denunciation above the man and denounce the God who implanted this parental instinct in Caminetti's heart?

If politics, followed up, makes such demands upon its devotees, I want no more of politics. If long service in this House means the development of the mind only; if it means human affection must cease, that parental love must be dried up at the fountain; if it means the heart must become shrunken, withered, and cold—if it means all this I do not want to stay here any longer; I want to go home to the great West, where I can hear the waves of the broad ocean beating against my native shore, where I can see the sunset behind the sea, where I can wander among the high mountains and over the great plains, studying, wondering, and appreciating, mind and heart developing together with the years; back to California, where strong men are as tender in their affections as a little child; back where parental fires burn brightly about the hearthstone of every home, and where fathers and mothers are willing, if necessary, to lay down their lives even for a wayward son.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentlemen on the other side occupy some of their time?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, it is natural and commendable for a man to stand by his children when they are in trouble, even though that trouble be the result of the most disgraceful action imaginable. The old Spartan virtue that justified and commended a man in sentencing his own flesh and blood to prison and to death for the commission of a crime was a Spartan vice. Nearly all of the so-called Spartan virtues were vices when analyzed.

I have the greatest respect and deepest sympathy for Senator Caminetti and his family, and for the members of the Diggs family. Mr. Caminetti is an ex-Member of this House, and he was a good Member. Years ago he and I were fellow members of the California Assembly. During the 12 years I was the secretary of the State of California, and for two years thereafter, until he resigned the office to accept the position of Inspector General of Immigration, he was a State senator. He has always been respected and admired in his native State of California as a good citizen, a good man, and a conscientious official. The Diggs family is one of the pioneer families of our State, and has always been prominent in the business, professional, and official life of our Commonwealth. It is an honorable and a distinguished family.

I also know intimately and well and number among my personal friends the families of the girls whom Drew Caminetti and Maury Diggs are said to have debauched and taken out of the State for immoral purposes. They also are people of high standing in the business and civic life of Sacramento. They are proud and sensitive and jealous of their good name. They not only have my heartfelt sympathy in their trouble, but the unspeakable outrage to which their daughters were subjected makes my blood boil with indignation.

What makes the crime seem more than ordinarily heinous is the fact that the debauchers of these young girls were married men and fathers. The wife of one of them was on a bed of sickness, recovering from the pangs and pains of childbirth at the time.

It seems to be the inexplicable and inexorable law of nature that in sins and crimes of this kind the innocent must suffer with if not more than the guilty, but our sympathy for the innocent members of their families ought not to deter the meting out of condign punishment to the guilty.

Drew Caminetti and Maury Diggs met these girls and made love to them under assumed names as single men. Such a state of affairs could not long last in Sacramento. The girls soon ascertained the truth and charged the men with their duplicity, which they admitted and stated—which was a lie—that their wives knew of their relationship with the girls and were going to have the girls brought before the juvenile court and sent to the detention home or some other institution, and have them kept there until they were of age; that the only thing for the girls to do to escape this was to run away with them to Nevada; and that if they would do so, as soon as the law allowed they would divorce their wives and marry them; and they may have intended to carry out that program.

Diggs is a member of one of the most prosperous architect firms in Sacramento and Caminetti, up to the day before the elopement, had been an employee in the office of the State board of control. When they were arrested at Reno Diggs had less than $5 and Caminetti less than $1 in his possession. At the time of the arrest the girls were not disposed to appear as witnesses against the men.

The determination to preserve the sanctity of the home circle of the American family is not monopolized by any political party, thank God. It is the natural instinct of all true American men. The purity of our homes must be maintained and the virtue of our daughters protected and their violators punished. But in the Caminetti-Diggs case the Department of Justice has swung from one extreme to the other and from treating flippantly the resignation of John L. McNab and slurring it as "the resignation of a Republican United States attorney for which it was shedding no tears," the department has gone to the other extreme and to save its face before aroused public opinion, it has employed special counsel at great expense to the Government to prosecute these cases.

If the administration doubts the ability or integrity of the gentleman whom it intends to name as Mr. McNab's successor that course is permissible, if not justifiable. But if some of those high in official authority in Washington had kept their hands off and let John McNab alone, he would have brought the cases to trial decently and in order, and would have prosecuted them according to law and the rules of evidence, and the country would not be put to the extraordinary necessity of employing special prosecutors to prevent the miscarriage of justice.

McNab has the respect and confidence of the people, and his ability and integrity and standing as a lawyer is unquestioned in California.

There ought not to be any party politics in this. While John McNab is a good Republican, he was an admirer of President Wilson, and his brother, Gavin McNab, is one of the leading Democrats in California, and has done as much for President Woodrow Wilson as any other man in that State.

What the people of California and the good people of this country, regardless of their political affiliation, want and demand is that the Caminetti-Diggs cases be tried fairly and decently and speedily, so that justice may be done.

The sentiment of our people is expressed by the father of one of the girls in a telegram he sent to me and which reads as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CAL., June 23, 1913.

Hon. C. F. CURRY,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

The integrity and bravery of John L. McNab has been my forlorn hope of justice for an irreparable wrong.

This is signed by the father of one of the girls. [Applause on the Republican side.]

That telegram is the epitome of the iterated and reiterated comment on McNab's resignation by nearly every newspaper published in California and, so far as I have been able to learn, by nearly every newspaper in the country.

I yield back my time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. May I ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. CURRY. I have no time. I have yielded back my time. I shall be glad to answer in the gentleman's time.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, it does not come out of the time on this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has stated that he has no time.

Mr. CURRY. I have no time. I shall be glad to answer the question if I can get time.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] will use his time. I will say that I expect the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITZHENRY], a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, will occupy 10 minutes, and then I expect to conclude for our side. I hope the gentleman will be kind enough to use his time now.

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Under the arrangement a while ago extending the time, was five minutes accorded to me and five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas?

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair understood, although it was not definitely stated.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, that is what I stated.

The SPEAKER. That was the request of the gentleman from Alabama, and nobody objected.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas yielded to me 2 minutes, and I supposed he had 20 minutes left.

The SPEAKER. That gave him exactly 20 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have 22 minutes, and I expect to yield to the gentleman from Illinois 2 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I wanted that understanding with the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, the people of this country all over the Nation want law enforcement. We have listened to the debate that has been going on here to-day and we have heard the old Republican Party censured and we have heard the Democratic Party censured. If there were sitting in the gallery some diplomat of a foreign nation who knew nothing of the Republican Party and knew nothing of the Democratic Party, and if he should attempt fairly and squarely to render a decision as to whether these parties had been convicted of wrongdoing and failure in the enforcement of the law, I believe he would decide that both parties were guilty.

We have heard the different Presidents censured. We have heard President Roosevelt censured because he did not kill every lion in Africa and slay every trust in the United States during the period that he occupied the White House. We have, however, seen recognition of the fact all over this land that while he was there he did perform his duty; that he did discharge his obligations and that he did take an old statute to which the Democratic Party had paid no attention and gave to it new life. We saw him take the old antitrust law that five Democratic members of the United States Supreme Court had asserted was contrary to the Constitution, but which the other members of that court had declared to be constitutional—we saw him take that law which had been a dead letter during the entire administration of Grover Cleveland, that law to which Cleveland had paid no attention, and we saw him make something out of it. It is true he did not wipe out every trust that existed. It is true that the organizations of special privilege were busy and that the various avenues of power and strength were used during his administration; but I say that the fact stands out that both of the old parties have been convicted of courting special privilege. But we do not care anything about parties; we are not here to consider the question of partisan standards, but the people of the country want the law enforced. Out on the Pacific coast we have had an awful hard struggle, hard fights, and the people out there want the law enforced.

I remember reading a report from the pen of William Jennings Bryan when he was acting as correspondent at the Chicago convention, how he dwelt upon the magnificent speech of Gov. Johnson, of California, when he detailed before that convention the hard fight and the intense struggle that the people of California had against special privilege and the hard fight they had put up against corporate interests organized under the leadership of the Southern Pacific. The whole country was touched with the sincerity of his comments and the condition of things that prevailed at that convention.

So our people of Seattle, in the State of Washington, want the law enforced. We want the officers of the Government to be in such a position that they will not be subject to unreasonable criticism. We want the Government to be so close to the people in the matter of enforcing the law and asserting it in the true interest of the people that men can not consistently stand up and make violent criticism of it. We want the people to have such confidence in this Government that the public sentiment will not permit or grant any following to that kind of thing.

On Friday night, July 18, 1913, in my home city, Seattle, Wash., a large number of the enlisted men of the United States Navy, together with United States soldiers from the forts, led a riotous and lawless outbreak against constituted authority, in disgrace of the uniform and the American flag, and owing to the fact that the inhabitants of the city, with thousands of visitors from all over the Northwest, were engaged in a midsummer festival, which caused the streets of the city to be crowded and traffic of all kinds to be blocked, there was the greatest danger of bloodshed and loss of life and property from fire and incidental acts of lawlessness. It is asserted that if the police of the city had attempted to arrest the enlisted men or to stop the course of the mob led by them the inevitable result would have been bloodshed and the loss of lives, in which innocent bystanders would almost inevitably have fallen as victims.

These acts of violence by the enlisted men are defended by some on the ground that they were seeking vengeance and reparation because of an alleged prior assault upon some two or three enlisted men by street speakers who advocated doctrines antagonistic to their ideas of law and order. It is persistently contended, however, that no such incident occurred, but to the contrary, that one or two enlisted men, intoxicated and out for that sort of a good time which intoxication brings on, attacked a woman speaker on the streets and their attack was met by blows which resulted in a street fight.

As to the facts of this incident I am not fully informed. I do not know whether an enlisted man attacked the woman speaker, as is alleged by some, or whether a bystander struck the first blow by hitting the enlisted man, as is alleged by the men of the fleet. This is not the matter under consideration. In either case the incident was lawless and unfortunate. I insert in the RECORD a published statement bearing upon these facts. The sailors of the American Navy are men of worthy motives, and there is splendid discipline ordinarily maintained among them. Large numbers of these men in uniform are to be found in the Young Men's Christian Associations, in the churches, and in the lodges and fraternal organizations of our coast cities. They are welcomed in places of amusements, and there is a disposition on the part of the public to give them that meed of praise and credit to which the uniform entitles them. As a resident of a navy-yard town, Bremerton, Wash., for about eight years, I gladly accord honor to the boys on the American ships and am glad to testify to their courage and fidelity. I have met them in every capacity, some as brothers in lodge rooms, and I have met others in official capacity as prosecutor for the violation of city ordinances. I have heard them testify in religious meetings and have seen them engaged laboriously in enterprises of the highest merit. But everyone knows that there are among them men who are easily incited to violence and who are more than liberal in their views of civic government and order.

It is asserted that the crusade for vengeance which resulted in the destruction of property and in the promotion of lawlessness in the city of Seattle under the leadership of some of these men from the ships has been indorsed by officers of the Navy, and that their conduct was actually encouraged by some of their superiors. Without further evidence than I have now at my command I refuse to believe this statement, but I believed it to be my duty to call the attention of Congress to this case and let the country know that the lawlessness was not lawlessness of the citizens of my home city and State; that it was not the outburst of local anarchistic love of the red flag or hostility to constituted law on the part of my fellow citizens that brought on this disgrace, but that the lawless acts were committed by men from other States who were enlisted in the Government service and brought to the city of Seattle to participate in the merrymaking as guests of the city and representatives of one of the law-enforcing branches of our Government. In order to present the matter fairly and squarely I have offered the following resolution:

Whereas it is widely reported in the public press that certain enlisted men of the United States Navy did on Friday, July 18, 1913, at Seattle, Wash., engage in a riot and in wanton destruction of private property: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to give to the House full details and particulars of the said occurrence, together with the names of all enlisted men who participated, and a full record of any and all proceedings had to investigate the said lawlessness and punish the guilty parties.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish a detailed statement of the losses incurred, to the end that full reparation may be made to such persons as may be found to be entitled thereto.

I have no consideration for any organization which tends to disregard the Stars and Stripes or, by lawless methods, to correct any alleged inconsistency which may exist in the Government under which we live. But I do know enough about the people of Seattle and their regard for law and order to be able to say here on the floor of Congress that the regularly constituted authorities in that city do not need rioting soldiers and sailors, or revolutionary I. W. W., or any other outsiders, to aid them in the performance of their duty. Respect for law is essential and anarchy is awful, but if anarchy and revolution must come I would rather it would come from the I. W. W., led on by some economic fallacy, than from uniformed officers of the Government.

The I. W. W. syndicalist who looks forward to the general strike will find his vision befogged by a myth and a farce, and will some day be disillusioned. When they quit philosophy and dreams they may become as violent as the sailors were on this Friday night. When they do this—and the people, not itinerant sailors, will be the judges of the time—violence will be met with violence, for the people know how to protect themselves from irresponsible mob law and they will fight anarchy and open lawlessness with a will. It is a different matter, however, when it comes to fight the uniformed officers of the Government itself. Uniformed lawless rioters present a worse problem than the I. W. W. I notice in the reports the suggestion was made among the rioting sailors that they had better go after Mayor Cotterill next. This was a perfectly natural conclusion for men to make when started on a career of lawlessness.

The rioters not only invaded the halls and buildings where the I. W. W.'s met and had their desks and belongings, but they tore into the Socialists' halls, removed pianos, song books, and lodge paraphernalia and made a bonfire of it all. They then entered a Salvation Army meeting place and continued their lawlessness, tearing down the mottoes "God is Love" and "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believed in Him might not perish but have everlasting life." The report is that when they learned that they were in the Salvation Army quarters that they desisted from further destruction in that place. But all history bears evidence that a mob, once inflamed, does not draw nice distinctions.

NOT A FIGHT FOR THE FLAG BUT TO REGAIN LOST POWER.

This is not a fight for or against the flag at all, but the big fact back of all these incidents is that the city of Seattle has only recently gone through a mighty upheaval, in which the people of the city, the churches, the brotherhoods, the men's clubs, the civic and reform organizations have cooperated with men of labor organizations and others who had economic as well as moral grievances against the old Judge Hanford-Secretary Ballinger régime. I mention these names because the Nation knows of them. It took a congressional investigation conducted by the Judiciary Committee of the House to eliminate the judge from his position of autocracy and power, and Mr. Ballinger resigned as Secretary of the Interior after investigation for reasons which it is unnecessary to state here.

THE NATION KNOWS ONLY PART OF THE STORY.

This fight which the Nation knows about is only incidental to the struggle on the part of progressive and courageous men and women of my State to drive from power men enthroned by special privilege. It was an awful struggle. Every form of vice conceivable in the ramifications of development of that splendid city—the queen city of the Northwest and the gateway to Alaska, a seacoast city—united forces with organized privilege.

Timber thieves, public-domain land sharks, white slavers, dive keepers, gamblers, smugglers, joined hands with the railroad interests, the timber interests, the money lenders, the fisheries trust, the water-power syndicates, the coal operators.

The Guggenheims wanted Alaska, the Weyerhaeusers wanted the forests, the syndicates wanted the waterfalls, the Jim Hills wanted the franchises and the mountain passes, and the Morgans wanted the securities. Shrewd lawyers and wily politicians adopted their usual tactics.

Judges were corrupted, through privilege United States Senators were bought and sold, patronage was controlled, pardons were peddled to the faithful in case of judicial accidents, which seldom happened, and crimes were condoned. Railroad attorneys read proofs of and corrected supreme court decisions before they were handed down.

Injunctions were ever ready, and the man who offered to fight the gigantic organization was confronted with ruin, financial and social, and maybe had to get out of the country or go to jail.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I will.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman cite an instance in which a United States Senator was bought?

Mr. BRYAN. I will not mention any names, but if the gentleman does not know that Senatorships have been bought and sold in this country, he is not well informed. I do remember where the Senator from Illinois, Mr. Lorimer, was expelled for that very kind of thing.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman did not say "United States Senatorships," but "United States Senators."

Mr. BRYAN. When a Senatorship is purchased and a man takes the office, what is the difference?

It was against this kind of an organization that the present mayor of Seattle fought both in and out of the Democratic Party. There were many other men of courageous and progressive bearing who fought valiantly, holding the fort for justice and righteousness in the name of the people against the awful odds that were presented. Throughout all these struggles under the black flag of piracy, the privileged crew rallied around the Seattle Times, whose editor, fresh from Minneapolis, combined in himself the characteristics that made him close both to the lowest of the lawbreakers and to those who always seek the aid of the vicious, but pretend to keep aloof.

DIRECT PRIMARY AND EQUAL SUFFRAGE OPENS THE WAY.

There were triumphs and defeats until a great struggle came on for the United States Senatorship between the reactionaries on the one side and the people on the other. It was an awful struggle. The people turned to the direct primary as an opening wedge. Sentiment was created for such a law, and while the old gang, like booty highwaymen, fought among themselves for the senatorial toga of Senator Ankeny, the Walla Walla banker, which he had paid for once and was ready to pay for again, the enactment of a fairly good direct primary law was forced.

Following up the primary election victory before the old gang had really formed themselves under the new order, the Progressives broke through a weak spot in the enemy's center and passed a legislative act submitting a constitutional amendment for equal suffrage. While the forces of reaction and destruction were being marshaled to defeat the suffrage amendment, the Progressives organized for a new attack, a charge all along the line for the election of a real United States Senator, instead of a figurehead of privilege. The people's candidate was MILES POINDEXTER, then a Member of Congress. The country newspapers rose in their strength against the big dailies of the Blethen-Wilson-Perkins news syndicate in western Washington. The people rallied everywhere, the grange, the labor organizations, the Progressive clubs. Well, the fight was so determined that they forgot the suffrage amendment, and it carried with a big vote, while MILES POINDEXTER swept the State and was elected to the United States Senate. [Applause.]

THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH.

Then came reenforcements. The women raised the Stars and Stripes and then the flag meant something. Not now the "refuge of scoundrels," but a sword in the hands of the faithful. Seattle had been a stronghold of corruption. The black flag of piracy was honored above every sentiment of justice and righteousness. The gamblers wagered the gold of Alaska in dens of iniquity; the men that go down to the sea and the loggers that come in from the camps found a restricted district of crime and criminals, where they were further depraved and permitted to lounge until their money was gone; the pirates of privilege were collecting a tremendous toll from fallen women and the devotees of the traffic; saloons were unrestrained and their income was all sufficient for their itching palms; rent from crib houses to the associates and friends of the higher-ups amounted to a fortune each month; the city council was handing out franchises on petition of certain inright lawyers who were paid the fees; the corporations were reaping a glorious harvest; the rich were getting richer and the poor were getting poorer. With the black flag of piracy at the head of their column these forces were making a clean sweep in the city of Seattle. They were triumphing over equal opportunity. They knew no principle of the square deal, no law of love.

"IF THE WORLD WAS LOST THROUGH WOMAN SHE ALONE CAN SAVE IT."

Like Christian crusaders, with the zeal of the followers of Peter the Hermit, the women came into the fight as reenforcements for the Progressives. They showed the men what real patriotism means, they demonstrated the fact that there is no sincere love of the things for which the American flag stands without integrity of purpose; that true patriotism springs from the heart, that humanity and brotherly love is the source of the only patriotism. They loved Seattle for the human beings who lived there; they were ready to sacrifice time and comfort to establish a better moral code; they hated saloons and the denizens of the restricted district, because these agencies all tended to make the people miserable, and to rob their city of its splendid mission. A poetic sentiment, a vision of hope, of "destiny unknown" nerved them on.

"Queen of the West! Fair city of our hope!
Seated like Rome, upon her seven hills,
With majesty of mountain girt about,
And at thy feet the sea. Mist-swathed at dawn;
Banded with jewels, like the sky, at night.
The soft Pacific wave that laps thy feet
Urges thy freighted ships to distant shores,
Bringing the treasures of the East again.
Here is thy throne of beauty; here we see
The last great monument that man has set
To mark his slow and painful westward way.
Mother of giants yet to be, all hail!
Pulsing with joyous life in all thy veins,
Rich, warm, and young!

"How beautiful thou art!
Stretching thine arms to greet the Orient;
Gazing with eyes of mystery, to pierce
The far sea spaces; dreaming, motherlike;
The boundaries of thy power still unset,
The wonder of thy destiny unknown."

BY THE WOMAN VOTE THE GANG MAYOR WAS RECALLED.

The gang mayor was recalled and defeated by George Dilling, and a new régime was instituted. Later the present mayor, George F. Cotterill, was elected. The incidents of his administration up to the recent disturbance by the enlisted men are fully set forth in a comprehensive and absolutely fair statement of the mayor, published in the Seattle Sun of July 21. This statement I shall place in the RECORD as a part of these remarks.

Mayor Cotterill is a progressive Democrat in politics. He is the head of the International Order of Good Templars. He is a civil engineer of recognized ability in the Northwest. Six years ago he was elected to the State senate in a very largely Republican district, he running as a Democrat. He was elected mayor on a nonpartisan ticket. He is a Christian gentleman, chivalrous, and faithful to duty. He is thoroughly informed on leading topics, and is known and admitted to be one of the first men in the Northwest, both in ability and intelligence.

It is to this man that Alden J. Blethen referred when he used and caused to be published all over the United States in an Associated Press dispatch, to the disgrace of the city in which I live, the following language: "Advocate of anarchy, the leader of a red-flag gang, and a loathsome louse."

CONGRESSMEN GRAHAM AND M'COY CAN TELL OF THE BLETHEN CHARACTER.

I call special attention to the fact that a congressional committee from this House went to Seattle and investigated Judge Hanford. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCCOY] were members of that committee. If any Member of this House desires to verify the diabolical act of Editor Blethen, of the Times, referred to by the mayor in his statement published as part of these remarks, as an incident to show the character of the man—I refer to the photograph episode—let him go to Congressman GRAHAM, who has in his possession a description of the low, vulgar pictures of a naked human base to which this corrupt advertiser, at the expense of the flag and of order, this "patriot" who foams and froths about socialism, caused the head of Dr. M. A. Matthews, the moderator of the Presbyterian Church in America, to be affixed so as to form a new composite portrait—Dr. Matthews, a man of piety, courage, and civic faithfulness, who was at the time urging a grand jury which later caused Blethen-supported dives to be put out of business and a Blethen chum, Chief of Police Wappenstein, to be put in the State penitentiary, where he is now serving his term. The dirty, filthy picture manufactured by this "patriot" exhibits an awful crime against nature. I can not here give even a suggestion of the filthy details.

Is it any wonder that a man who could invent such a scheme to discredit a zealous and faithful pastor of national renown, engaged in a splendid work of reform, would consider a man like Mayor Cotterill "loathsome"?

Seattle's mayor correctly sets forth the trouble with this low, vulgar charlatan. It is not the red flag of the socialist he abhors; it is the white flag of the pure and innocent that goads him. It is not the danger of anarchy that wrings his heart; it is the absence from the city of objects for his lascivious camera that makes him mourn. It is not a fear that honest business will be injured by this new régime of righteousness and law enforcement that makes him plead for a wide-open town; it is his lessened income from illegitimate sources—blood money—and his own realization that certain retribution will fall upon him and his house unless he can force a change of administration and a return to the day of control by the vicious, the gamblers, and the corruptionists that makes him rave and wring his hands in anguish.

OUR OWN COLLEAGUES ARE EYEWITNESSES.

My colleagues, you know Congressman GRAHAM, of Illinois, and Congressman McCOY, of New Jersey. They sit with us here as colleagues, and they have the profound respect of everyone. They went to Seattle on a public mission. They are not partisan. Ask them about this man Alden J. Blethen, who has thus brought all this world-wide criticism upon my home city. See what they have to say about him and his filthy newspaper, and then consider, if you will, the brazen nature of a man who will thus by falsehood and cunning attempt to incite irresponsible sailors and marines to sack and despoil a happy and prosperous city—a Nero who would dance while the city of Seattle, on its hills, its peaceful lakes, and salten shores, is thrown into disorder and danger of bloodshed and riot.

I love the Puget Sound country and the city of Seattle, with its splendid spirit of virility and progress. Secretary Seward visited the little village in 1869, and in Harper's Magazine for September, 1870, Mrs. A. A. Denny, that sweet, gentle, and courageous character, who is known as the mother of Seattle, tells how Secretary Seward was amazed when he observed Puget Sound, "the Mediterranean of the Pacific."

The winter—

the author continues—

is as mild as an eastern spring. Snow seldom visits, and never lies long on the ground. The rosebud may be plucked in the open air at Christmas and geraniums gathered on New Year's Day. A singularly healthful and delightful climate. No sweltering heats of summer cause sleepless nights. No savage winter frosts cramp and pinch the feeble frames.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. The Seattle Daily Sun publishes the following statement by the mayor:

CITY EXECUTIVE TO-DAY FLAYS EDITOR WHO INSTIGATED RIOT—PREPARES PUBLIC STATEMENT, GOING INTO CAUSES OF POTLATCH WEEK TROUBLE—TELLS OF BLETHEN'S PROMISE TO BE GOOD AND DISREGARD OF PROMISE—SAYS RED FLAG HAS WAVED ONLY IN COLUMNS OF TIMES.

[By George F. Cotterill, mayor.]

A PUBLIC STATEMENT.

Now that the riot emergency has been safely passed, a plain statement to the people of Seattle is opportune.

First, permit me to express my devout thankfulness that a situation of such acute danger under stress conditions fraught with great possibilities of injury to life and property has been worked out without loss of life or serious personal injury. To the chief of police and the officers and men under his command, both from the police force and the reserves drawn from the fire department, a debt of public gratitude is due for faithful, tactful service, performed under great difficulties and largely on extra time beyond their hours of regular work and compensation. The cooperation of the naval and military officers in supplying adequate safeguards to protect against any recurrence of riotous and destructive actions is gratefully acknowledged. To the Tilikums, the "white-suit brigade," who rendered special volunteer service in conjunction with the police in the checking and suppression of rowdyism along parade routes and in crowded thoroughfares, this public acknowledgment is made. By all these and other agencies, combined with the abounding good nature and patient self-control of the truly patriotic masses of our people, the closing day of which began in doubt and danger, ended in safety, pleasure, and satisfaction, despite all contrary efforts of those interested in fomenting discord and inciting riot for selfish and political purposes.

TRIED TO PRESERVE ORDER.

I simply endeavored to do my duty in the preservation of public peace and order, the protection of life and property from the influences which were threatening them. In the same spirit with which during the days preceding the potlatch I had given personal attention in cooperation with various city officers to be certain that the grandstands, bridges, wharves, gangways, railways, platforms, and other places where carnival crowds would congregate should be abundantly safeguarded against the possibility of any such disaster as that recently occurring at Long Beach, so when the demonstration of riot danger came with continuing threats on Friday night, it was my plain duty to use the emergency means with which the charter authorizes the mayor to apply the police powers for public protection at critical times.

WHY PEOPLE ELECTED ME.

In the face of the characteristic and expected storm of abuse and falsehood from that most evil and dangerous influence in Seattle—the Seattle Daily Times—a calm and deliberate review statement is timely.

I was elected mayor of Seattle in March, 1912, after a bitter campaign made upon the distinctly moral issue of a clean city, enforcing the law requiring a suppressive, nonrecognition attitude against commercialized vice. This campaign and election verdict was in continuance and confirmation of that rendered by the people in February, 1911, when Mayor Dilling was chosen by recall of Mayor Gill and a law-enforcement policy against vice thereby directly ordered by the voters. My previous public service and lifetime advocacy of this and other moral reforms were well known and always plainly stated. When the people elected me in March, 1912, again defeating Mr. Gill, whose opposite opinions, record, and policy upon the pending moral questions were equally well known and clearly stated, the majority thereby again indicated its clear demand for law enforcement and a clean city. Through 16 months I have endeavored to be true to that trust.

APOLOGIST FOR VICE.

The same campaign and election also distinctly involved certain progressive, economic issues in advancement and defense of the people's interests against franchise abuses and other forms of plundering the public for corporation special privilege and private gain at public expense. The protection of our public-owned utilities, the increasing of their facilities for public service, the lowering of their rates as reducing cost conditions permit, and the extension of the just and economic principle of public ownership to other forms of public utilities as opportunity can be found upon a safe financial basis, supplanting private-monopoly tribute with public service at cost and leaving the profits in the people's pockets.

Through several campaigns involving these moral and economic reform questions the Seattle Daily Times has stood and to-day stands as the newspaper advocate and apologist for vice and vicious interests, for crime and criminals, for public plunder, and for various forms of personal and private monopoly, grafters, legalized and otherwise, who profit from public plunder.

From the time of my election this paper, dominated by its editor in chief, Alden J. Blethen, determined upon and has continuously pursued a policy intended to discredit and destroy my influence and efforts to do my duty along the lines for which the people elected me. It has stopped at no slander, falsehood, misrepresentation, plot, or conspiracy in its efforts to accomplish its vicious purpose. It furnished the publicity breath of life for an election contest which miserably collapsed and for the vice syndicate attempt at recall, which dragged through six months of stimulated existence until finally and officially exposed as a fiasco of fraud and forgeries worthy of its source.

TIMES PROMISED TO BE GOOD.

At the beginning of my term there was an ostentatious declaration that the Times, despite its previous career of vice-interest championship, with its accompanying grand jury indictments of Alden J. Blethen and associates for participation in unlawful and vicious practices and profits, would accept the twice-given verdict of the people and cooperate with the new administration for united civic advance under clean city conditions. Suppressing doubts, I accepted that assurance as personally and publicly given shortly after my election. The almost immediate violation of that pledged cooperation was a disappointment, but not a surprise. I was informed by a mutual friend that this lapse was probably due to the absence of Alden J. Blethen from the city and urged to present the entire situation to him immediately upon his return in early May. I did so, spending two or three hours in consultation with him. The particular points of the campaign of misrepresentation and falsehood which had been launched during his absence were presented and an investigation and remedy promised. A few days later I received a letter from Alden J. Blethen ratifying the policy of his subordinates. Since then all hope of reform or fairness in that quarter has been abandoned by me.

THOSE OBSCENE PHOTOGRAPHS.

In the light of the despicable tactics which have been subsequently employed, an incident of that consultation of May, 1912, will demonstrate the desperate resourcefulness of the dominating personal factor whose enmity I have deservedly earned. At that time Alden J. Blethen was bitter in his denunciation of Dr. Matthews, Prosecuting Attorney Murphy, and others connected with the grand jury which had indicted him. With singular boldness he forced upon my attention two disgraceful photographs bearing the heads of the two gentlemen above named upon human figures in indescribably loathsome relations. He—Alden J. Blethen—explained in detail how and why he had conceived the idea of these vile photographs, secured foundation pictures by searching out some indecencies from a Paris collection, engaged one of our best Seattle artists to combine them with perfect photographic skill with the heads and faces of Dr. Matthews and of Prosecuting Attorney Murphy. The name of the photographer and the price he paid him for the making of these faked exhibitions of degeneracy was part of the Blethen recital. The memory of that disgusting and criminal conception has been a constant reminder of public danger from a source capable of conjuring and perpetrating such an infamy.

"Patriotism is the last refuge of scoundrels."

FLAG FOR ADVERTISING.

The Seattle Daily Times seized the American flag for advertising purposes, and daily desecrates the flag and denies or degrades the principles for which it stands.

Its specialty for 16 months has been a "red-flag campaign" for political effect in the desired destruction of Mayor Cotterill for the restoration of "wide-open" vice conditions and the unchecked rule of private monopoly corporations. The Times' misrepresentations have gone unanswered by me and largely unchallenged by anyone. Denial of Times' falsehoods is waste energy, for the reason underlying the dismissal of the latest Blethen indictment, viz, that the Times can not be guilty of libel because it is not necessary that its articles should be true. The people do not expect the truth from the Times.

What are the facts about this "red-flag agitation," "anarchist street speakers," etc.?

LAW, NOT "POLICY."

From the time I became mayor of the city of Seattle I have directed constantly that in the making of arrests without warrant no person shall be thus arrested unless the officer making the arrest has information of his own knowledge or evidence from some other person upon which to base a definite charge for the violation of some law or ordinance. So far as I have controlling influence, there has been and shall be no dragging of people to jail for detention and release without charge, or for nominal charge unsustained by evidence and expecting dismissal by the police judge.

The police department of this city is under orders to enforce the laws of Washington and the ordinances of Seattle—not any "mayor's policy."

ATTACKS ON FLAG PROHIBITED.

Free speech has been and shall be maintained in Seattle, subject only to laws and ordinances dealing with the abuse of it. The test of free speech is not my belief in or agreement with what the speaker says. It is popular in certain quarters to decry the "soap-box orator," and other choice epithets applied to street speaking. There is no law or ordinance prohibiting street speaking. When any street speaker unreasonably obstructs traffic, or uses profane, obscene, threatening, treasonable, flag-deriding, or riot-inciting language, either on the street or elsewhere, that speaker is not only abusing free speech but is violating some specific State law or city ordinance. From the beginning of my term as mayor it has been my constant and repeated instruction to police officers, through the chief, that any such abuse heard or observed by any officer, or brought to his attention by any hearer or observer able to furnish evidence, shall be promptly dealt with by arrest for the specific offense. When complaint has been brought to my attention of any such offense I have invariably called upon the complainant to support his charge with evidence, that an arrest and prosecution might follow. On occasion, when the Seattle Times has printed quoted treasonable statements alleged to have been made by some speaker, I have demanded from the reporter or city editor that they support by evidence a prosecution in the particular case which they claim to have heard. Such request has been refused.

ONLY ASKS EVIDENCE.

I can not lawfully, nor will I arbitrarily, attempt to suppress or curtail free speech anywhere on suspicion or rumor or Seattle Times' lies, even though their reiteration without answer may deceive a few people into belief. There may have been some abuse of free speech, just as the Seattle Times almost daily abuses the companion principle of a "free press," but no speaker has done so or can do so by authority or encouragement from the mayor of this city. Let me say publicly, what I have said a hundred times since becoming mayor, that if any person hears any speaker, on the street or elsewhere, using language or uttering sentiments in violation of any law or ordinance, have enough civic patriotism to give that information to the nearest officer, or to the chief of police, or to the mayor, and be willing to furnish the necessary evidence for a prosecution and a wholesome public example if the offender be found guilty. Policemen are not sufficiently numerous in Seattle to attend as auditors or censors throughout every street or other public meeting. They have other important duties, but they will always be found ready to act promptly on violations under their notice or brought to their attention.

The cold facts are that most of the "anarchist street speaking" occurs in the columns of the Seattle Times, and nowhere else. The usual complaint which comes to my attention simmers down to a difference of opinion between the auditor and the speaker on some question of religious or political belief involving no violation of law. I am a fundamental progressive Democrat, but I have no desire as a citizen nor as mayor to limit the fullest educational presentation of any and every other form of political belief, however much I may disagree with it.

Free speech shall be protected in Seattle to the limit of my power as mayor, and its abuse punished to the extent official knowledge and adequate proof of law violation can be brought to bear upon it.

NO RED FLAGS DISPLAYED.

Notwithstanding the fact that there has been an utter absence of any law or ordinance prohibiting the use of any red flag or banner any more than a yellow, green, or blue one, the only real "red-flag agitation" there has been in Seattle has been in the Seattle Daily Times as stock in trade for its destructive political purposes. It can be abundantly demonstrated by detail evidence that without the use of arbitrary power, but by more effective counsel and influence, the red flag has not been used in any procession or at any street meeting to my knowledge in Seattle since May 1, 1912. The banner then used in the Socialist celebration was carried contrary to my warning and counsel, but was accompanied by an American flag at the head of the procession. This arrangement was exactly in accordance with the request of a large committee representing all the local patriotic organizations.

PEACE PRESERVED.

During the 15 months following that procession the only red-flag carrying has been in the Seattle Times' riot-inciting articles. It may be that within their halls or headquarters, just as lodges have their banners, the Socialists or Industrial Workers may have a banner of that color on their walls. I have had no occasion to enter or attend their meetings and have no detail knowledge on that point. I do know that since the Times' manufactured, grossly exaggerated incident of 15 months ago no red banners have been carried by Socialists or Industrial Workers, and the public peace has been absolutely preserved despite the constant nagging and aggravation of the situation by the Seattle Times.

My attitude throughout has been one of constant warning and counsel against anything resembling red-flag carrying, and I have secured results without official tyranny.

"CAREFULLY PREPARED BOMB."

Such has been my attitude, record, and results along these lines of Times misrepresentations. So long as I felt able to preserve the public peace regardless, I paid no attention to its ulterior but transparent falsehoods. Although constantly seeking to incite riots, it was as impotent as it was false. Its "wolf, wolf," is an old story to Seattle citizens. On Friday, July 18, however, the Times deliberately threw a carefully prepared bomb into the Potlatch situation powder mill. An ordinary drunken-sailor street fight, occasioned by an attack upon a harmless woman speaker, was quickly and thoroughly handled by the police without serious injury to anyone. It was deliberately distorted by the Times into an organized attack by the Industrial Workers upon helpless soldiers and sailors. This report was shrewdly combined with a similarly distorted and exaggerated reference to the speech of Secretary of the Navy Daniels at the Rainier Club banquet. The net and intended effect of the publication was to incite the riotous attack which followed that evening, with the destruction of property and danger to human life attending it.

The climax day of the Potlatch was at hand and I applied every power at command to preserve the peace and prevent renewed rioting and threats to life and property. I will not comment upon the demonstration that a riot-inciting newspaper is superior to the emergency and protective police powers placed by its charter in the mayor as the supposedly representative peace officer for 295,000 people. Let the future solve that problem.

HAD FOUR HOURS' SLEEP.

I tried to do my duty as I saw it. I had 4 hours' sleep during the last 48 of the Potlatch, and the remainder was spent in public duty striving to protect and assure the public safety. I did not at any time "hide away" from service of any papers, and never for a moment indicated or suggested a possibility of disobeying the order of any court regardless of my opinion concerning it. The talk or threat of "bench warrants" or arrests never came to my notice until I read of it (in the Times) the next day. I constantly sought and followed the advice of the corporation counsel as my legal adviser in public duty. I went with that officer, as was my right and duty, to the court room of Judge Humphries, and a request was there made to present the evidence of the chief of police and myself as to the public necessity of the case in the hope of modifying the court's order, which had been granted without knowledge or hearing of the city's side. That request of the city was denied, and the court in refusing us the opportunity to be heard took occasion to spend half an hour or more in what the Times calls a "lecture." To just the extent of the time consumed in my respectful attention to that "lecture" of Judge Humphries the publication of the Times was delayed beyond what would otherwise have occurred. I simply awaited the conclusion of the "lecture," which included his ruling, to get the order to the police at the Times Building to release the situation. It would most certainly have been contempt of court for the chief of police or myself to have left the court room to go to a phone and transmit the order while Judge Humphries was directly addressing us. Perhaps we needed the half hour's "lecture" more than the people needed the Seattle Times.

REGARDING RECALL.

I have no apology to make for being British born nor that my father had the good judgment to choose America as our home when I was 4 years old, and thereby to endow me with the privilege of an American education, environment, and citizenship, with a patriotism that means service and not advertising. I love the flag for its principles, not for opportunity to plunder behind its folds. The Seattle Times may organize a new vice-syndicate attempt at my recall as fast as it chooses, and not a single technical objection will be placed in its path.

I have lived 29 years of open life in Seattle from boyhood, and Alden J. Blethen is welcome to find the spots upon it, and if not, to manufacture more fake photographs.

"Let the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing."

If I can be blown down by a putrid blast from the Seattle Times, I have no right or desire to publicly serve in a community which prefers government by one newspaper editor serving vice and plunder to government by the people for their own interest.

Its editor may spew, slime, and threaten suits, but so long as I am mayor of Seattle I will use every power at my command to fulfill the public trust imposed upon me in behalf of all the people and for their public service and safety.

GEO. F. COTTERILL, Mayor.

The Seattle Daily Sun contains the following editorial:

CAUSE OF FRIDAY'S RIOT.

Now that the smoke has cleared away and a calm and dispassionate judgment can be given of the causes leading up to the dangerous riot of last Friday night, the fact stands grimly out that but for the incendiary articles printed in the Seattle Times there would have been no riot and the fair name of the city would not have been besmirched.

It matters not how the fighting between a handful of I. W. W.'s and a squad of sailors began.

The Times exploited the affair and aroused a mob.

It took a most reckless course, jeopardizing the lives and property of the people of Seattle.

By great good fortune the crisis passed without a bloody battle in the streets and the application of incendiary torches.

If we are to have mob law instead of legally constituted laws, with order and safety, then only was the course of the Times justifiable.

But the Sun does not believe that the majority of the people of this city want mob law, no matter how strongly they may disapprove of the views of the I. W. W.'s.

When the Times leads a mob it becomes itself an I. W. W. to all intents and purposes, encouraging lawlessness and the destruction of property, just as the I. W. W.'s do.

The plain truth of the whole matter is that the Times was again befouling the American flag by using it for cheap advertising purposes. The wild, frothing outfit which edit that newspaper have no more real patriotism than the average law-abiding citizen possesses, and probably not half so much, but it has been one of the old dodges of the sheet to howl day after day about its marvelous loyalty to Old Glory and to print pictures in color of the flag, time and again, on billboards and on its front page, in a strenuous effort to make the public believe that everybody in the establishment would die martyrs' deaths in case the flag was attacked.

When the Times burned out a few months ago, owing to somebody dropping a cigarette stub in the waste paper in C. B. Blethen's upstairs office, the Times sought to make capital out of the incident by alleging that red-handed anarchists had tried to destroy the paper because of its loyalty to Old Glory.

And when its building was rebuilt the Times staff got up on the roof with a number of unwilling guests and made a fine spectacle by shooting bombs in the air and raising Ned in an effort to parade their patriotism.

The whole business caused ridicule from one end of town to the other.

The law forbids the use of the American flag for advertising purposes, but the Blethens use it freely upon every possible occasion.

It is the insane arrogance marking the conduct of the Times that has done more to discredit it than all other things combined.

The San Francisco Call says editorially of the disturbance in Seattle:

There is one dangerous result that may follow from the Seattle riot. It was created by uniformed men, who are supposed to be guardians of the peace and preservers of liberty. If soldiers and sailors take to rioting against civilians, no matter what the political views of the latter may be, it can hardly be expected that the lawless tendencies of the soap-box orators will be restrained; but, on the contrary, that rioting by the advocates of order will lead to rioting by the forces of disorder.

Mayor Cotterill, a Democrat and social uplifter, against whose administration, because he has made Seattle what is called a closed town, there has been much agitation by the agents of corruption and their supporters, seems to have acted with firmness and promptness in his attempt to suppress any further rioting. For their own good name and that of the coast the citizens of Seattle should support him unitedly until peace is restored.

The following is taken from the Seattle Daily Sun concerning the first altercation, alleged to have been the cause of the trouble.

Sworn affidavits of persons who saw or took part in Thursday night's fight and official reports of Army officers all go to show the truth of the following account.

REAL NAME BOEHMKE.

Wallace's real name is Boehmke. He is a sergeant at Fort Worden. He was injured in a street fight Thursday night, when he and two companions insulted a woman's rights speaker at Washington Street.

She was Mrs. Annie Miller, who is not a member of the I. W. W., and who made absolutely no reference to the red flag in her remarks. When Boehmke was taken to the police station with two companions he gave the name "Wallace." His companions gave their true names of Sergt. Frank Santerre and Pvt. Patrick Coyle.

All three were suffering with merely slight bruises and injuries, and were discharged from the city hospital in two hours. None of them was even near death, officers at the fort say.

FALSE IN NEARLY ALL DETAILS.

Accounts of this fight, which are being gathered by means of affidavits, say that the Times' account of this, which is combined with a perverted account of Secretary Daniels's speech at the Rainier Club, was false in almost every detail. In the Times story it was made to appear that the soldiers were set upon by members of the I. W. W. as a result of their resenting slurring remarks against the uniform. Facts, as gathered in affidavits from spectators, show:

That Mrs. Annie Miller, a street speaker, hired a stand and placed it at Washington Street, near Occidental. At the beginning of her talk a large sailor told her she had better "shut up," as, being a woman, she had always been a slave. Mrs. Miller paid no attention to him, and he disappeared.

About 15 minutes later he returned with other companions. They were all in various stages of intoxication, from "half shot" to "paralyzed." They began an attempt to break up the meeting by jeering. Mrs. Miller replied by advising them to be gentlemen and to respect her rights. They were persistent, profane, and obscene, and the meeting was closed. Uniformed men then took positions on the stool and conducted a mock meeting. At one time three of them tried to stand on it.

WAS ABOUT TO STRIKE WOMAN.

The crowd laughed at this, taking it as a drunken prank. Mrs. Miller, after a few minutes, attempted to get her stand back, to return it to the person from whom she rented it. The men in uniforms would not give it up. Several men then tried to get the stool, and Mrs. Miller tried again.

The large sailor who had first called her a slave and advised her to "shut up" raised his fist to strike her. A large, well-dressed man, with a diamond ring, who bore no resemblance to the typical I. W. W., then broke in.

"You would strike a woman!" he shouted, and struck the sailor with his fist a number of times. Mrs. Miller was then grabbed by one of the men, but escaped from the crowd through the aid of spectators. The fight started as she was being carried out. This developed into a general mêlée, which was stopped only by the arrival of the police, who rescued the men in uniforms and took them to the city hospital, where they were treated. It was there that Boehmke gave the name "Wallace."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Kansas to use his two minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas yielded his two minutes to me.

Mr. MURDOCK. I did, but I would like to have them back.

Mr. MANN. I yield back the two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. I then yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS].

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to this debate, going on as it has for five or six hours, with a great deal of interest, and I have been very much interested during the filibuster for the past week or two to know what would become of this matter. If there is anything in the question at all that is of interest to the people it is the question whether justice goes unbought in this country, whether some interests can go to the Department of Justice and get advantages or privileges that are denied to people generally. It seems to me that this discussion, side-stepping an issue of great importance, has degenerated into a mere scrap between the two old parties. The Republican Party makes charges against the Democratic administration, and the answer to those charges are countercharges and recriminations on the part of the Democrats. The Republicans in all this debate practically say, "See what your Attorney General has done"; the Democrats say, "Well, see what your Attorney General has done"; all of which goes to show the people that perhaps there is more than mere suspicion behind the charges that there are privileges enjoyed by some that are not enjoyed by others. As I have heard these recriminations and scrappings and maneuvers for political advantage go on day after day, I am reminded of the case of the Kilkenny cats. You will remember how the doggerel goes:

There was once two cats in Kilkenny,
And each thought there was one cat too many;
And they fought and they bit, and they squalled and they spit,
Until prisently 'stead of two cats in Kilkenny
Be gorra th' wasn't any.

And these two old parties are proving by their recriminations and scrappings and maneuvers for political advantage that there is one law for the strong and another law for the weak; that "privilege" exists, while the thinking people of the country will conclude, "a plague upon both your houses."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be recognized for one minute. If I had a little more time, I would criticize the action of the Attorney General in reference to these cases, and possibly the action of the President of the United States. There are, however, some things that these gentlemen have done that we do not wish to criticize and in which we all agree. I want now to congratulate the President of the United States and his Attorney General upon an act which has been recently performed by the President, undoubtedly with the approval and possibly on the advice of the Attorney General, and also to congratulate this House on the nomination and confirmation of one of its ablest and truest Members as Solicitor General of the United States. JOHN WILLIAM DAVIS, we all take off our hats to you. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a pleasant diversion. I desire to depart from the resolution under discussion long enough to concur in the handsome tribute so deservedly paid to my associate on the Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois for his thoughtfulness in bringing this particular matter to the attention of the House and for the graceful way in which he has referred to our most worthy colleague. I desire to say here that JOHN WILLIAM DAVIS is not only a lawyer of great acquired ability, but he is a natural lawyer. I sometimes think that it takes the hand of God Almighty to help make a great lawyer, because in some sort of way a man's brain must be so constructed in the beginning that he have the power of analysis, a natural analytical mind, so that by the development, through study and industry, of his powers he may become truly a great lawyer. No man without the power of analysis can become a great lawyer.

I am indeed gratified that the President of the United States and the Attorney General have seen fit to choose our distinguished colleague for this high position, and I am also gratified that the distinguished leader of the minority, as do all of us, concurs in the proposition that this honor has been most worthily bestowed. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITZHENRY].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if it should develop that there be no quorum present in the House and the House should adjourn, would this debate go over until next Friday under the order of the House?

The SPEAKER. The debate on this matter would be in order right after the reading of the Journal and the routine business upon Friday.

Mr. MANN. I understood that the gentleman from Alabama desired to make a few remarks, and he requested me, if I should feel disposed to make a point of order of no quorum, to permit him to make a few suggestions. I feel disposed to make the point of no quorum, because I think the gentleman from Alabama ought to have an opportunity to address the House when the House is fresh.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I have to say that I presumed the gentleman would insist this afternoon, as he has insisted heretofore, upon a roll call, and perhaps also the question would be raised either directly or indirectly, either in that way or otherwise, of the absence of a quorum. It is now within six minutes of the hour of 5. I have no desire to burden the House with any lengthy remarks of mine this afternoon. My friend Mr. FITZHENRY, of the Committee on the Judiciary, desires 10 minutes, and preferably he would rather deliver his speech at the next sitting of the House. For myself, it is immaterial. I am ready now or will be ready then, but I think I owe it to the House to accede to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois after I have made a brief statement.

Mr. Speaker, this unfounded and unjustifiable attack being made upon the Attorney General is only a part of the attack made upon him in different parts of the country, and I charge here that that attack is made in behalf of special interests who wish to destroy this able, fearless, and conscientious head of the Department of Justice.

Of course, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is one of the innocent instruments of special interests, for instance, like the Tobacco Trust and illegal railroad combinations, who are trying to destroy a great and a faithful officer. And as illustrative of this effort and of this well-systematized purpose to destroy this faithful official, I call the attention of the House and the country to this untruthful and unjustifiable utterance that I find printed in one of the morning papers under the date line of New York, July 29, saying:

Reports from the Department of Justice indicate that under the interpretation placed on the Mann White Slave Act by Attorney General McReynolds, the Caminetti-Diggs white-slave cases in California may not be brought to prosecution.

It is understood that the Attorney General has issued directions to all the United States attorneys that no prosecutions be brought under the Mann Act except those in which the defendant is shown to be sharing in the profits of the white-slave traffic.

I hold in my hand a copy of an authorized statement made by this high official of our Government. Under a sense of official responsibility, and in the presence of the American people, and in refutation of the unfounded charge, this statement is made by the Attorney General, and it will be found in the press, if not this afternoon, to-morrow morning. I have been this moment told that it has already been printed in one of the afternoon papers of this city. This is the statement made by the Attorney General:

The following statement was given out to-day at the Department of Justice in reference to the article in a local morning paper, purporting to be a quotation from a New York paper, to the effect that, under an interpretation placed by the Attorney General upon the white-slave traffic act, the Diggs-Caminetti cases in California may not be brought to trial, and that instructions had been issued to all United States attorneys confining the enforcement of the act to cases in which the defendants participate in the profits of the white-slave traffic:

"These statements are wholly incorrect and misleading. No construction has been placed by the Attorney General or by the department upon the white-slave traffic act which will interfere with the prosecution of the Diggs-Caminetti cases. Those cases are set for trial, and the department confidently expects that they will be tried, on August 5. They are in the hands of eminent special counsel, who have been directed to proceed without delay.

"As to the second statement, no general instructions have been issued to United States attorneys as to the enforcement of the white-slave traffic or as to the construction to be given it. In the enforcement of the act the general policy established during the previous administration has been adhered to."

[Applause.]

And there is nothing in the Diggs-Caminetti cases that shows any departure from the course pursued by the Department of Justice when predecessors of Mr. McReynolds were in that high office.

I hold in my hand the records in cases similar to this, where Attorney General Wickersham—and I am not questioning the propriety of his action—not only continued cases, but he instructed public officials to discontinue their efforts in the prosecution of some cases under the white-slave act. And I think that his conduct, if open to criticism, and if in following Mr. Wickersham in any respect this Attorney General has erred, it is the error that comes from following precedents and not an error from any intention to shield a criminal so that he might go unwhipped of justice.

You have in the person of the present Attorney General a great lawyer, a brave man, and a conscientious public servant, who has concealed nothing, who has nothing to conceal, who invites the fullest measure of criticism; and to show that he has not merited any criticism, the puny politics played by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] here to-day, in the useless consumption of public time, that gentleman has not dared to attack the integrity, official or personal, of James C. McReynolds. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I accede to the request made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and reserve the balance of my time until the next meeting of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to withhold his point of order until a short message from the President of the United States can be read.

Mr. MANN. I have not made it yet.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ARTISTIC CHARACTER OF STRUCTURES OF PANAMA CANAL (S. DOC. NO. 146).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the message ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Commission of Fine Arts, containing their recommendations regarding the artistic character of the structures of the Panama Canal, made in pursuance of the authority contained in section 4 of the act of Congress to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, approved August 24, 1912.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 29, 1913.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is a note attached to that message, which says that the documents are sent to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we could not hear the statement made by the Speaker. I do not know whether it was addressed to the House or not.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the Chair was that there is a note attached to the message, which says that the documents are sent to the Senate.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH] asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the claim of George Q. Allen, S. 4535, Sixtieth Congress, second session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that there is no quorum present. It is now after 5 o'clock, and the evening is hot. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, under the previous order, until Friday, August 1, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $92 to reimburse William H. Galbreath for expenses incurred in going from Durango, Colo., to Muskogee, Okla., and return in February, 1911 (H. Doc. No. 168), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Michigan, protesting against certain provisions of the parcel post, and of H. P. Hathaway, against sending of "held for postage" cards; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. STEPHENS of California: Petition of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, of Los Angeles, Cal., favoring the passage of the Nelson-Madden consular bill (S. 134 and H. R. 1723); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WILSON of New York: Petition of the National German-American Alliance of Philadelphia, Pa., protesting against a duty on German books; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 30, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the part of the Journal be again read at the point where the tariff bill was taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

On motion of Mr. SIMMONS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of H. R. 3321——

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to call attention to the fact (and I notice that that phraseology has been heretofore used in the Journal) that it was not on motion but that by unanimous consent the bill was taken up. I ask to have that correction made, for the reason that those of us on this side are quite willing that the bill shall always be taken up by unanimous consent, and that has been the request which the Senator from North Carolina has made day by day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That correction will be made, and with that correction, if there be no other, the Journal will stand approved as read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the Journals covering the period of the consideration of the tariff bill be corrected to correspond to the correction that was made in the Journal this morning, showing that the tariff bill has been taken up by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That correction will be ordered, so as to show that the bill was taken up by unanimous consent, that being within the knowledge of the Chair.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2374) providing for the care of the Confederate Stockade Cemetery, Johnstons Island, in Sandusky Bay, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 90) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2715) to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 91) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine:

A bill (S. 2856) providing for the retirement of certain medical officers of the Army (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 2857) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Florine A. Albright; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2858) granting a pension to Phebe W. Chase; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 2859) waiving the age limit for the appointment as assistant surgeon in the Medical Reserve Corps in the United States Navy in the case of M. B. Bransford; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS, ETC.

Mr. LEWIS. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask to have read and that it take the usual course.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury under certain conditions when established to withdraw Government deposits from certain institutions and to withdraw charters and to prevent further enjoyment of the same, was read the first time by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois desire to have the joint resolution read at length?

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to have the joint resolution read at this time, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, under certain conditions when established, to withdraw Government deposits from certain institutions and to withdraw charters and to prevent further enjoyment of the same.

Whereas the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States in his official capacity has proclaimed to the public by public expression that certain banks and banking institutions, existing by virtue of the laws of the United States, and doing business by favor of the laws of the United States, and exercising privileges by favor of the people of the United States, have banded themselves together in some form of arrangement and proceeded in execution of such arrangement to intimidate Congress and terrorize the citizens of the United States through inciting fear of a panic; and in pursuance of their scheme have falsely depressed securities of the United States and discredited the bonds of the United States Government and placed them at dishonor before the world, all for the object of influencing legislation contrary to the popular will and to defeat the President of the United States, speaking in behalf of the people, and to force legislation along such lines as shall be profitable to the personal objects and purposes of such institutions; and

Whereas such course and conduct, if true as charged, is an offense against patriotism and in violation of the duty of such institutions, due to the citizens of America, to the prosperity of its people, and the honor of the Republic: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized in all instances where he has evidence of such conduct on the part of any institution, corporation, association, or person, in combination with each other, in conjunction or separate, to duly cite before him the representative of such institutions or the agents or authorities of such institution or institutions, and, in due hearing, if the said fact be established to his satisfaction, he shall have the right and the privilege to publicly withdraw the Government deposits from such institution, corporation, or person, and make order prohibiting the said institution, corporation, association, or person from further enjoying any privileges or favors of the Treasury of the United States or of the public moneys of the people of the United States. Also, in cases and instances, in his judgment justified, he shall have the right and privilege by public order to withdraw the charters of the said institutions, wherever such charters are issued by or under the authority of the Department of the Secretary of the Treasury; and shall have authority and privilege to issue any other order and carry the same into effect, depriving the said institutions of any right or privilege by them or it enjoyed under the United States Treasury or the office of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That any order of the Secretary of the Treasury made in pursuance of the above authority shall be subject to revision by Congress, through its appropriate committees, in the regular form of legislation as the procedure of Congress permits.

Resolved further, That the order of the said Secretary of the Treasury, within the heretofore-named authority vested in him, shall go into effect immediately upon the making of the said order by the Secretary of the Treasury and remain in effect until the same shall either be reversed or modified by the Secretary of the Treasury or by Congress through its appropriate avenues provided for revision or reversal of any order or action of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, I suppose.

Mr. LEWIS. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia. His judgment of the propriety or appropriateness of the reference is better than my own.

I wish to announce that I will address the Senate on the joint resolution at a due and proper time.

Mr. GALLINGER. The resolving clause of the joint resolution manifestly ought to be changed, and if it is a concurrent resolution it also ought to be changed.

Mr. LEWIS. I accept the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, and at a later time amendments will be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

TAX ON OPIUM.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

BERLIN TREATY OF 1878.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 143), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas it is reported that the Roumanian Government has failed to observe that article of the treaty of Berlin of 1878 which provides that religion shall be no bar to the rights and privileges of citizenship in Roumania; and

Whereas the failure of the Roumanian Government to observe the provisions of the Berlin treaty would be discriminatory as against the native Jews of Roumania, affecting them prejudicially in matters of employment and preferment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to inform the United States Senate whether any communication has been had with the Roumanian Government or the powers signatory to the treaty of Berlin in relation to the observance of said treaty or with respect to a naturalization convention between the United States and the Roumanian Government; and, if so, and no conclusions have been reached thereon, whether the United States has such interests with respect to said treaty and the operation thereof as to make further diplomatic negotiations desirable.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT (S. DOC. NO. 147).

Mr. JONES. I have here a copy of the permit granted to the International Power & Manufacturing Co., of Spokane, Wash., with reference to the use of public lands and lands in forest reserves in connection with water-power development. The terms of the permit have been prepared with very great care by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, and they have agreed upon the terms of the permit. It shows to a great degree the policy of these two departments with reference to the use of forest lands and public lands in connection with water-power development. I consider this to be a very important matter, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and also that it be printed as a public document.

There being no objection, the paper was ordered to be printed as a document and also to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER.

FINAL PERMIT INVOLVING POWER.

[Act of Feb. 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790). Regulations of Mar. 1, 1913.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Washington.

Applicant: International Power & Manufacturing Co., Spokane, Wash.

Principal works: Dam and power plant.

Location: Ts. 39 and 40 N., R. 43 E., Willamette meridian, Washington, on Clark Fork or Pend d'Oreille River.

Purpose of occupation and use of public lands: Construction, operation, and maintenance of works for the generation, distribution, and use of electrical power.

Date of initiation of priority: July 22, 1913.

Date of initiation of valid rights as against other claimants: July 22, 1913.

AGREEMENT.

The International Power & Manufacturing Co., hereinafter called the permittee, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Washington, the office and principal place of business of said permittee being at Spokane, Wash., being the successor in interest of the Pend d'Oreille Development Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington and authorized by act of Congress approved February 25, 1907 (34 Stat., 931), extended by act of Congress May 20, 1912 (37 Stat., 115), to construct a dam across Clark Fork or Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington, for the development of water power, electrical power, and for other purposes, which said dam was to be constructed, maintained, and operated in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 23, 1910 (36 Stat., 593), entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,'" approved June 21, 1906; and the said permittee in accordance with the provisions of the said act of Congress approved June 23, 1910, has submitted, under date of June 3, 1912, to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army plans and specifications and maps showing the location of such dam and necessary works, and the said permittee having heretofore filed in the Department of the Interior an application, designated as Spokane .08319, and including the following-described map of location: Map of location of reservoir site and power plant, marked "Exhibit J1," bearing affidavit of M. H. Gerry, jr., engineer, and certificate of International Power & Manufacturing Co., by Wilbur S. Yearsley, vice president, under corporate seal of said company, filed in the General Land Office, Washington, D. C., on July 22, 1913; and said permittee having filed an application in the Department of Agriculture, including a duplicate of said map of location, said applications filed in the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture, hereinafter called the final application, having been made for the purpose of obtaining permission to occupy and use certain lands under the jurisdiction of the said departments for the purposes of the act of Congress approved February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790), for the construction, operation, and maintenance of certain works, said lands and works being more particularly described in and located and shown by the final application, does hereby amend said final application to include this agreement, and, furthermore, does hereby covenant and agree, in consideration of and as a prerequisite to the giving of the permission applied for in the final application as thus amended, such permission being hereinafter called the permit, that the conditions of the permit, each and every one of which shall at all times be binding on the permittee, are as follows:

SECTION 1. The following terms, wherever used in this agreement, shall have the respective meanings in this section assigned to them:

(a) "Interior Department lands" means lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior for the purposes of the act of Congress approved February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790), and "national forest lands" means lands under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture for said purposes.

(b) "Secretaries" means the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture.

(c) "Power business" means the entire business of the applicant or permittee in the generation, distribution, and delivery of power by means of any one power system, together with all works and tangible property involved therein, including freeholds and leaseholds in real property.

(d) "Power system" means all interconnected plants and works for the generation, distribution, and delivery of power.

(e) "Power project" means a complete unit of power development, consisting of a power house, conduit or conduits conducting water thereto, all storage or diverting or fore-bay reservoirs used in connection therewith, the transmission line delivering power therefrom, any other miscellaneous structures used in connection with said unit or any part thereof, and all lands the occupancy and use of which are necessary or appropriate in the development of power in said unit.

(f) "Project works" means the physical structures of a power project.

(g) "Construction of the project works" means the actual construction of dams, water conduits, power houses, transmission lines, or some permanent structure necessary to the operation of the complete power project and does not include surveys or the building of roads and trails, or the clearing of reservoir sites or other lands to be occupied, or the performance of any work preliminary to the actual construction of the permanent project works.

(h) "Customer" means the purchaser of electric current for redistribution and sale.

(i) "Consumer" means the user of current at the point of its final conversion into light, heat, or power.

(j) "Nominal stream flow" means the sum of (a) the average of the values estimated for the mean natural flow for the two-month (calendar) minimum-flow period in each successive five-year cycle or major fraction thereof, and (b) the increase in such average due to artificial means other than the project works.

(k) "Project storage flow" means the estimated increase in nominal stream flow made practicable by the project works.

(m) "Load factor" means the ratio of average power output to maximum power output.

(n) "Total capacity of the power site" means the power estimated to be available for transmission, and is determined as the continued product of (1) the factor 0.08; (2) the average effective head, in feet; (3) the available stream flow at the intake (in second-feet and in amount not to exceed the maximum hydraulic capacity of the project works); and (4) a factor, not less than the average load factor of the power system, representing the degree of practicable utilization of the available stream flow, and based on the extent of practicable fore-bay storage and the load factor of the power system.

SEC. 2. The permit shall be subject to and the permittee shall be governed by the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790), and to the regulations thereunder fixed by the Secretaries.

SEC. 3. The permit shall relate solely to the occupancy and use of the Interior Department lands and national forest lands necessary for the construction, operation, and maintenance of such works contemplated by the act of Congress approved February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790), as are described in the final application, to the extent of the ground occupied by such works and not to exceed 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits of works other than pipe lines and electrical transmission lines and not to exceed 50 feet on each side of the center of each pipe line or electrical transmission line, in conformity with the location of such works on said lands as shown by the maps of location hereinbefore described.

SEC. 4. The permittee shall construct the project works on the location shown upon and in accordance with said maps and plans submitted with the final application, and shall make no material deviation from said location unless and until maps and plans showing such deviation shall have been submitted and approved by the Secretaries.

SEC. 5. Any approval of any alteration or amendment, or of any map or plan, or of any extension of time, shall affect only the portions specifically covered by such approval; and no approval of any such alteration, amendment, or extension shall operate to alter or amend, or in any way whatsoever be a waiver of any other part, condition, or provision of the permit.

SEC. 6. The permittee shall begin the construction of the project works and of the several parts thereof and shall thereafter diligently and continuously prosecute such construction to completion, unless temporarily interrupted by climatic conditions or by some special or peculiar cause beyond the control of the permittee, within the respective periods, dating from the issuance of the permit, specified for such beginning and for such completion in the following schedule:

1. Project works as a whole, excepting installation of hydraulic and electric machinery, shall be begun within one year and completed within three years.

2. Installation of hydraulic and electric machinery: Machinery of 50,000 horsepower rated capacity shall be installed within three years; and additional machinery shall be installed as the conditions of the market will warrant or as the Secretaries or any duly authorized State agency may direct.

SEC. 7. The permittee shall, after their completion, operate the project works continuously for the development and transmission of electric energy for sale or other disposal, unless upon a full and satisfactory showing that such operation is prevented by unavoidable accidents or contingencies this requirement is temporarily waived by the written consent of the Secretaries.

SEC. 8. No compensation for the permission given will be required prior to the year 1923; but on or before the 1st day of February in each year, beginning with 1924, the permittee shall pay, by certified check to the order of the Secretary of the Interior, or in such other manner as the Secretaries may direct, an amount calculated from the total capacity of the power site at rates per horsepower per year, varying directly as the square of the average price for electric energy charged to customers and consumers of the permittee as determined in subsection (c) hereof and varying inversely as the square of the proportional development of the power site, as shown by the following table:

When the average price in cents per kilowatt hour charged by the permittee is as shown by this column.	If the percentage of development of power site is—
	Over 90.	90 and over 80.	80 and over 70.	70 and over 60.	60 and over 50.	50 and over 40.	40 or less.
	Then the rates of compensation to the United States per horsepower per year will be as shown below.
0.2 and less	$0.05	$0.06	$0.08	$0.10	$0.14	$0.20	$0.31
0.3 and over 0.2	.11	.14	.18	.23	.31	.45	.70

1.0 and over 0.9	1.25	1.54	1.95	2.55	3.47	5.00	7.81
1.2 and over 1	1.80	2.22	2.81	3.67	5.00	7.20	11.25
1.5 and over 1.2	2.81	3.47	4.40	5.74	7.82	11.25	17.60
2 and over 1.5	5.00	6.17	7.82	10.00	13.80	20.00	31.25
3 and over 2	11.25	13.87	17.58	22.95	31.25	45.00	70.40
4 and over 3	20.00	24.70	31.25	40.80	55.60	80.00	125.00
5 and over 4	31.25	38.60	48.80	63.80	86.80	125.00	250.00
6 and over 5	45.00	55.60	70.40	91.80	125.00	180.00	281.25

It is expressly understood and agreed, however, that—

(a) At any time not less than 10 years after the date for the first payment under this section or after the last revision of the rates of compensation the Secretaries may review such rates after application by or notice to the permittee and impose such new rates of compensation, under a rule which shall be uniform for all permittees under like conditions, as they may decide to be reasonable and proper: Provided, That such rates shall not be so increased as to result in reducing the margin of income (including appreciation in land values) from the project over proper, actual, and estimated expenses (including reasonable allowance for renewals and sinking-fund charges) to an amount which, in view of all the circumstances (including fair development expenses and working capital) and risks of the enterprise (including obsolescence, inadequacy, and supersession), is unreasonably small; but the burden of proving such unreasonableness shall rest upon the permittee.

(b) For the purposes of this section complete development of the power site shall mean the construction of such permanent project works and the installation of such generating equipment as will provide for the full utilization of the total capacity of the power site.

(c) The average price for electric energy charged to customers and consumers of the permittee shall be determined by dividing the total actual and estimated annual receipts from the sale and disposition of electric energy by the total number of kilowatt hours generated: Provided, That in determining said total annual receipts there shall be included estimated receipts for any electric energy used by the permittee at a price which shall not be less than 2 cents per kilowatt hour, nor less than the cost per kilowatt hour of generating, transmitting, and delivering such energy to the point of use, taking into account proper operating and maintenance expenses, fixed charges and reasonable allowances for renewals and sinking fund: And provided further, That if the permittee shall sell or dispose of electric energy to any consumer, said consumer being an association or corporation which the permittee owns or controls in whole or in part, or in which the permittee may have, hold, or control any interest, direct or indirect, by stock ownership or otherwise, the sale price per kilowatt hour at which the aforesaid annual receipts from such energy so sold or disposed of shall be computed shall not be less than as herein provided for in the computation of estimated receipts for energy used by the permittee: And provided further, That if the permittee shall sell or dispose of electric energy to any customer, said customer being an association or corporation which the permittee owns or controls in whole or in part, or in which the permittee may have, hold, or control any interest, direct or indirect, by stock ownership or otherwise, the sale price per kilowatt hour at which the aforesaid annual receipts from such energy so sold and disposed of shall be computed shall not be less than the price paid for such energy by the consumers thereof, nor less than as herein provided for in the computation of estimated receipts for energy used by the permittee.

(d) Unless otherwise authorized by the Secretaries, the maximum price at which electric energy developed by or transmitted from the power project may be disposed of to customers or consumers shall not exceed 6 cents per kilowatt hour, and the maximum price at which such electric energy in excess of 2,000 kilowatt hours per annum with an average annual delivery of more than 35 per cent of the connected installation within the year may be disposed of to customers or consumers shall not exceed 2 cents per kilowatt hour, said maximum price being determined by dividing the total annual charge to the purchaser by the corresponding total annual delivery to him of electric energy. In contracts with its customers the permittee shall specify the maximum price of final sale or resale and shall reserve the right to cancel any contract or agreement for sale or resale of electric energy that provides for a price in excess of such maximum. Complaint by any customer or consumer of a price paid by him in excess of such maximum price will be received by the Secretaries in case of and after the failure of his attempts to obtain satisfaction from the permittee or other parties selling electric energy under the power system, and thereupon, after notice to all interested parties, with opportunity for hearing, the Secretaries will determine whether this condition has been violated.

(e) The permittee shall at no time contract for the delivery to any one customer of electric energy in excess of 50 per cent of the total deliverable capacity of the power site; nor shall the permittee deliver to any customer or consumer for use in its own manufacturing or other operations any amount of energy in excess of 50 per cent of said deliverable capacity if and when there are pending unfilled applications for energy from other customers or consumers.

SEC. 9. The total capacity of the power site shall be deemed and taken to be 112,000 horsepower.

It is expressly understood and agreed, however, that said total capacity of the power site may be adjusted by the Secretaries annually to provide for increase or decrease, by storage or otherwise, of available stream flow to an amount of 10 per cent or more, or for increase or decrease of 10 per cent or more in average effective head, or in degree of practicable utilization, and that the decision of the Secretaries shall be final as to all matters of fact upon which the calculation of the capacity or compensation depends.

SEC. 10. The permittee shall pay the full value as fixed by the Secretaries for all timber cut, injured, or destroyed on Interior Department lands and on national forest lands in the construction, maintenance, and operation of the project works.

SEC. 11. The permittee shall pay the United States full value for all damages to the lands or other property of the United States resulting from the breaking of or the overflowing, leaking, or seeping of water from the project works, and for all other damage to the lands or other property of the United States caused by the neglect of the permittee or of the employees, contractors, or employees of the contractors of the permittee.

SEC. 12. The permittee shall install at such places and maintain in good operating condition in such manner as shall be approved or required by the Secretaries accurate meters, measuring weirs, gauges, or other devices approved by the Secretaries and adequate for the determination of the amount of electric energy generated by the project works and delivered under the power system and of the flow of the stream or streams from which the water is to be diverted for the operation of the project works and of the amount of water used in the operation of the project works and of the amounts of water held in and drawn from storage; and shall keep accurate and sufficient records of the foregoing determinations to the satisfaction of the Secretaries; and shall make a return during January of each year under oath of such of the records of measurements for the year ended on December 31 preceding made by or in the possession of the permittee as may be required by the Secretaries.

SEC. 13. The books and records of the permittee shall be open at all times to the inspection and examination of the Secretaries or other officer or agent of the United States duly authorized to make such inspection and examination.

SEC. 14. On demand of the Secretaries the permittee shall install a system of accounting for the entire power business in such form as the Secretaries may prescribe, which system, as far as is practicable, will be uniform for all permittees, and shall render annually such reports of its power business as the Secretaries may direct: Provided, however, That if the laws of the State in which the power business or any part thereof is transacted require periodical reports from public utility corporations under a uniform system of accounting, copies of such reports so made will be accepted as fulfilling the requirements of this clause in so far as they contain the information that may be required by the Secretaries.

SEC. 15. The permittee shall protect all Government and other telephone, telegraph, and power transmission lines at crossings of and at all places of proximity to the permittee's transmission lines in a workmanlike manner, according to the usual standards of safety for construction, operation, and maintenance in such cases, and shall maintain the transmission lines of the project in such manner as not to menace life or property.

SEC. 16. The permittee shall clear and keep clear the Interior Department lands and national forest lands along the transmission lines for such width and in such manner as the officer of the United States having supervision of such lands may direct.

SEC. 17. The permittee shall dispose of all brush, refuse, or unused timber on Interior Department lands and national forest lands resulting from the construction and maintenance of the project works to the satisfaction of the officer last aforesaid.

SEC. 18. The permittee shall build and repair such roads and trails as may be destroyed or injured by construction work or flooding under the permit, and shall build and maintain necessary and suitable crossings for all roads and trails that intersect the water conduit constructed, maintained, or operated under the permit.

SEC. 19. The permittee shall do everything reasonably within the power of the permittee, both independently and on request of the Secretaries or other duly authorized officers or agents of the United States to prevent and suppress fires on or near the lands to be occupied under the permit.

SEC. 20. The permittee shall indemnify the United States against any liability for damages to life or property arising from the occupancy or use of Interior Department lands and national forest lands by the permittee.

SEC. 21. The permittee shall sell power to the United States, when requested, at as low a price as is given to any other purchaser for a like use at the same time, and under similar conditions, if the permittee can furnish the same to the United States without diminishing the quantity of power sold before such request to any other customer by a binding contrast of sale: Provided, That nothing in this clause shall be construed to require the permittee to increase permanent works or install additional generating machinery.

SEC. 22. The permittee shall abide by such reasonable regulation of the service rendered and to be rendered by the permittee to consumers of power furnished or transmitted by the permittee, and of prices to be paid therefor as may from time to time be prescribed by the State or any designated agency of the State in which the service is rendered: Provided, That for the purposes of this section any such regulation shall be deemed to be suspended pending proceedings in the courts of such State, or in the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal from said State courts where such proceedings are in the nature of an appeal taken direct from the officer, commission, or board prescribing such regulation to said State courts: And provided further, That in the absence of regulation of service and prescribing of prices by any State agency, jurisdiction in the premises will, in their discretion, be exercised by the Secretaries.

SEC. 23. Upon demand in writing by the Secretaries to surrender the permit to the United States or to transfer the same to such State or municipal corporation as the Secretaries may designate, and to give, grant, bargain, sell, and transfer with the permit all works, equipment, structures, and property then owned or held by the permittee on lands of the United States occupied or used under the permit and then valuable or serviceable in the generation, transmission, and distribution of power: Provided, (a) That such surrender or transfer shall not be demanded in the case of a municipal corporation unless by condemnation such corporation shall have acquired, or unless by proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction it shall have been determined that such a municipal corporation has the right to acquire the property of the permittee situated elsewhere than on public land, or unless such municipal corporation has the power to acquire the property and rights of the permittee in accordance with the following conditions: (b) That such surrender or transfer shall be on condition precedent that the United States shall pay or the transferee shall first pay to the permittee the reasonable value of all such works, equipment, structures, and property to be surrendered or transferred; (c) that such reasonable value shall not include any sum for any permit, right, franchise, or property granted by any public authority in excess of the sum paid to such public authority as a purchase price therefor; and (d) that such reasonable value shall be determined by mutual agreement of the parties in interest, and in case they can not agree, by the Secretaries, under a rule which, except as modified by the requirements of this section, shall be the then existing rule of valuation for power properties in condemnation proceedings in the State in which the properties to be surrendered or transferred are located. But nothing herein shall prevent the United States or any State or municipal corporation from acquiring by any other lawful means the permit or the works, equipment, structures, or property then owned or held by the permittee on lands of the United States occupied or used under the permit.

SEC. 24. In respect to the regulation, by any competent public authority, of the services to be rendered by the permittee or of the prices to be charged therefor, and in respect to any purchase or taking over of the properties or business of the permittee, or any part thereof, by the United States or by any State within which the works are situated or business is carried on in whole or in part, or by any municipal corporation in such State, no value whatsoever shall at any time be assigned to or claimed for the permit or for the occupancy or use of Interior Department lands or national forest lands thereunder, nor shall the permit or such occupancy or use ever be estimated or considered as property upon which the permittee shall be entitled to earn or receive any return, income, price, or compensation whatsoever.

SEC. 25. The works to be constructed, maintained, and operated under the permit shall not be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device or in any manner so that they form part of, or in any way effect any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any unlawful contract or conspiracy to limit the output of electric energy, or in restraint of trade with foreign nations or between two or more States, or within any one State, in the generation, sale, or distribution of electric energy. Except as in this agreement specifically provided, the permittee shall not agree or arrange in any manner whatsoever with any other party generating or disposing of electric energy with a view to the avoidance of competition or the fixing, maintenance, or increase of prices for electric energy or service.

SEC. 26. This permit shall be indeterminate as to time during compliance with the conditions of this agreement by the permittee, or until the United States or any State or municipal corporation shall exercise its option to purchase as provided in section 23. It is expressly understood and agreed, however, that the permit may be revoked by the Secretaries, after due notice to the permittee, with opportunity for hearing, on a finding by them that any part of the amounts due for the compensation or the charges herein provided for, after due notice has been given, are in arrears for six months; or on a finding by the Secretaries that any of the provisions of this agreement or any of the regulations of the Secretaries or the provisions of the act of Congress to which the permit is subject as provided in section 2 hereof have been violated by the permittee.

It is further understood and agreed that under the terms of said act of Congress "any permission given by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act may be revoked by him or by his successor in his discretion."

It is further understood and agreed that at intervals of not less than 20 years, on application of the permittee or on demand of the Secretaries, this agreement and the permit shall be modified to conform to the then subsisting regulations fixed by the Secretaries under said act of February 15, 1901, or amendments thereto.

SEC. 27. The permittee shall, in the exercise of the permission given by the permit, at all times conform to and abide by such rules and regulations subserving the purpose of any reserved lands of the United States through which right of way is sought as may be prescribed by the officer having jurisdiction over such lands.

SEC. 28. The permit does not affect the rights to the occupancy of lands granted by the State of Washington or any rights, privileges, or franchises conferred upon the permittee by virtue of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1907 (34 Stat., 931), as amended by the act of Congress approved May 20, 1912 (37 Stat., 115), entitled "An act to extend the time for the construction of a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River, Wash.," or impair or affect the rights conferred upon the said permittee by compliance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 23, 1910 (36 Stat., 593), entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters."

SEC. 29. On proper application by the permittee under subsisting regulations fixed by the Secretaries, the permit may be amended to provide for the construction, operation, and maintenance of additional project works and the use of additional rights of way for the power project. Any application for such amendment and approval thereof shall be in the form of a supplemental agreement and permit so drawn as to become a part of the original agreement and permit.

SEC. 30. The permit and the right of way thereby afforded shall be subject to all prior valid rights and to a reservation of right of way for canals or ditches constructed by authority of the United States.

In witness whereof the permittee has caused these presents to be executed, in triplicate, by its vice president and agent and its corporate seal to be hereto affixed by its vice president, both thereunto duly authorized, this 28th day of July, 1913.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

On this 28th day of July, 1913, before me, a notary public in and for said county, duly commissioned and sworn, my commission expiring November 6, 1913, personally came Wilbur S. Yearsley, to me personally known, who, being by me duly sworn, did depose and say that he resides in Spokane, Wash.; that he is the vice president of the International Power & Manufacturing Co.; that said company is the corporation that is described in and that executed the foregoing agreement; that he knows the seal of said corporation; that the seal affixed to the foregoing agreement is such corporate seal and was affixed to such instrument by order of the board of directors of said corporation; and that he signed his name thereto by like order; and the said Wilbur S. Yearsley acknowledged the foregoing agreement to be the free act and deed of said corporation.

Witness my hand and official seal the day and year first hereinbefore written.

[NOTARIAL SEAL.] E. C. OWEN, Notary Public.

My commission expires November 6, 1913.

PERMIT.

In pursuance of the act of Congress approved February 15, 1901 (c. 372; 31 Stat., 790), and in pursuance of the general regulations thereunder fixed, respectively, by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, and in consideration of the conditions made and accepted in the foregoing agreement, permission to use the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture, sought by and described in the application identified in the foregoing agreement, is hereby given to the said International Power & Manufacturing Co., subject, however, to the said general regulations and to the conditions in said agreement, such permission, subject to such regulations and conditions, having been found by us to be not incompatible with the public interest.

In witness whereof we have subscribed these presents, in triplicate, on this 29th day of July, 1913.

ANDRIEUS A. JONES,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.
D. F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO (S. DOC. NO. 148).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on April 24, 1913, I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State.

By the resolution mentioned the President was requested "if not incompatible with the public interest, to cause to be transmitted to the Senate—

"First. A full list of the names of claimants, if any, and the nature and amount of the claims for damages to person or property made by citizens of the United States of America against the Republic of Mexico and filed or deposited with the Department of State at Washington, D. C., since the beginning of the Madero revolution in Mexico to the present time, together with the statement of fact on which said claims are based.

"Second. A full list of the names of all citizens of these United States, if any, who while leading lawful and peaceful lives in Mexico have been killed or wounded in Mexico or driven out of Mexico by Mexican soldiers or other armed bands on Mexican soil, together with the facts and circumstances attending such killing, wounding, or forceful deportation.

"Third. A full list, if any, of such peaceful citizens of the United States of America as have been forcibly seized and held prisoners for ransom in the Republic of Mexico during the time first mentioned, and what sums of money, if any, have been paid by any person or persons to secure the release of anyone so imprisoned or held.

"Fourth. What redress, if any, has been offered by Mexico in the premises, or demanded by the United States of America, and the result of such offer or demand, and what assurance of protection to the lives and property of our peaceful, law-abiding citizens in Mexico does that Republic offer."

I concur in the opinion of the Secretary of State that it would not be compatible with the public interest to transmit to the Senate at this time the lists and information requested by the resolution.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 30, 1913.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand that the morning business is closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no further routine business, the morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3321.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, as we are now frankly told by those in charge of the pending bill that it rejects the "cost of production theory," I want to call the attention of those Senators who intend to vote for it to the fact that the Democratic Party is doing precisely what it promised not to do to the people of Connecticut and New England.

I have for many years hoped that the Democratic Party would some time adopt a tariff plank that would not be susceptible of two or more interpretations, because it has been my belief that if the Democratic Party would do this, very great benefits would result to the people of this country. It would improve the moral and mental tone of all the political parties if they would as far as possible avoid uncertainty of intent in their platform declarations, and I have always been glad that in this most important of all issues—the tariff issue—the Republican Party has had the courage of its convictions before as well as after election. And I regret that the Democratic Party has always found it necessary to deceive itself and a large percentage of the people of the United States upon this all-important question. And early in the debate upon this measure I want to put the proof of this statement where it can be read by every Senator who thinks he is obliged to vote for this bill because he is a Democrat. I think I can easily satisfy every fair-minded Member of this body that this bill is a complete betrayal of the people of Connecticut and New England, for I shall bring none but the very highest Democratic authority to my support.

In Connecticut, as the campaign advanced, the tariff soon became the only issue of real consequence, barring the personality of Mr. Roosevelt, who soon allayed the fears of his friends by standing pat for protection. Many Republicans voted for Mr. Roosevelt because of his opposition to Mr. Taft's low-tariff ideas as expressed in his defense of reciprocity with Canada. Other Republicans, fearing the popularity of Mr. Roosevelt and bitterly opposing his views upon other questions than the tariff, in order to make his defeat certain voted for Mr. Wilson. President Wilson many times during the campaign alluded to the tariff question, but his treatment of the subject was in the abstract only. His generalities did not glitter; things glitter by reflected light. President Wilson's generalities shone of their own inherent radioactive energy, but in their brightest rays we find nothing for or against free sugar or free wool or any one of the rates applied to the 4,000 items in this bill.

When Mr. UNDERWOOD, the author of the pending bill, came to Connecticut, he knew why he came, and when he met ex-Congressman Hill in joint debate at Waterbury the only subject mentioned was the tariff, and Mr. UNDERWOOD knew why. Mr. Hill was rapidly succeeding in convincing the mechanics of Connecticut that the tariff rates proposed and to be proposed by Mr. UNDERWOOD would compel a reduction of wages, and Mr. UNDERWOOD was sent for to allay the fears of the doubtful. It was an important meeting. Stenographers from all over the State were there. In my opinion the electoral vote of Connecticut and the election of five Congressmen depended upon Mr. UNDERWOOD'S tariff views as expressed that night. Mr. Hill opened the debate, and he gave his hearers Mr. UNDERWOOD'S record and quoted Mr. UNDERWOOD'S theories upon the tariff question and charged him with being in favor of a tariff for revenue only. Mr. UNDERWOOD took no chances. He admitted that he believed in the theory of a tariff for revenue only, "but"—and, as is the custom with Democratic orators in the North, he put great emphasis on that "but"—and then went on to explain that the expenses of the Government must be paid and legitimate industries must not be disturbed. Mr. Hill had argued for a tariff equaling the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. And now I want to quote Mr. UNDERWOOD'S reply as taken by a stenographer on the spot and published in the leading Democratic newspaper of Connecticut on the following day:

EXTRACT FROM MR. UNDERWOOD'S SPEECH AT WATERBURY, CONN., OCTOBER 16, 1912, AS PRINTED IN THE HARTFORD TIMES.

Now let us see where the difference between these two great parties is. He—Mr. Hill—says we are a free-trade party. I deny it. There is a clean distinction. Whenever you cut off competition then you are damming back revenue, and your tariff is levied for the purpose of protecting somebody's profit, and not for the purpose of getting revenue for the Government. When you equalize exactly the difference in cost at home and abroad, if you can do it—it is impossible to do it exactly, but you may approximate it—but when you do that you have got a competitive tariff because each can come in the same field and fight for control of the market. And from that on down to 1 cent, the lowest tax you could levy, it is a competitive field, and it is a revenue field. It is a field in which you can collect a revenue tariff, because all below, after fixing the exact difference of cost at home and abroad on downward, is a revenue tariff. Now, what I said at the meeting at Hartford was that that being the case, and the Government needing all the revenue it could get—we have got to have it—we had to levy the taxes at the highest revenue rate consistent with our principles, which, of course, can not go above the difference of cost at home and abroad, because then you would be protecting profit; we have got to levy it somewhere near there in order to get a revenue to run the Government.

And again, before he closed his speech, he said:

Now, there are two sides to this question. There isn't a particle of possibility of the Democratic Party that it won't equalize the difference in labor cost at home and abroad.

Mr. President, this is what the people of Connecticut were promised by the man on the Democratic tariff throne, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee then and now, the man whose word was then and would be the law for this great Nation upon that most vital of questions. Let me repeat the last sentence:

"There isn't a particle of possibility of the Democratic Party that it won't equalize the difference in the labor cost at home and abroad." In other words, I will do precisely what Mr. Hill tells you he will do if he is reelected.

This interpretation of the Democratic platform by Mr. UNDERWOOD, and this promise made by Mr. UNDERWOOD was heartily approved by the Democratic candidates for Congress in Connecticut, as I will show before I close. Mr. Hill was defeated, as were all the Republican nominees in the State. In Connecticut certainly the author of this bill did not reject "the cost of production theory."

I have said that President Wilson's ante-election interpretation of his party's tariff plank was faultless and was hailed by the Democratic press of Connecticut as indicating the highest degree of statesmanship and the deepest concern for the industrial interests of the State. In passing let me quote the part which was supposed to silence every Republican tongue and put the troubled Democratic heart at rest.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT WILSON'S SPEECH AT NEW YORK, OCTOBER 29, 1912, AND PUBLISHED IN THE HARTFORD TIMES.

The Republicans are telling you—both branches of them—that if this wild-eyed schoolmaster becomes President we shall have free trade. Gov. Wilson does not sufficiently define his position on the tariff. The only thing they have to do to know Gov. Wilson's position on the tariff is to read and comprehend the English language. I have defined my position so often that, as I have told these gentlemen of the press who go around with me wherever I go to see that I do not get into mischief, that I am ashamed to tell again in their presence what my position is on the tariff. Well, for fear there are persons present who can not read the English language or who have just moved into the United States and never heard anything about this subject, I am going to define my position on the tariff. And here we have it as follows:

No thoughtful Democrat in the United States has so much as even proposed free trade. But every Democrat in the United States who knows anything knows that the schedules of the tariff almost from end to end conceal special privileges and private favors, which we are going to cut out without touching or endangering one single wholesome fiber or honest arrangement. Is that definite enough? Do you not suppose that Democrats live in the United States? Do you suppose that Democrats have come to the conclusion that they had better pull the house down about their own ears? Are they so rich that they can now afford to retire from business? Are they going to commit economic suicide? Do they look like tyros and innocents and beginners?

I will refer this interpretation of the Democratic platform to the Senators from Louisiana, where it is admitted by Democrats even that legitimate industries are to be destroyed. I refer to it myself to show that the candidate for the Presidency was careful to take nothing from the strength of Mr. UNDERWOOD'S clean-cut promise to make good the difference in the cost of production.

On October 19, 1912, the Hon. THOMAS L. REILLY, then the only Democratic Congressman from Connecticut, taking his cue from Mr. UNDERWOOD'S speech in Waterbury, reaffirmed and repeated Mr. UNDERWOOD'S promise to the people of Connecticut in the following language:

EXTRACT FROM CONGRESSMAN REILLY'S SPEECH AS PUBLISHED IN THE WATERBURY AMERICAN, OCTOBER 19, 1912.

They say that no tariff should be enacted to protect anybody. The Democratic theory is that the American manufacturer should be given a fair chance with foreign manufacturers, and that the tariff should be used to equalize the cost of production here and abroad.

It is a pity that Congressman REILLY and the Finance Committee of the Senate could not have compared notes before election.

And the Hon. Simeon E. Baldwin, Democratic governor of Connecticut and candidate for President of the United States in the convention that nominated President Wilson, added his name and seal to the sacred promise—for all Democratic promises are sacred when made—in the following language:

EXTRACT FROM GOV. BALDWIN'S SPEECH AT NORWICH, CONN., OCTOBER 17, 1912, AS PUBLISHED IN THE WATERBURY AMERICAN ON OCTOBER 18, 1912.

The Democratic Party proposes in the next Congress to revise the tariff, but not in a radical way. They are not aiming at free trade. We mean to have a larger free list, and duties high enough to enable us to keep on paying the highest wages in the world, without unnecessarily raising the cost of living to every American family.

On the 30th of October, 1912, there was a great Democratic demonstration in the city of New Britain, Conn. This city is the center of the cutlery and hardware interests of the State. The speaker for the occasion was the Hon. William C. Redfield, now the Secretary of Commerce, in Mr. Wilson's Cabinet, the man who is to investigate and punish all those manufacturers who may be unable to perform the miracles required by this law. I ask the Senators who believe that their party is pledged to reject the "cost of production theory" to listen to the promise which their own Secretary of Commerce made to the people of New Britain, Conn. I quote from Secretary Redfield's speech as printed in the Hartford Times on October 31, 1912:

Finally, let not the bogy of what is called "free trade" scare sensible men longer. No one proposes it; it is known by those who cry aloud to be a false cry of wolf where there is no wolf. We must have revenue, and a very large part of that revenue must come from a tariff. There is no other way. The Democratic campaign is in the hands of thoughtful, experienced men of business, largely interested themselves in American manufactures, hoping for them to be prosperous and intending to open wide the door to a larger prosperity than we have ever known. They are not standing with axes ready to cut the rope that binds the ship of state to a safe anchorage. They are rather standing at the ropes which loosen the sails to a favoring wind that shall bring the ship of state into a safe and happy harbor.

These glittering gems of promise and poetry from Messrs. UNDERWOOD, REILLY, Baldwin, and Redfield, composed the message of Democracy to 35,911 spinners and weavers, 36,253 employees in the machinery plants, 16,817 in the brass and bronze factories, 37,763 in the foundry and machine shops, 5,217 hatters, and thousands of others in Connecticut.

Mr. President, Congressman UNDERWOOD, and Congressman REILLY, and Secretary Redfield, and Gov. Baldwin, and every Democratic candidate and newspaper in Connecticut promised to give the people of Connecticut precisely what Congressman HILL and every other Republican candidate promised, namely, "a tariff based upon the cost-of-production theory; i. e., the difference in the cost of production here and abroad."

Now let us come to Washington and consider the manner in which these promises have been kept. A few days ago the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], chairman of the Committee on Finance, in his concluding remarks made in explanation of the pending measure, used the following language:

For the reasons given by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, your committee has rejected the cost-of-production theory. The grounds upon which this theory was rejected are so conclusive and so exhaustively stated in the several reports of the House committee upon this subject that it is not deemed necessary to restate them here.

On page 12 of the report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of 1913, to which we are referred by the Senator from North Carolina, we find this statement:

COST-OF-PRODUCTION THEORY REJECTED.

The so-called theory of cost of production as a regulator of rates was fully discussed at the time tariff-revision bills were introduced by the Ways and Means Committee during the Sixty-second Congress. It will be recalled that much was said by protection advocates in support of the view that it was incumbent upon the United States to maintain a system of tariff rates that would cover differences in cost of production between the United States and foreign countries, in addition to a reasonable margin of profit. That doctrine became the basis of the work of the Tariff Board which furnished reports to the President, later transmitted by the Executive to Congress, concerning wool and woolens, cottons, pulp, and paper. Many manufacturers have presented arguments based on the doctrine of comparative costs. The statement is therefore made that no part of the committee's work has been founded upon a belief in the cost-of-production theory, and the theory is absolutely rejected as a guide to tariff making.

Let us now put the promise of the Democratic Party to the people of Connecticut and the manner in which it has been performed in parallel columns.

THE PROMISE.	THE PERFORMANCE.
UNDERWOOD'S promise, from his speech at Waterbury, Conn., October 17, 1912: "Now let us see where the difference between these two great parties is. He says we are a free-trade party. I deny it. There is a clean distinction. A revenue tariff must be a competitive tariff. Is it strange, Mr. President, that the Democratic Congressmen from Connecticut were not satisfied with the bill as it came from the Ways and Means Committee of the House? Is it strange that the Hon. JEREMIAH DONOVAN, the successor of the Hon. E. J. Hill, used the following language in the House of Representatives on May 3 last in his patriotic but unsuccessful efforts to persuade Mr. UNDERWOOD and his colleagues in the House of Representatives that it was his and their duty to deal with the industries of Connecticut as he, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and his party promised they would deal with them before election?

EXTRACTS FROM SPEECH OF HON. JEREMIAH DONOVAN IN OPPOSITION TO THE UNDERWOOD BILL, DELIVERED MAY 3, 1913.

I am probably representing a class of labor which, in my opinion, is treated more cruelly than any other class from beginning to end of this report of the Ways and Means Committee.

But I am going to claim, too, that if this matter had been considered at the beginning of the hearings there is no question as to what the result would have been. You will appreciate my point of view when I tell you that the distinguished chairman of this committee, though campaigning in a strange State, among a strange people, with the natural prejudices of those people against him and his associates in his section of the country, when he went amongst my people practically carried—yes, swept—the State from end to end with his eloquence. How? By the same means that he carries this body whenever he so desires—by his personality. When you think that misfortune or errors may befall you, you have only to look upon that face and you forget them all. [Laughter and applause.]

Unfortunately, I am occupying a position here formerly filled by one of the most noted men of our country. Probably no man ever came out of that State so well known, either favorably or unfavorably [laughter] as my predecessor. At home he said to his people since the election and within a few days that I am a free trader. The distinguished gentleman who is chairman of this committee says to his associates here in this body that the way I was returned and elected was that I accused Mr. Hill of being a free trader. [Laughter.] But that is neither here nor there. This can not affect our people,

The personality of the gentleman from Alabama is what made our people politically go with him. On the 13th day of March of this year he repeated at the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee, in yonder office building, what he said to them in Connecticut. This is in his report as chairman, volume 1, page 3861: "Of course," says the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, "of course none is in favor of reducing the tariff if it is going to injure any American industry." That was on the 13th day of March. [Applause.]

The italics are mine.

The five Democratic Congressmen from Connecticut have done what they could to prevent this complete betrayal of the people of Connecticut, but to little or no purpose, and the reason must be plain to everyone.

Mr. President, there are "protection" Democrats and there are "tariff-for-revenue-only" Democrats, and when you try to mix them they will not mix, because they can not be mixed. This fact has been and will be the tragedy of Democracy, if not of the Nation, until something or somebody comes to the rescue.

A week before election President Wilson told the people of the country that the only thing they have to do to know his position on the tariff is to read and comprehend the English language. Now, let us turn to the only language used by President Wilson upon the tariff question which I have been able to find which can be read and comprehended without difficulty. I quote from his address before the tariff commission at Atlanta in 1883 as follows:

Protection also hinders commerce immensely. The English people do not send to this country as many goods as they would if the duties were not so much, and we are building up manufactories here at the expense of commerce. We are holding ourselves aloof from foreign countries in effect and saying, "We are sufficient to ourselves; we wish to trade not with England but with each other." I maintain that it is not only a pernicious but a corrupt system.

Replying to the question of Commissioner Garland, "Are you advocating the repeal of all tariff laws?" Prof. Wilson answered:

Of all protective tariff laws; of establishing a tariff for revenue merely. It seems to me very absurd to maintain that we shall have free trade between different portions of this country and at the same time shut ourselves out from free communication with other producing countries of the world. If it is necessary to impose restrictive duties on goods brought from abroad it would seem to me, as a matter of logic, necessary to impose similar restrictions on goods taken from one State of this Union to another. That follows as a necessary consequence; there is no escape from it.

So to-day we find the Democratic Party led, and I may say gently but irresistibly pushed, by President Wilson into the adoption of his views when so expressed that they can be understood. As a result, the "protection" Democrats in the Senate have agreed to a bill which they hope will not violate their views; and the "tariff-for-revenue-only" Senators have agreed to a bill which they hope will not violate their views. It must be very clear that, inasmuch as the days of miracles have passed, somebody on the other side of this Chamber is mistaken.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and other Senators upon this side of the Chamber have indicated very clearly, I think, where the mistake lies. The "protection" Democrats have tried to compromise with the "free-trade" Democrats, and this, of course, is impossible. You can not compromise with the arithmetic or the compass. You are either there or you are not there. If 20 per cent does not protect, 10 per cent will not protect. My complaint is that the Democratic Party has broken its sacred promise to the people of Connecticut. This I have shown from the lips of those Democrats who alone had authority to do the promising. If adequate protection is found in any rate contained in this bill, it is there by accident only. A tariff which rejects the "cost-of-production theory" can not give protection except by accident. You can not intentionally give protection without taking into consideration the cost of production. You can not revise the tariff and not destroy legitimate industries unless you take into consideration the cost of production. Therefore, if any legitimate industry escapes the paranoiac assaults in this bill it will be an accidental escape. It may be that some industries of my State and the country will survive the effect of the Democratic brain storm contained within the eight corners of this bill. I sincerely hope so. Two woolen mills in Connecticut are already in serious trouble. The management of the more important one—the Yantic Mills—assigns the following as the cause:

Had it not been for the unsettled business conditions in our trade, owing to the proposed tariff legislation, we would never have gone into the hands of a receiver. The trade is at a standstill. We are getting only enough orders to produce one-third of our regular output. Our sales were close upon $1,000,000 a year. Now they have fallen below $400,000. Our fixed charges are so great that we can not continue to run with this limited production. Our firm is not an exception.

Is this a harbinger of Secretary Redfield's beautiful spring? I pray not, but if not it won't be the fault of this bill.

This bill has been described as a glaring example of invisible and inaudible government. It is not the way in which the conclusions of the committee have been reached; it is the effect of these conclusions that the people of Connecticut are afraid of. This bill may be an example of "invisible" and, as the Senator from Iowa so aptly added the other day, "inaudible" government, but it is a sample of minority government in complete betrayal of the promises of that minority to the people of Connecticut that I object to.

It has been asserted here by those responsible for this measure that they are merely carrying out as in duty bound the mandate of a majority of the whole people.

In Connecticut, as I have shown, Mr. UNDERWOOD in person solicited instructions to reform the tariff upon "the cost of production theory," and he got what he asked for. Now the Democratic Party in Congress repudiates those instructions upon the ground that it received a mandate from the people to do what it proposes to do, which I can not name, because it is nameless.

What happened on election day besides the defeat of the Republican Party? 6,292,600 votes were cast for Mr. Wilson; 8,602,042 votes were cast against him—1,655,230 less than a majority for Mr. Wilson and his platform, attractive and safe as Mr. UNDERWOOD had tried to make it; 1,655,230 more votes were cast for the principle of protection than for the tariff plank of the Democratic platform, whatever it meant.

I will not go into the views of the great Democratic scholars as to the danger which surrounds a popular government where the vox Dei comes from the throat of a minority of the vox populi. It is too late to talk about that or lament it. The voice of the majority has surrendered to the voice of the plurality, and if I am ever converted to the "referendum" it will be for the reason that in no other way can the people meet a great issue like the tariff, face to face, and a majority put their seal upon it with a plain yes or no, uninterfered with by other issues or the personalities of candidates.

It may or it may not be just to claim that the people by a majority of 1,655,230 votes instructed their Representatives in Congress to maintain the principle of protection, but certainly there is no foundation for the assertion that a majority of the people voted for free sugar or free wool or a tariff for revenue only. Would it not be nearer the truth to say that not one in a million had any knowledge of the precise rates which the Ways and Means Committee would fix if controlled by the Democratic Party? Indeed, when you come to rates—and nothing else is of consequence—when you come to crystallize promises and theories into a choice between specific and ad valorem duties and their alternating equivalents to be written into the proposed law there was only one man in the United States who knew what he was voting for, and that man was Mr. UNDERWOOD. He might have known that a Democratic victory meant the placing of cotton dyes on the free list and wool dyes on the protected list; he might have known that goats' wool was to be taxed and sheep's wool was to be free; that elephants' tusks were to be taxed and cotton bands put on the free list. But if so he was the only man.

The President in his address to Congress said that it is a case of sharpening wits. I agree with him heartily, but shall we sharpen our wits by giving up the only tools with which wits can be sharpened? Is Uncle Sam to acquire the dexterity and endurance necessary to win in the pending international industrial struggle by exercising his voting and advisory powers only? What particular industries shall we abandon and what shall we retain? For what particular market shall we surrender our own? For what particular oriental rainbow shall we exchange our pot of gold in hand? We are told that we must concentrate upon industries which by the test of experience we can sustain. After a century of test we know of none such in our country. On the contrary we know that there are none. Indeed, we can not expect to retain our own market without protection.

We know that as water seeks its level so wages will tend to equality where the physical conditions are equal. Shall we help the situation now by adopting a fiscal system that will lower or endanger in any way our present standard of wages? If we expect to excel other nations in naval warfare, we must practice—practice naval architecture and maneuvers constantly, and all of this will be of no avail unless we practice shooting. So in the great struggle for industrial supremacy that to-day faces the nations of the earth, if we would win the victory in weaving and spinning, we must weave and spin constantly. If we would conquer in any single line of production we must put and keep our people upon an equal footing with foreign peoples, where we may fairly expect to overcome the obstacles in the way, physical or economic. But our people will not experiment at a loss and the Congress can not compel them to experiment at a loss. A man will practice singing for the pleasure of it. He may practice oratory for the fame of it. But if he practices manufacturing, he does it for the money there is in it and for no other reason, and the prices and bounties and taxes that have been paid by the nations of the world to invite, incite, and excite the sharpest rivalry among men in their effort to subjugate and enlist in their behalf the hostile forces of nature have been the best investments that have been made up to date. And that, I think, Mr. President, is one of the reasons why every civilized nation on the earth except England has discovered the economic wisdom of protecting opportunity by protective tariffs, and why every nation on earth including England has offered bounties and prizes to those who have advanced civilization by increasing the productivity of human toil.

I desire at this time to put into the RECORD a partial list of the Connecticut industries which will be affected by the pending bill. This list I take from the last census and the Connecticut factory and labor bulletins.

Later on I may appeal to those responsible for this bill to raise certain rates which are clearly demanded, but my purpose at this time is to show that the pending bill is in its entirety founded upon a tariff theory which, in my opinion, excludes the possibility of intelligent protection to American industries and which is in glaring violation of the pledges of the Democratic Party to the people of Connecticut.

STATISTICS CONCERNING MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES OF CONNECTICUT.

[From Abstract of Thirteenth Census, 1910.]

In 1910 Connecticut had a population of 1,114,756 and ranked twelfth among the States with regard to the value of her manufactured products. There were 4,251 manufacturing establishments, which gave employment to an average of 233,871 persons during that year. She paid out $135,756,000 in salaries and wages. The value of manufactured products turned out was $490,272,000, and the value of the materials used in the manufacture of these products was $257,259,000, giving an added value by manufacture of $233,013,000. The expenses were $429,904,000, and the capital was $517,547,000.

Connecticut ranks second among the States in the production of rubber boots and shoes, measured by the value of the products, and the three gold and silver refineries of the State reported a greater value of the products than did any other State.

Textile industries.—These industries in Connecticut gave employment to an average of 34,192 wage earners, or 16.2 per cent of the total of all the manufacturing industries in the State. The value of the products amounted to $70,459,000, or 14.4 per cent of the total value of manufactured products. Of the total value of the products of the four branches of the textile industry, 34.4 per cent was contributed by the cotton mills, 29.9 per cent by the silk mills, 27.5 per cent by the woolen and worsted mills, and 8.2 per cent by the hosiery and knitting mills.

Brass and bronze products.—Connecticut ranked first among the States in the combined value, reporting 44.6 per cent of the total value for the United States.

Foundry and machine shops.—In the products of this industry the most important one consists of hardware, of which more than two-fifths of the total value reported for the United States was reported from Connecticut.

Firearms and ammunition.—This industry is mainly centralized in New Haven and Bridgeport, exclusive of governmental establishments. Almost four-fifths of the total value of ammunition and over one-fourth of the total value of firearms manufactured in the United States was reported from establishments located in the State. Connecticut was the leading State in the total value of products reported for the combined value.

Automobiles and parts.—This includes 8 establishments reporting the manufacture of automobiles, and 20 establishments "with about one-fourth of the total value of products for the whole industry."

Cutlery and tools.—Connecticut ranks second in this industry in the United States. The value of the products for this industry was $10,716,918.

Hats and fur felt industry.—Connecticut was second in importance in this industry, with 21.7 per cent of the total value of products for the United States.

Clocks.—Connecticut ranked first in clocks and watches in the value of products. Nine of the sixteen industries in the State were engaged primarily in the manufacture of clocks. This branch of the industry in Connecticut dates back as far as early in 1800, and much of its early development took place in that State, where it has been largely centralized.

The foundry and machine shops gave employment to 37,736 persons, or more than twice as many as any other single industry of the State. The average number of wage earners in the leading cities and towns were as follows:

Bridgeport	25,775
New Haven	23,547
Waterbury	20,170
Hartford	14,627
New Britain	13,513
Meriden	7,845
Danbury	4,810
Torrington	4,488
Norwich	4,470
Ansonia	4,127
Stamford	3,984
Naugatuck	3,464
Willimantic	3,020
Middletown	2,434
New London	2,225

Bridgeport.—This city was the foremost city in the State in manufactures, with 47.1 per cent in value of products and 37.2 per cent in average number of wage earners. Compared with other manufacturing cities of the country, Bridgeport ranked thirty-third in the value of products for 1910. The foundries and machine shops of this city turned out products valued at $9,752,000, or 14.9 per cent of the corresponding total for the State. The corset industry was also considered of importance, with an output valued at $6,899,000, or 53.8 per cent of the total value for the industry of the State.

New Haven.—This city was the second city of the State as measured by the value of products, with 28.8 per cent in value of products and 9.8 per cent in average number of wage earners.

Waterbury.—The third manufacturing city of the State, showed an increase of 55.6 per cent in value of products and 30.9 per cent in number of wage earners compared with that of 1904. The industries of this city are centralized in a single one—that of brass and bronze manufacturing. In 1910 the reported products amounted to $31,462,000, or 62.5 per cent of the total for the city. In 1910, 21 per cent of the value of all the brass and bronze products manufactured in the United States was reported from Waterbury. Over two-fifths of the total value of clocks and watches manufactured in the United States was reported from Waterbury. Other industries of importance were the manufactures of foundry and machine-shop products, gas, electric fixtures and lamps, needles, pins, hooks and eyes, and buttons.

Hartford.—The fourth manufacturing city of the State has showed an increase of 56.6 per cent in the value of products and 30.4 per cent in the number of wage earners compared with 1904. These gains were largely due to the increase in the manufacture of automobiles, foundry and machine-shop products, rubber goods, typewriter and typewriter supplies. The major portion of the value of the output for the State of dentists' materials, nails and spikes not made in steel works or rolling mills, feather belting, and machine screws was reported from this city.

Norwich shows the greatest gain in the value of products from 1904 to 1910 with 55.9 per cent, and New Britain the greatest in the number of wage earners with 34.2 per cent. The manufactures of New Britain are so centralized in the hardware industry that the output of this industry reports 52.9 per cent of the total value of products for the city; 44.2 per cent of the value of cutlery and tools made in the State for 1910 were reported from New Britain.

Norwich.—In this city the textile industries are of the most importance.

Ansonia and Torrington.—The most important industries of these cities are the manufactures of brass and bronze and machine tools.

Meriden.—The silverware and plated-ware industry is the most important in this city. In 1910 this city reported 65.9 per cent of the total value of gas and electric fixtures and lamps and reflectors manufactured in the State.

Naugatuck.—The leading industries are the manufacture of rubber boots, shoes, and rubber goods.

Middletown.—The most important industry is the manufacture of men's furnishings (elastic goods).

Danbury.—Its leading industry is the fur-felt hat manufactures. The output in 1910 was valued at $7,114,683 and formed 68.6 per cent of the total value reported for this industry in the State.

The manufacture of locks makes the machine-shop and foundry industry the most important in Stamford, and the textile industry predominates in Willimantic and New London.

The typewriter industry of Connecticut is a very large one. The Underwood factory at Hartford, Conn., is one of the largest factories of its kind in the world and employs about 3,500 mechanics. The Royal Typewriter factory, of Hartford, is the second largest factory of its kind in the State, employing in the neighborhood of 1,000 mechanics. Besides these two factories there are four other typewriter manufacturing establishments in Connecticut, as follows: The Williams Typewriter Co., of Derby; the Yost Typewriter Co., of Bridgeport; the Blickensderfer Typewriter Co., of Stamford; and the Noiseless Typewriter Co., of Middletown.

FACTORIES IN CONNECTICUT, BY COUNTIES, WHICH WILL BE AFFECTED BY THE PROPOSED TARIFF BILL.

NEW HAVEN COUNTY.

There are 240 factories, 89 of which are located in the city of New Haven; 64 in Waterbury, which produces the largest amount of brass, clocks, and novelties of any city in the United States. It is a city of 80,000 inhabitants.

The city of Meriden has 33 manufacturing concerns. Ansonia and Derby have 22. The following towns and cities in New Haven County contain certain important manufacturing establishments:

Wallingford, Seymour, Naugatuck, Branford, Beacon Falls, Centerville, Mount Carmel, West Cheshire, Milford, and Clinton.

New Haven's population is 133,000, Meriden's population is 32,000, Ansonia's population is 15,000, and Derby's population is 9,000.

FAIRFIELD COUNTY.

There are 220 factories, 81 of which are in Bridgeport; Danbury, which is the center of the hat industry of the United States, and has a population of 23,500, has 57 factories engaged in this industry, together with the adjoining town of Bethel, with a population of 4,000 and 18 more factories.

There are 18 more factories in the hat industry in Norwalk and South Norwalk, and these two towns have a population of about 16,000, making a total of 93 factories in these four towns engaged in the hat industry.

Other towns which contain manufacturing interests are Stamford, Shelton, Fairfield, Brookfield, New Canaan, and Mianus.

HARTFORD COUNTY.

There are 208 factories in Hartford County, 79 of which are located in Hartford, the population of which is 99,000.

Bristol and Forestville, with a population of 23,000, have 20 factories.

New Britain, with a population of 44,000, has 22 factories.

Windsor Locks, with a population of 4,000, has 10 factories.

Plainville, with a population of 3,000, has 12 factories.

Southington and Plantsville, with a population of 6,500, have 9 factories.

Manchester, which is the center of the silk industry of the State, has a population of 14,000.

Other towns which will be affected are Glastonbury, Unionville, Thompsonville, Suffield, Avon, and Simsbury.

NEW LONDON COUNTY.

There are 72 factories in New London County.

Norwich, with a population of 20,000, has 22 factories.

This county has 50 factories engaged in the manufacture of cotton, woolen goods, and textiles. There are also 10 factories in this county engaged in the manufacture of paper and paper board. A great many guns and firearms of various descriptions are also manufactured in the town of Norwich. Other towns that will be affected are New London, Stonington, Taftville, Uncasville, Voluntown, Montville, Jewett City, Baltic, Mystic, and Oakdale.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY.

There are 56 factories in Middlesex County.

Middletown, with a population of 20,000, has 18 factories.

Deep River and Ivorytown, with a population of about 5,000, are the center of the ivory industry of the United States. Ivory tusks have always been on the free list and are free in every other country on the globe. This bill proposes to put a duty of 20 per cent upon ivory tusks. Other towns which will be affected by the bill are Chester, East Hampton, Higganum, Moodus, Centerbrook, Portland, and Rockfall.

WINDHAM COUNTY.

There are 52 factories in Windham County.

Willimantic, town of Windham, with a population of 13,000, has 12 factories.

Putnam, with a population of 7,000, has 14 factories.

Forty-two factories in this county are engaged in the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods and textiles. Other towns which will be affected are Danielson, Central Village, Dayville, Moosup, Plainfield, Wauregan, Sterling, Ballouville, Packer.

LITCHFIELD COUNTY.

There are 46 factories in Litchfield County.

Winsted, with a population of 9,000, has 9 factories.

Torrington, with a population of 17,000, has 7 factories.

Thomaston, with a population of 4,000, and Terryville, with a population of 5,000, have 5 factories. Other towns which will be affected are Hotchkissville, Lakeville, and Northfield, which towns are engaged in the manufacture of cutlery.

Oakville, with a population of 4,000, has factories which produce pins of all kinds and employ about 1,500 hands.

New Hartford has the largest brush factory in the State.

Bantam and New Milford are two other towns which will be affected by the bill.

TOLLAND COUNTY.

There are 43 factories in Tolland County, 35 of which are engaged in the manufacture of woolens, cotton, and textiles.

Rockville, with a population of 9,000, has 10 factories engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods and textiles and is the largest manufacturing town of woolen goods of any city in the State.

Stafford, with a population of 6,000, has 12 factories.

Other towns which will be affected are Somerville, Eagleville, Andover, Mansfield Center, Coventry, Talcottville, and Willington.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, this Chamber seems to have within its walls a number of prophets of evil, croaking evangels of disaster. The atmosphere we breathe has become impregnated with the malodor, so to speak, of direful prophecy. It seems as if our friends on the other side, or many of them at least, are hungering for a panic. They are doing everything in their power to create distrust.

I wonder if they really want industrial depression; if they really desire that there should be a halt in the progress and prosperity of the country. It is hard to believe, and yet that is the impression being created here and elsewhere. Every Senator on that side who rises to speak has a blue tale of woe to tell, made up for the most part of doleful prophecies of certain disasters to come. I submit, Mr. President, that is not the spirit or the tone of that true Americanism that should find expression in the American Senate. I say this because it seems that there can be but one great underlying purpose behind this continuing story of evil prophecy, and that is to create distrust, artificially, and to bring about a state of industrial depression that may redound to the advantage of the Republican Party, on the theory that if something bad should happen the Democratic Party must answer for it and that the Republican Party would be benefited in some corresponding degree. All we hear now are tales of woe.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator believe there could be some tales of woe told in consequence of what has already happened in certain markets in regard to certain commodities by reason of the threatened tariff bill? In my opinion the prophecies made, if made, have been very moderate, and opportunities have been passed over which, if complaint had been sought for the purpose of complaint, would only require that the truth be known as to what has already happened to many of these industries and is happening every day because of the threatened tariff bill to show that adversity is already upon us as to certain products.

Mr. STONE. That is the very kind of thing Senators are saying here every day, iterating and reiterating it, for absorption by the country.

Mr. WARREN. No; they are not being stated here. There are commodities that have not yet even been spoken of here on the Senate floor as to their market values that have greatly depreciated, and are on the market to-day at radically lower prices than heretofore, and the Senator must know it. I can give the Senator a very considerable list if he wishes it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, that scarcely touches the merits of the question. It is possible that some articles can be named the market price of which is lower now than months before, while it is equally true that numerous other articles can be named where the market price is higher now than ever. There are constant fluctuations in the prices of production in almost every line. I do not want to start any hornet's nest, Mr. President, here to-day, and prolong this discussion and waste time; but I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, who is waiting to interrupt me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not disturb the Senator if it is not entirely agreeable.

Mr. STONE. Oh, it is not disagreeable, except that I do not want to waste too much valuable time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall occupy very little time, as is my custom. I will ask the Senator if he really believes that those of us who honestly entertain the opinion that the passage of this bill will greatly disturb business, and possibly work irreparable injury to the manufacturing business of the country, ought to refrain from stating our views? I will ask the Senator, further, how he interprets the fact that the General Electric Co., which has always borrowed money heretofore at 4 per cent, had to pay 6½ per cent for an issue of one-year securities which it recently put on the market? Does it not indicate that there is already disturbance, and are we not justified in feeling that very likely there will be further disturbance?

Mr. STONE. Oh, there may be some disturbance here and there, traceable to one cause or another. That may happen, and does here and all over the world from time to time. Mr. President, if I were disposed to go far enough at this time to express my real convictions about some things that are going on in this country now—and I may have occasion to be more specific later on—I might say that the first fluttering of any industrial disturbance so far is the result of a deliberate purpose, if not a deliberate conspiracy, on the part of certain men representing important interests in this country to create a disturbance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator surely does not believe, which has been heretofore asserted without authority, that the men who are carrying on the great industrial enterprises of this country want to create trouble for themselves?

Mr. STONE. For the present I pass that. I am now talking about Republican Senators who day after day are sending out to the country, through the Associated Press and otherwise, warnings and prophecies that we are on a downward toboggan slide to the "demnition bow wows"; that a storm is coming, and that wise men had better run to their cyclone cellars, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. What does the Senator think of the pronouncements that are going out from the White House and from the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. STONE. I think they are very timely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Timely? I think they are very untimely.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I think they are timely. They are timely, for they are intended to advise the country and to discount and thwart the purpose—apparently the deliberate purpose—of men both in and out of Congress to create a feeling in the public mind of unrest with the expectation of some resultant industrial disturbance.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, a question of order. The Senator has stated, in effect, that Members upon this side of the Chamber are sending out reports for the purpose of creating disaster. The Senator having made that charge as to Members on this side, he should specify the Senators who have so done.

Mr. STONE. It would be altogether——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is a very serious charge, and only in line with utterances from other sources seeking to discount the effects of this bill; for instance, by the President of the United States, who, as is reported, proposes to hang as high as Haman anybody who disagrees with his tariff program. It is, I think, also a proposition that comes from the Secretary of Commerce to investigate and put out of business any manufacturer who does not agree with him, and it is now seriously contended by the Senator from Missouri that if evil results follow the passage of this bill it will be because of the speeches of those opposed to the bill—rather a curious conclusion. Now, I ask what Senator on this side has sent out reports threatening disaster upon this Nation?

Mr. STONE. I have scarcely heard a speech made on the other side since this debate began that did not send forth these doleful messages.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the Senator to name the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I think probably the Senator himself is guilty.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. This Senator has not made a speech.

Mr. STONE. Then the Senator is not guilty in that form; whether he is guilty of this offense in some other form I do not know. But every Senator who has spoken on that side has in some way assured the country that ruin was coming by leaps and bounds. And, Mr. President, I believe it to be true that it is a part of the fixed program of the Republican side of this Chamber to create a widespread impression and a fear throughout the country of coming disaster, with the hope of precipitating industrial and commercial conditions that will redound to their party and political advantage. But, all the same, they will not succeed in accomplishing their purpose, Mr. President.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STONE. I will yield.

Mr. KENYON. I only want to say, Mr. President, as the Senator from Missouri is charging this side en masse with such a purpose, I speak for myself and say that I have not hesitated, wherever an opportunity has been presented, to express the belief that the passage of this bill would not induce any panic or any industrial trouble; and in my State I have watched the sentiment pretty closely, and the farmers and the business men do not share in any such opinion. I trust the Senator will not impute it to everyone on this side.

Mr. STONE. I was not thinking of the Senator when I made the remarks to which he objects. I hardly had the Senator from Iowa, who has just spoken, and other Senators of his type and breadth of thought in my mind. I think that he and they proceed along a different and a higher line, both of thought and conduct, in the discharge of their senatorial duties.

Mr. President, I heard this morning the speech made here by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], full, as the speeches of his colleagues have been, of a blue tale of woe. It so happens that this very morning also I saw a statement as to the commercial and industrial conditions in the country from a report of R. G. Dun & Co., which I propose now to read to the Senate by way of contrast to the typical Republican speech of the Senator from Connecticut. R. G. Dun & Co. is one of the great mercantile credit concerns of the United States. They have their agents in every neighborhood of the United States, who see with their own eyes what the crop prospects are, what the mines are doing, what manufacturers of different kinds are doing, what the merchants are doing, what the bankers are doing, and what business men generally are doing. They furnish reports to their employers, and out of these the central office, after careful analysis and consideration, prepare reports about all kinds of business and for the use of business men everywhere, giving the credit standing of individuals, and giving expression as to the general industrial and economic and commercial conditions of the country, and these are relied upon in great measure by business men throughout the country. Business men pay for the right and privilege of using the reports of this great concern.

Let me read what R. G. Dun said yesterday, and I will put that against what the Senator from Connecticut has said this morning:

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I simply desire to say, if it be true that the business and industrial interests of the country are guided by the business of R. G. Dun & Co., who are very industrious and usually accurate, any expression on the part of an individual Senator here would not be likely to create a panic.

Mr. STONE. I do not think expressions here will create a panic, no matter what the purpose of these expressions may be. I do not think we are going to have any panic, Mr. President; I know we are not. But at the same time I beg to say, with as little offense as possible, that if anything would foment a panic it would be just such a course as that being pursued by the majority of the minority on the other side.

Now, let me read this, clipped this morning from the New York American. It says:

Fall business is opening with every indication of a sustained boom. Merchants who hesitated placing extensive orders because of pending tariff legislation have been forced to make heavy purchases because of unexpected demands. The impetus foreshadows great and prosperous activity.

The settlement of the tariff controversy is looked forward to expectantly by business men. They are prepared to make new investments and embark on large enterprises the moment Congress acts, no matter whether it changes the tariff or not.

Many large merchants who a month ago complained of slack trade now report their shelves are almost empty.

The people are anxious to have tariff legislation ended. The business men of the country want it disposed of and out of the way at the earliest possible moment, so that they may settle down to something definite and have an end to uncertainty. But Republican Senators insist on holding it up. Yesterday we were threatened that it might be held up, and this by more than one Senator—held up even until the snow flies—unless Senators on this side will agree not to take up other legislation, especially currency legislation.

But I will continue reading:

The tone of general optimism pervading business circles was expressed by R. G. Dun & Co., mercantile agency, in the following statement to the New York American:

What I have read so far is an introductory preface by the American to the Dun statement. Now comes what the R. G. Dun Mercantile Agency itself said:

Prospects for fall business are satisfactory. Agricultural conditions which underlie the entire business fabric, have seldom been better at this time of the year than they are, and the large crops in practically every section of the country, which will be sold at remunerative prices, insure an active demand through the fall for all kinds of merchandise.

Labor generally is well employed and at remunerative wages. In many of the important manufacturing centers there is some complaint regarding the scarcity of labor, and as numerous advances in wages have been made it is reasonable to suppose there will be a continued good demand for the majority of the commodities which enter into general consumption.

That the people are well provided with funds and will purchase freely is indicated by the liberal orders placed by merchants for fall requirements, some wholesale dry-goods factors reporting they could dispose of more goods were they readily available, while in many instances the volume of business booked measures up very favorably with that of former years.

FOOTWEAR ORDERS.

In footwear, fall orders are being placed in normal volume, notwithstanding high prices, and some manufacturers, especially in the West, say their sales exceed those of any previous corresponding period.

The important iron and steel industry, after a short period of somewhat quieter conditions, appears to be improving and reports are remarkably uniform that prospects are decidedly encouraging.

The uncertainty regarding tariff revision has naturally had a restricting effect in some directions, but it has been more in the nature of curtailing production to current needs than of reducing consumption, and one of the most favorable features of the situation is the fact stocks in those lines which will be most affected are barely sufficient to meet the current actual demand.

Any effect tariff change may have on the future has, therefore, been very largely discounted. When the question is finally settled, there will undoubtedly be a marked revival in the demand for all classes of merchandise, which will tax the resources of the country to fill.

CURRENCY QUESTION.

Little attention is apparently being given in mercantile circles to the question of currency alterations, the general belief being whatever change may be made will be for the better. Reports from numerous leading centers state collections are reasonably prompt for this season, and merchants in the country districts expect easier monetary conditions with the movement of the crops.

Current statistics indorse reports of active business, railroad gross earnings being larger than ever before at this period, reflecting an enormous movement of freight, while bank clearings for the latest week made a favorable comparison with a year ago. Foreign trade is also very heavy.

Mercantile failures for the first half of the year showed a decrease in the number, so the strain during a trying period was not so severe, although, owing to an unusual number of large defaults, the amount of liabilities show some increase.

Mr. President, there is a note of optimism, based upon facts gathered by the most careful and widespread examination into the true conditions existing in practically every neighborhood in the United States. How it shines by contrast with this daily croaking here! I, for one, am growing weary almost unto death with this endless pessimistic chatter, and still more with threats that this chatter is to go on, and that the passage of this bill is to be delayed, although the business interests of the country need to have it settled at the earliest possible date, and although the business interests of this country are demanding that the chatter shall end and the legislation be completed without delay. It is time for the country to understand just what the trouble is.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not wonder that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], in view of the discussion that has been had and that will be had on this bill, showing its imperfections and its atrocities, is growing weary. It is natural that the Senator should grow weary. Considering the time that our Democratic friends took to consider this bill in committee and in a Democratic caucus covering a period of nearly three months, it is rather remarkable that the Senator from Missouri should find fault that we have kept it under discussion for two weeks in the Senate; but it does not appeal to me.

The Senator, Mr. President, is too excited this morning. I think the Senator came very near to violating a rule of the Senate this morning, which I will read—paragraph 2 of Rule XIX:

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator has made very serious charges against Senators on this side of the Chamber. I think he has imputed to them unworthy motives, in violation of that rule, which ought always to be observed in debate.

I do not see nor can I feel that anything has been said or done that needs to excite the Senator from Missouri, or any other Senator on that side of the Chamber. We are proceeding in a very orderly way in debating this bill. Yesterday the Democratic side of the Chamber took quite as much time as the Republican side in the debate, and I was very glad to see them do that, because their silence heretofore has been a little oppressive to some of us. We will continue to debate this bill item by item and schedule by schedule until it is completed, and some of us will continue to do it in our own way. I speak for no one but myself. I regretted yesterday that the suggestion was made in debate that somebody was speaking for this side of the Chamber. It certainly was not me. I speak for myself only now and at every other time.

I hope that the suggestions and predictions of the house of R. G. Dun & Co. are based upon substantial foundations, but the Senator from Missouri suggested, before reading the article, that the shelves of our merchants were practically empty, so far as goods are concerned. That is natural. With three or four hundred million dollars' worth of foreign goods in bond to-day in the United States that are to be dumped upon the American market without the payment of duty if this bill passes in its present form, why should any merchant purchase goods and stock his shelves? I have talked with merchants on that point in my own State and elsewhere and they tell me they are not going to do it; that they are going to wait until they get cheaper goods. Why should any man buy wool to-day and pay the duty on it if he is to have free wool? Why should a merchant stock up with sugar and pay a duty on it if he is to have free sugar? And so on through the list.

I say to the Senator that I frankly join with him in the hope that we may not have any industrial disaster, but educated in the school that I have been educated in, believing as I do in the policy of protection, which I do not find in this bill, I can not free my mind from the conviction, which I shall express at all proper times, that the passage of this law will bring industrial disturbance and, I fear, industrial disaster to the people of the United States. That feeling is shared by the people whom I so inadequately represent. I would be very glad to disabuse their minds of that feeling if I could, but I share with them in that feeling, and I deplore the possibility of this bill ever becoming a law. That it will become a law I presume is to be expected, and when it becomes a law it will then be tested by the American people. If it works out as well as the Senator from Missouri thinks it will, the Democratic Party will have justified itself before the people of the United States. The Democratic Party will have proved that the Republican Party all through its history has been wrong, so far as its contentions on tariff matters are concerned; but if, on the other hand, it proves not to work well, if it proves a detriment to the people of the United States, if it brings industrial disturbance and commercial disaster to our people, then the Democratic Party will have failed in its contention and the country will return, as I believe it will return, to the policies and doctrines of the great Republican Party.

Now, Mr. President, let us keep good-natured about this matter. Let us go along with the consideration of this bill as best we can. Let us cross swords with our Democratic friends when we think they are wrong, and let them at such length as they choose try to convert us to the unsound views that they hold regarding this proposed legislation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege, not relating at all to anything which has been said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]; but the privilege I claim is that of gladly admitting my acquaintance with a gentleman in South Dakota, any knowledge of whom it would appear that I denied yesterday in my remarks on the tariff bill in a colloquy with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. On page 2844 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the colloquy occurs, and it appears I was asked if I knew Mr. A. E. Chamberlain, formerly of the agricultural department of the State. Later I was asked in regard to knowing him as connected with the agricultural college at Brookings. At the time of the inquiry——

Mr. JAMES. I should merely like to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota, if he is addressing himself to a question of privilege which relates to a colloquy had with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], that the Senator from Montana is not in the Chamber at this time.

Mr. STERLING. It does not involve the Senator from Montana at all, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. I beg the Senator's pardon. I could not hear his suggestion, and I merely wished to suggest the absence of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. STERLING. There is no dispute between the Senator from Montana and myself as to what occurred; but at the time of the inquiry I did not catch the initials of the gentleman's name as given by the Senator from Montana, and I did not know of his connection with the agricultural department of the State, save that I had, of course, known that Mr. A. E. Chamberlain had been engaged in conducting farmers' institutes in the State. I did not know that he had had any connection whatever with the agricultural college at Brookings, nor, as the Senator stated, that my friend, A. E. Chamberlain, headed the delegation that came to Washington in connection with the reciprocity measure. Hence I said, in response to the questions of the Senator from Montana, that I did not know the gentleman. I am happy to say that I do know him, and he is a very estimable gentleman. I recognize him since I have learned his initials and ascertained that he is the gentleman to whom the Senator from Montana referred at the time.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has read an optimistic statement from the R. G. Dun Mercantile Agency, and I have myself noticed that the Dun reports have been remarkably optimistic during the tariff debate. It does not seem to me, however, that the statements are borne out by the facts.

Before briefly calling the attention of the Senate to several specific instances of failure, the closing of mills, and the general curtailment of business in Pennsylvania, occurring very recently, I should like to remind the majority of this body of the circumstances under which this legislation is now pending. It was held for nearly a month in secret conference. The minority have had little or no opportunity to learn why changes were made in the bill or what changes were made. The country expects of the minority to debate to a reasonable extent and to expose, from the point of view of the Republican protectionists, the objections to the pending measure. There is not the slightest desire on the part of anyone on this side of the Chamber to delay this bill one day. Three-quarters of the time consumed up to the present in the discussion of this measure has been occupied by the majority in control of this legislation. I have not seen the situation stated more concisely than in the clipping from the Washington Herald, which I shall now send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows from the Washington Herald of May 20, 1913:

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS.

In a recent issue of a monthly magazine President Wilson expressed some interesting ideas regarding the preparation of tariff and currency laws. His main contention was that "the people" were not heard. He objected to the fact that big manufacturers, bankers, and heads of railroad corporations were chiefly consulted when important legislation was to be enacted. But, most of all, he condemned the practice of considering these matters in secret under conditions which gave the people no opportunity to know how and why the legislators arrived at their course of action.

"I do not want," to quote President Wilson's own words, "a smug lot of experts to sit down behind closed doors in Washington and play Providence to me."

The administration of President Wilson, marked thus far by honesty and sincerity of purpose, can not afford to suffer the taint of secret manipulation. If the tariff bill which passed the House is to be changed in the Senate, the country has a right to know why the amendments have been made. The record should be public. The reason for changes must not only be apparent, but convincing, and it can not be either if the veil of secrecy envelops senatorial action.

Not only the Democratic administration but the Senate is on trial. Neither can hope to retain popular favor if tariff legislation is to be effected behind closed doors. It may be that Democratic Senators do not want to hear the warnings which would be uttered nor listen to statements which would make good campaign material for the opposition. We can not believe that fear inspires their line of conduct. This being the case, and it being equally certain that no Senator has any desire to do in secret that which he would not do in the open, there seems to be no ground whatever for the program of secrecy which has been entered upon.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the charge was frequently made when the Payne-Aldrich bill was being framed that the then majority in this Chamber surrendered their judgment to the chairman of the Finance Committee. It is evident that the method has only been slightly altered, if the truth of the charge made is to be admitted, which I do not admit.

There is, however, no question of the fact that the majority Senators in this body have absolutely surrendered not only their own judgment but the interests of their constituents to a Democratic caucus; and the only reply that has heretofore been made was the reply made yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that they were no worse than the Republicans had been four years ago.

As to these rosy views of Dun, I hold in my hand the statement of a failure, a complete closing of one of the largest textile concerns in southeastern Pennsylvania, occurring two or three days ago. I will ask the Secretary to read the short notice of it which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Public Ledger of July 29, 1913.]

CHESTER PLANT IDLE—HETZEL TEXTILE MILLS CLOSED, OWING TO TARIFF UNCERTAINTY.

CHESTER, PA., July 28.

George C. Hetzel, president of Hetzel & Co., owners of a large textile plant in this city, in explaining the cause for closing down for an indefinite period, declares that owing to the present tariff bill the wholesale clothiers who buy from them will not give orders for new goods.

Mr. Hetzel further said: "For the present we will run only the finishing and dyehouse. In former years we were always successful in having on hand sufficient orders to keep the plant running in between the seasons until the next season's orders began to come in. This year such has not been the case, owing to the present tariff uncertainty."

About 300 persons are affected as a result of the weaving department being closed. When the few orders on hand are finished the finishing department and dyehouse will be shut down.

Mr. PENROSE. In other words, Mr. President, 300 persons have already been thrown out of employment and several hundred more will be thrown out of employment in a short time.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not true that the reports of Dun & Co. and Bradstreet & Co. show that the failures this year, week by week, have been fewer than during the last year?

Mr. PENROSE. I have already admitted that a strange optimism prevails in the reports of these two mercantile agencies, but they are not borne out by the facts.

Mr. JAMES. Of course, mercantile agencies are not political organizations trying to further the interests of political parties. We should not infer, I hope, from the Senator's statement that he wants to have the country believe that Dun & Co. and Bradstreet & Co. are making false reports of the business conditions of the country.

Mr. PENROSE. Not intentionally; but I think their sources of information must be extremely poor.

Mr. JAMES. Does the Senator think, sitting in the Chamber here as a Senator from Pennsylvania, and, of course, very intensely in favor of protection, that he is a better judge of the business conditions of the country than these great business organizations?

Mr. PENROSE. I do, so far as Pennsylvania is concerned.

Mr. JAMES. These organizations ramify every part of the Nation and get daily and weekly reports of the condition of the business of the country.

Mr. PENROSE. I am only speaking for eastern Pennsylvania, and I think that I know a great deal more than does any mercantile agency about conditions there.

I will go further and state, for the information of the Senator, that in addition to the complete shutdown of this very well-known, long-established, and thoroughly solvent concern there is not a textile industry east of the Susquehanna River in the State of Pennsylvania that is working more than three days a week at the present time.

I took occasion to select a small county, the county of Lebanon, in eastern Pennsylvania, with a number of small, diversified industries, and I had a person go up there and find out just what was going on. I have a report, received in the last few days, which I should like the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Colebrook furnaces, two in number, owned by the Lackawanna Iron & Steel Co., managed by Lloyd Wolfe, a Democrat, one shut down. Mr. Wolfe informed me that no men were laid off, as they were given work cleaning up and repairing, but in a week or so they would be compelled to proportion the work and have half the force work one week and alternate.

Mr. Wolfe reluctantly admitted that the shutdown was caused by the poor condition of the iron market; also that they were making iron at a loss and storing most of it waiting for better prices.

If matters do not change I am willing to say that several hundred men will be out of employment at this plant.

They are operating three other furnaces here, and there are rumors on the streets that they will close down also. Most of this information was given me by Wolfe confidentially.

Lebanon Blast Furnace Co., owned by the Melly estate (old-fashioned furnace), shut down tight; 100 men out of work. George Melly, one of the owners, very bitterly condemns and blames the Democratic tariff makers for the trouble.

Sheridan furnace, one, owned by the Berkshire Iron Co., located at Sheridan, Pa., this county, shut down tight; 200 men out of work. I could not learn from the manager the cause, for the reason that he was also dropped and, I understand, has left these parts.

The facts as stated are pretty reliable. I spoke with each one of the managers, except in the case of the one connected with the Sheridan furnace, and that information I got over the telephone from one of the leading business men in that section, so you can rely upon its being correct.

Mr. PENROSE. As I have said, Mr. President, Lebanon County is one of the smaller counties of the State. The 1,000 persons at present out of employment in that county can not find the wherewithal for their daily sustenance out of the rosy reports of the Dun Mercantile Agency.

I will ask the Secretary to read further an extract from the Lebanon Daily Times. I have purposely selected this small rural section, which the traveler on a train passing through would not suppose had an industry in it, to illustrate what must be going on all over the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which is a seething mass of industrial establishments. I desire to state here that Mr. Coleman, who makes the comment, is one of the largest manufacturers in that section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Lebanon Daily Times, May 15, 1913.]

MR. B. DAWSON COLEMAN'S COMMENT ON THE CLOSING OF INDUSTRIAL PLANTS—THE DIRECT RESULT OF THE ABANDONMENT OF THE COUNTRY'S POLICY OF PROTECTION TO AMERICAN LABOR.

It may seem like a matter hardly worth noticing in these times of general prosperity, when everybody who wants it has work to do, but, nevertheless, it would be a grave mistake on the part of anyone not to give at least a moment's consideration to the shutting down of the iron plants of this county. Not so long ago there were three more in operation than at the present time, and why is a question well worth asking. On no less an authority than the word of the resident manager of the Pennsylvania Steel Co., Mr. B. Dawson Coleman, the reason given is that it does not pay under present uncertain conditions growing out of the new tariff laws to run such plants at their top speed. To be in business and lose money is a very uncomfortable situation, and add to that the more uncertain future, and we have a situation that is almost unbearable. Like it as we may, it must be a source of satisfaction to men who during the last general election campaign made predictions that are now approaching their fulfillment, and yet at the time they were scoffed at as the statement of demagogues who were seeking to make political capital out of the situation. However much this is to be decried, when the men and the cause they represented are taken into consideration it is not too early for anyone to stand up and attempt to say that the danger flag was not sincerely waved and the situation was as plainly described as common language could make it. But the proof of the pudding is in the eating is an old saying, and now statements then made are being put to the test in a very uncomfortable manner. A decided change in the revenue policy of the country can not be made without the effect of it being felt in every walk of life, even down to the lowest-paid laborer who depends upon his hard-earned daily wage for support. The situation in connection with the closing down of one of the North Lebanon furnaces, owned and run by the Pennsylvania Steel Co., one of the largest and most prosperous in the country, under the management of one of Lebanon's most influential citizens, is cause enough to awaken earnest inquiry, and the answer comes as a thunder clap from a clear sky, leading to an awakening most terrifying. Most people not initiated are not aware that under present conditions pig iron in Lebanon is being made at a loss, pointing to a future so dark and forbidding from an industrial point of view, in the face of what the Democratic policy of the present administration is doing, as to make it almost suicidal for any manufacturer to continue to make or turn out a product in the faint hope of bettering conditions, in order that, from a humanitarian standpoint, labor may continue to find employment, as has often been the case. The situation is such at this time that capital must be conserved to meet unseen contingencies, and as a result the first to suffer most keenly will be labor. Sad as that is to contemplate, the fact remains and can not be gainsaid. This, then, brings up a subject too often slightingly alluded to, namely, politics. In the few addresses Mr. Coleman made on the stump, when his interest was aroused to an extraordinary degree by what he saw might be the result and from a kindly consideration for the many men in his employ who were being carried away on the wild tide of progessiveism, he then plainly foretold just what is beginning to be realized; and if that does not afford food for reflection, we hardly know what will. It is now a condition, not simply a theory, that confronts us; and sad as it is, it would be infinitely sadder if the occasion were allowed to pass by without some allusion to the cause, and our community, at least, is under a debt of obligation to Mr. Coleman and men like him who stand forth as captains of industry to have them tell the people the straight truth, so that should the occasion again present itself the right kind of an effort can be made by men with their better judgment aroused most keenly in a very drastic manner to correct the evils that now are upon us and threatening to grow with increased crushing power as the wailing, dying cry of murdered American industries rolls over the land.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate by too many instances showing the lack of correct information which seems to exist on the part of Dun's Mercantile Agency; but I should like to have a short account of the closing down of furnace No. 3 in Lebanon read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Lebanon Daily News, Lebanon, Pa., Tuesday, May 13, 1913.]

NO. 3 FURNACE WILL BE IDLE—NORTH LEBANON PLANT OF THE PENNSYLVANIA STEEL CO. WILL BE BLOWN OUT—SLUMP IN THE MARKET—RESIDENT MANAGER B. DAWSON COLEMAN GIVES EXPRESSION TO VIEWS.

While Democratic Congressmen at Washington and the Democratic press throughout the country are still preaching the doctrine of prosperity without a protective tariff, and while President Wilson is still threatening anybody who attempts to "start something" in the way of industrial trouble, the tariff tinkering is certainly having its bad effects; and Lebanon to-day feels its first effects in the shape of the stoppage of a furnace.

BLOWN OUT TO-NIGHT.

No. 3 furnace, of the North Lebanon plant of the Pennsylvania Steel Co., will be blown out to-night, and that furnace will be idle for an indefinite period. It remains to be seen whether the other furnace will also be blown out later. That is not in immediate prospect, however, for the Pennsylvania Steel Co. is an unusually large concern, and its manufacturing plants at Steelton and elsewhere may keep the remaining furnace in operation no matter what may happen. Such, at least, is the hope of the local officials.

MIGHT SUSPEND FOR REPAIRS.

Although it was announced some time ago that the Lackawanna Iron & Steel Co.'s Colebrook and Cornwall plants might suspend for repairs at any time, Supt. Wolfe stated this morning that no orders for a suspension had been received up to the present time.

IRON MARKET HIT.

B. Dawson Coleman, resident manager of the Pennsylvania Steel Co., was interviewed this morning on the subject of the proposed shutdown of No. 3 furnace.

"Is the proposed suspension necessary for repairs or is it occasioned by tariff possibilities?" he was asked.

"No. 3 furnace is in excellent shape," replied Mr. Coleman. "I do not want to say that the prospective tariff schedules are directly responsible, for I do not know that for a certainty, but I do know that some influence or other has hit the iron market very hard, for prices have been going down steadily during the past several months. And even at the reduction there is no demand for it. We have been storing some iron lately and we do not think it advisable to continue doing so under the uncertain conditions now prevailing."

"What is your opinion of the present tariff bill as it passed the House last week and as it is now under consideration by the Senate?"

"I have only a general opinion to make in this regard," replied Mr. Coleman, "and that is that I am sincerely afraid that the Democrats are going to make their usual mess of things. They were placed in power not by a majority of the people, but by a combination of circumstances in which the Bull Moose movement played a conspicuous part, and yet the Democratic Representatives at Washington presume to say that the American people want a tariff for revenue only. I do not believe it. I am firmly convinced that the majority of the people do want protection for American industries. And the wisdom of such a course is apparent in the fact that the mere mention of letting down the bars to admit foreign competition on a cheap-labor basis is sufficient to cause a slump in prices and hold up the demand for other products of American mills, as well as of iron."

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, these small industries which have suffered devastation as the result of the mere menace of this bill are in no way connected with any great combination or trust or aggregation of capital or industrial concerns. They are in the hands of small private owners. As I say, it has already affected one of the smaller counties of the State to such an extent that 1,000 men are thrown out of employment.

Going to another part of the country, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Greystone Mills closed completely. Greystone, I believe, is somewhere near Providence, R. I. It was stated by the firm of Messrs. Joseph Benn & Sons that the provisions of the new tariff bill made it absolutely impossible for the firm to compete successfully with imported goods and that a stoppage of machinery would take place immediately.

At Greystone, Messrs. Benn & Sons are spinners and manufacturers of mohair and alpaca, and employed about 1,500 work people, who are now absolutely out of employment, and are supposed to receive consolation from the rosy reports of Dun's Mercantile Agency. The business has been built up under the shelter of protective duties until it has now reached a high state of prosperity. The Greystone mills were opened in February, 1905. Mr. Harrison Benn, in an interview, says:

There is nothing strange in it, nor is there anything that a person can not understand. Our business here is different from that of other manufacturers in this country in that we have two plants, one here in Greystone and the other in Bradford, England.

This is not the only instance, Mr. President, of two plants, one in this country and one abroad.

We make the same kind of goods in each mill from the same kind of stock, and for that reason, when we find that we can manufacture a style cheaper in one mill than we can in the other we transfer the order to that mill. In the present case I have asked the Congressmen from this State to try and have an adequate protective duty placed upon mohair and alpaca goods that we may be able to operate both of our plants.

This seems to be something that they either can not or will not do, and for that reason I find that under the proposed Underwood Tariff Act I can make goods in Bradford and land them in New York at about 4 cents a yard cheaper than I can make them in Greystone and ship them to New York.

One final case, and I am done—that of the Sharpless cream separator concern, located about 30 miles from Philadelphia, in the city of West Chester. The Sharpless cream separator is an invention of Mr. Sharpless, on which he has built up a plant there employing many men and women and children. His goods, the cream separators, are shipped not only all over the United States but all over the world, to China and to the Orient. Within a week that concern has completed the absolute transfer of its plant to Hamburg, and no longer is there a vestige of it left in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I want to say to my distinguished friend and neighbor just across the Delaware River in Pennsylvania that the closing of mills in Pennsylvania is not a new thing. I have done a good deal of missionary work over in Pennsylvania, and I have found iron mills in Pennsylvania closed for the past 15 years under the reign and régime of the Republican Party and the high protective tariff system.

Mr. PENROSE. I should be glad if the Senator would mention a specific instance. I do not recall a mill that has been closed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say furnaces, rather than mills. I have found furnaces and I have found mills in Pennsylvania that have been closed; and I have found, and know from my own knowledge, as the Senator does, of most disastrous labor troubles in Pennsylvania that have come about under the régime of the high tariff. I want to say further that, while the distinguished Senator comments adversely upon the reports of Dun's Agency and upon the calamity that has come to steel-mill owners, I hold in my hand a copy of the New York Times of July 30, to-day, which states in large letters:

Steel earnings up to $41,219,813—Quarter ended shows 15.70 per cent on common stock—Only three quarters so good.

Then it goes on further to state that this is the most remarkable in the history of the company.

Big gain over first period, and, compared with same months last year, increase is $16,100,000—Far better than expected.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I submit that, really, for the past eight months, but certainly for the past six months, we have been living in an era of tariff reform. It was in the very atmosphere. The world knew it. Everybody knew it. Every manufacturer and every mill owner knew it throughout the length and breadth of our country; so our friends can not raise this calamity howl in the hope of catching votes. Your case, I am sorry to say for you, is past redemption and past hope.

I find that the New York Sun says——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is too bad to interrupt this.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; it is not too bad to interrupt me. I know exactly what the Senator from Pennsylvania will say.

Mr. OLIVER. Then the Senator had better say it, Mr. President. I will yield to him.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know just what he will say. It will be hung all over with crêpe and sadness and sorrow. Everything is going to chaos, to death, and destruction, under your theory. Yet the fact is, as I said before, that in your own State the most calamitous strikes, that brought bloodshed, death, sadness, sorrow, and starvation to scores and scores of mill workers, have come under your régime.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator to name one.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will point to the Homestead strike and the Bethlehem Steel strike under your McKinley law.

Mr. OLIVER. Twenty-one years ago!

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not care whether it is 21 or twice 21 years ago. We tried it out. The public knew it. It made the disturbance and has created the discontent of labor.

I want to say, further, that the New York Sun of to-day—and God knows nobody will claim that that paper is very much on our side of the question—goes on to speak, in its financial article, of "underlying firmness in stocks despite unfavorable influences."

What are the "unfavorable influences"? The "unfavorable influences" are the depression that the great financial interests would endeavor to bring about and the calamity that these two Senators, distinguished and capable though they are, have held up.

The article goes on to say——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey to yield to me for just a minute.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Proceed; I will yield.

Mr. OLIVER. The Senator has alluded to "these two Senators." I desire to call his attention to the fact that if I am one of the two, I have not said anything so far. I have predicted no calamity. While the Senator from New Jersey has very kindly volunteered to anticipate what I was going to say, I regret to say that his anticipation of my remarks is entirely different from the remarks I intended to make.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I stand corrected, then. I should like to hear the Senator now give us a portrayal of glory and hope for the future.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that my colleague alluded to a number of iron plants in the eastern part of Pennsylvania that had shut down. In reply to that the Senator from New Jersey has read a report of the earnings of the United States Steel Corporation.

The United States Steel Corporation does not own a single plant in Pennsylvania east of the Allegheny Mountains. Its entire holdings in that State are in the western part of the State. The United States Steel Corporation does not make one-fourth of the steel that is made in Pennsylvania.

I said a year ago, when a bill similar to this was before the Senate, and I say now, that so far as the steel industry is concerned, the industrial managers who have anything to fear from this proposed legislation are not the men who run the United States Steel Corporation, but the men who have the small plants, many of which are in eastern Pennsylvania, some in the western part of the State, and others scattered over the whole length and breadth of the land. They and the men they employ are the ones that will suffer from this change.

I am not here to predict disaster. I hope it will not come.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not believe it will come.

Mr. OLIVER. But I want to say that if it does come the Democratic Party can not unload the responsibility upon this side of the Chamber, but must shoulder it themselves. The responsibility lies with the majority, and not with the minority, whatever may come.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg to say to the Senator that the majority are broad enough and big enough to bear it and shoulder it. We are not going to shirk the responsibility. When the distinguished Senator refers to the fact that the particular interest to which I referred is not located in Pennsylvania, I care not. That is no argument. We are not making a tariff for Pennsylvania, but we are making a tariff for this broad land which shall affect all the industries, whether they be in Pennsylvania or in Oklahoma or in New Jersey. We realize this fact, and the public realize it.

Your system has been tried out to the letter, and we know its results. We know that the public are dissatisfied. We know, further, that the reduction of the tariff will, in reason, tend to decrease the enormous profits that have been made by the steel industry and by a thousand other industries.

But, lo; a new calamity came. And what was it? It took the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to preach that. Why, the cows are going to cease to give milk, and there will be no more cream to separate. It will be all water. Hence the Sharpless Separator Co. in Pennsylvania have gone out of the business and are going to Hamburg.

Mr. President, there will be milk given by the cows, whether on the hillsides of New Jersey or on the hills and in the valleys of Lebanon in Pennsyvania; and cream will rise on the milk, and separators will be used, whether they are made by Sharpless or by anybody else. To my mind the idea is too silly to entertain.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have no doubt that cows will continue to perform their functions, and that milk will be consumed by infants and by mature people; but the cream separator will not be the product of American labor, but it will be the product of German labor, brought over here in German vessels.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not believe that. It took American genius to make a Sharpless separator, and Sharpless separators will be used; or if not Sharpless separators, some other separator will be used. Sharpless never found a market for his separator—many a time have I wielded the crank—simply because it was made in Pennsylvania, or under the protective tariff. It found a market because it was an efficient separator of milk from cream.

But now, something else: The New York Times of yesterday—I do not know how I got so chock full of the New York Times, for I have damned it on some occasions [laughter]—the New York Times of yesterday tells another tale, a horrible tale. All mankind who are compelled to wear clothes in this great land of ours, of course, will clothe themselves now in sackcloth and ashes and go in sadness and sorrow because of the fact that the Times says:

Prices reduced—

By what? By the American Woolen Co., fattened for years with the iniquity of a tariff that robbed humanity. They are going to reduce the tariff and reduce the cost. This article says that they met in conclave yesterday, and men's wear fabrics—take courage, ye men of Pennsylvania, and laborers in Lebanon—men's wear fabrics for the spring of 1914 are cut from 10 to 12½ per cent. So even though some of the mills in Pennsylvania have closed down and riches have poured in the pockets of the owners, resulting from the toil and sweat of the miners and the workmen in your shops and mills, they, thank God, will get some benefits, some advantages from the Democratic Party in the matter of reduction.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Now, give yourself no uneasiness about the Democratic Party. We are here, we believe, to stay. We are here for four years anyhow, and we believe that we will so brighten the dawn of human life in the struggle for bread that our lease of power will be prolonged for many years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey how he is going to brighten the dawn for the 1,000 people at present out of work in Lebanon County?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We are going to brighten the dawn by giving them a fairer opportunity. It is not so much that which a man earns as that which he is obliged to spend. It matters but little to me if I get a rich stipend in wage if I am obliged for myself and family and little ones who may be around me to spend it all for the satisfaction and aggrandizement of some tariff baron.

Mr. PENROSE. Starvation and opportunity seem to be the motto of the Senator from New Jersey. Now, one more question and I am done, if the Senator will excuse me.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I trust we may both live long and that the Senator may have many chances to propound questions to me.

Mr. PENROSE. The river separates us, and we do not want to quarrel every day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We do not quarrel now.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from New Jersey was indicating that a strike was going on in Philadelphia. I think he must have in mind the trolley strike which occurred there.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not say Philadelphia.

Mr. PENROSE. That had nothing to do with the mills.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not say Philadelphia.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator what his explanation is of the march of Coxey's army and the strike which compelled President Cleveland to call out the United States Army under a free-trade régime?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say your so-called free-trade régime never originated Coxey's army. Coxey's army was originated from unfortunate conditions that led up to that crisis. The tariff system of so-called protection has been the foundation, I believe, of all the social evils that have permeated our system and cursed our land.

Mr. STONE. I ask that we may proceed with the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at page 20, paragraph 80.

The next amendment of the committee was, in paragraph 80, page 20, line 16, after the word "stoneware," to strike out "stoneware and earthenware crucibles," so as to read:

80. Common yellow, brown, or gray earthenware made of natural unwashed and unmixed clay; plain or embossed, common salt-glazed stoneware; all the foregoing, not ornamented, incised, or decorated in any manner, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in paragraph 80, page 20, line 20, after the word "ware," to insert "not herein otherwise provided for," so as to read:

If ornamented, incised, or decorated in any manner, and manufactures wholly or in chief value of such ware, not herein otherwise provided for, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the paragraph be passed over with the understanding that I may offer an amendment later.

Mr. THOMAS. The entire paragraph?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; paragraph 80.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator desire to have it passed over without acting on the committee amendments?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to understand the status, Mr. President. It was suggested yesterday, as I remember, by the Chair that it was necessary to submit the request to have a paragraph passed over before the committee amendments were finally all of them passed upon. If I am right about that——

Mr. STONE. If it is passed over I do not quite see how we can act on the committee amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The committee amendments are to be considered fi

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well.

Mr. STONE. Then I ask that a vote may be taken on the pending committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in paragraph 80, page 20, line 21, after the words "ad valorem," to insert:

Stoneware and earthenware crucibles, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have paragraph 80 passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The next paragraph was read, as follows:

81. Earthenware and crockery ware composed of a nonvitrified absorbent body, including white granite and semiporcelain earthenware, and cream-colored ware, and stoneware, including clock cases with or without movements, pill tiles, plaques, ornaments, toys, charms, vases, statues, statuettes, mugs, cups, steins, lamps, and all other articles composed wholly or in chief value of such ware; if plain white, plain yellow, plain brown, plain red, or plain black, not painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, ornamented or decorated in any manner, and manufactures in chief value of such ware not specially provided for in this section, 35 per cent ad valorem; if painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, or ornamented or decorated in any manner, and manufactures in chief value of such ware not specially provided for in this section, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to make the same request in respect to this paragraph.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I notice that the amendment proposed by the committee in paragraph 82 has the effect of taking a large quantity of the cheaper kinds of earthenware that were covered by paragraph 81 as the bill came from the House and increasing the rate on them from 35 per cent ad valorem to 55 per cent ad valorem. I should like to know the purpose of the need for that change. I have examined the hearings before the Senate Finance Committee and I fail to find any statement contained in the testimony of manufacturers or importers which justified placing a 55 per cent tariff on the common earthenware which is described in this paragraph as semivitrified or semivitreous. In fact, it is the same earthenware apparently that is described as semiporcelain in the preceding paragraph.

Mr. STONE. Which paragraph is the Senator referring to?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Paragraph 82.

Mr. STONE. We have not reached paragraph 82 yet. Paragraph 81 was just read, and the Senator from Wisconsin asked that it be passed over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The reason why I rose at the time I did was because of the request made by the Senator from Wisconsin to pass over the paragraph, and I desired to have the information at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was the previous paragraph that was passed over; not this one. This paragraph has not been read yet.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But there was a request made that this paragraph be passed over.

Mr. STONE. It was paragraph 81.

Mr. SIMMONS. That paragraph has not been read yet.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read paragraph 82.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in paragraph 82, page 21, line 15, after the word "China," to strike out "and," and after the word "porcelain" to insert "and other"; in line 16, after the word "body," to strike out "having a vitrified or semivitrified," and insert "which when broken shows a vitrified or vitreous, or semivitrified or semivitreous," so as to make the paragraph read:

82. China, porcelain, and other wares composed of a vitrified nonabsorbent body which when broken shows a vitrified or vitreous, or semivitrified or semivitreous fracture, and all bisque and parian wares, including clock cases with or without movements, plaques, ornaments, toys, charms, vases, statues, statuettes, mugs, cups, steins, lamps, and all other articles composed wholly or in chief value of such ware, if plain white, or plain brown, not painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, or ornamented or decorated in any manner; and manufactures in chief value of such ware not specially provided for in this section, 50 per cent ad valorem; if painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, or ornamented or decorated in any manner and manufactures in chief value of such ware not specially provided for in this section, 55 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the matter which I desire to get some information on before a vote is taken on the amendment, if there is any information to be had as to the purpose in increasing the rate fixed by the House, which seems to me to be a pretty high rate—35 per cent ad valorem—to 55 per cent ad valorem upon common earthenware, which is manufactured successfully and cheaply in this country. As I gather from the hearings, there is very little fear of foreign competition, so far as the ware described as semivitreous of semivitrified is concerned.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator the only change the Senate committee made in this paragraph was a change suggested by the examiner at the port of New York, and it was intended simply to aid in the administration of the law. The bill as it came from the House read:

China and porcelain wares composed of a vitrified, nonabsorbent body having a vitrified or semivitrified fracture.

It was pointed out to us that china could not be classified in that way unless it had already a fracture; and in the interest of the administration of the law it was suggested that it be changed so that it would read:

Which when broken shows a vitrified or vitreous or semivitrified or semivitreous fracture.

It has been said in the public prints by certain importers that this language was inserted in the bill in the interest of the manufacturers and that it was in the nature of a joker. If it is a joker, it is one that was put over on us by the porcelain and china examiner in New York. I think the criticism made of the old language is justifiable and that this improves it. I do not think it will have the effect that certain importers claim it will have, of largely increasing the tax on goods that will be imported under the rate.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the criticism I have of this paragraph does not apply to manufacturers but to importers, who state that the language would be so confusing that it would carry those articles which are supposed to bear a 35 per cent duty up to 50 per cent and those which bear a 50 per cent duty to 55 per cent. What I wished to inquire was whether the information which the committee had was sufficiently reliable to warrant making the change in the House provision.

Mr. HUGHES. As I stated to the Senator from Washington, the change was made at the instance of the china examiner at the port of New York. The language in the bill as it came from the House is confusing, because the House language was:

China and porcelain wares composed of a vitrified, nonabsorbent body having a vitrified or semivitrified fracture.

The change in that language is simply in the interest of administration.

Mr. WEEKS. It seems to me it is a pretty technical question, and I do not see how any Senator is going to determine for himself what the effect will be.

Mr. HUGHES. Our information is that this sort of classification can be readily made by the examining officers under the proposed language, but that it could not be made under the old language without breaking a piece of the china or a part of the set. They tell us that there will be no difficulty about making the classification under this language.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I have not heard what the examiner said in regard to this matter, but I will ask the Senator from New Jersey if it is not a mere possible juggle on words that caused this change? As it read when the bill came from the House, "having a vitrified or semivitrified fracture," might not the point be raised by an importer that the glass must absolutely be broken to come under that ruling, while the language is clarified by showing that when broken it shows a vitrified or vitreous fracture?

Mr. HUGHES. That is the idea I was trying to convey. I thank the Senator. That very point was made, and that is the only reason, so far as I know, why the change was made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I fully agree with the statement made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]; and the only way to make it plainer than it is here, in my opinion, would be to adopt the wording of the present law. But, of course, if the Senator from New Jersey does not want to do that, then this is better than the language in the bill as it passed the House. There is no question as to the real meaning and intent of the paragraph.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious, I think, to anyone reading these two paragraphs together that the effect of paragraph 82 will be to very largely negative paragraph 81. Paragraph 81 puts semiporcelain at a rate of 35 per cent ad valorem. Paragraph 82, as it was framed by the House, puts porcelain—not semiporcelain, but porcelain described as having a nonabsorbent body and showing a vitrified or vitreous fracture—at a rate of 55 per cent ad valorem. The Senate committee did not change paragraph 81, and left semiporcelain at a rate of 35 per cent; but without changing it it adopts an utterly inconsistent provision, that porcelain having a semivitrified and semivitreous fracture shall bear a rate of 55 per cent. If it has a semivitreous or semivitrified fracture, it is semiporcelain, which, under paragraph 81, will bear a rate of 35 per cent. The effect here is a specific provision, of course, taking precedence over the general provision as to the great quantity of the cheaper kind of porcelain and earthenware. It is not confined to porcelain because after the words "china and porcelain" and before the word "wares" the Senate committee has inserted the words "and other." So it includes all earthenware of a semivitrified and semivitreous fracture and restores the rate of the Payne-Aldrich law upon that cheaper kind of ware.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in just one second. One objection that is made by some people who are interested in this matter is that so far from having the effect the Senator from New Jersey says of making the law plainer and easier of administration, it would confuse it and make it difficult of interpretation. It is plain to see how that would be the result when you provide that semiporcelain shall have a rate of 35 per cent and that porcelain having a semivitrified fracture shall have a rate of 55 per cent. How is that going to facilitate the administration of the law?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator's difficulty grows out of some little confusion as to what is embraced in paragraph 81 and in paragraph 82. If the Senator will look at the present law embraced in paragraphs 93 and 94——

Mr. POINDEXTER. There was no classification at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will see that those two paragraphs provided a mixture of china, porcelain and earthenware, and stone and crockery ware. In paragraph 93 the duty imposed on china, porcelain, earthenware, and stoneware, when tinted or painted or enameled, was 60 per cent. It made no difference whether it was chinaware or stoneware; under that paragraph of the old law they were both taxed at 60 per cent if painted or decorated.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no classification.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, in paragraph 94 chinaware and porcelain and earthenware and stoneware are put in one paragraph together, and if they are not painted or stained they are taxed at 55 per cent. The Senator will see that those two paragraphs combined the two and made no differentiation whatever between earthenware and chinaware.

Now, what the Senate and the House has attempted to do in paragraphs 81 and 82 is to classify these two wares, which, as everybody knows, are in all their essential qualities and attributes entirely different. The Senator's trouble, I think, arises from the fact that he fails to note that paragraph 81 deals entirely with earthenware and crockery ware.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does it not deal with the same porcelain?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; it does not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. SIMMONS. One is of nonvitrified absorbent character; the other is of vitrified nonabsorbent character.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The first part of paragraph 81 is as follows:

> Earthenware and crockery ware composed of a nonvitrified absorbent body, including white granite and semiporcelain earthenware.

Paragraph 82 contains the words "and other wares," which includes all those.

Mr. SIMMONS. Paragraph 81 applies to nonvitrified; that is, not of a glassy character and possessing the attributes of absorption.

In the other paragraph we have provided for china and porcelain and other wares composed of vitrified—that is, a glassy nonabsorbent surface—making a clear differentiation between the two upon the one. Earthenware and crockery we have reduced the duty of 55 per cent from the Payne-Aldrich law to 35 per cent and 50 per cent. On the china and porcelain we have reduced the duties from 60 per cent to 40 and 55 per cent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from North Carolina is entirely mistaken in his assumption that I have misunderstood the effect of these paragraphs. I have read them carefully, and the language is so plain that there can not be any two opinons about the fact that paragraph 82 modifies paragraph 81, increasing the duty from 35 per cent to 50 per cent. I was mistaken a moment ago in saying 55 per cent, because that rate of 55 per cent applies only when the ware is decorated; but it increases the rate from 35 per cent to 50 per cent upon the common kinds of porcelain, china, and earthen ware which are in most general use.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about that. Under the present law the kind of ware he is talking about is taxed, as I understand it, at 55 per cent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No. When it is decorated the rate is 55 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; when it is not decorated.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is 50 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. When it is not decorated it is taxed under the present law at 55 per cent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am speaking of the bill, not of the present law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and under the bill——

Mr. HUGHES. The proposed law——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Fifty per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is taxed at 35 and 40 per cent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator undoubtedly places that construction upon the bill, and I hope now that the matter has been pointed out to the committee the committee will consent that this amendment be not adopted, because the effect of it is to put this ware which the Senator says bears a rate of 25 per cent at a rate of 50 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; it is just the reverse.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that where I think he is in error, if he is in error, is in regarding as synonymous the terms "vitrified" or "semivitreous" and "porcelain" and "semiporcelain." I am satisfied, if my information is correct—and I got the information from a gentleman in whom I have the utmost confidence——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from New Jersey contend that earthenware having a vitrified or vitreous fracture is the same as the earthenware described as having a semivitreous or semivitrified fracture?

Mr. HUGHES. No; what I say——

Mr. POINDEXTER. That difference is the substance of my complaint against this amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator is contending that this language "when broken shows a vitrified or vitreous fracture" carries the articles provided for in paragraph 82 back into paragraph 81.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me ask the Senator another question. If the Senator is correct as to the purpose of the committee not to modify paragraph 81, why did the committee insert the words "and other" before "wares" and after the word "porcelain"?

Mr. HUGHES. After the word "porcelain" in paragraph 82?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; in line 1, paragraph 82, the words "and other" were inserted before "wares," so as to include all kinds of earthenware as well as porcelain.

Mr. HUGHES. One is an absorbent body and the other a nonabsorbent body. I will say to the Senator this is the same complaint that is made by certain importers with reference to this paragraph. It may be that from the standpoint of the importer the paragraph is unduly high, but the high rate was levied in order that the enormous amount of revenue that is collected from these items should continue to be collected, or as nearly the amount as possible. There is a very important item of revenue involved in the paragraph.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator think that this is a proper object to select for the purpose of collecting revenue?

Mr. HUGHES. Undoubtedly, in my judgment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Common earthenware?

Mr. HUGHES. This is not common earthenware.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it is.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator is entirely mistaken about that. As I said, the examiner, the man who passes this commodity every day in the appraisers' stores in the port of New York——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it would not make any difference if a thousand appraisers should undertake to say it had that effect, because the language is to the contrary. You have added the words "and other" before "wares." You have modified it by inserting "semi" before the word "vitrified."

Mr. HUGHES. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington just what suggestion he makes or what amendment he offers?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am rising to oppose the amendment proposed by the Senate committee. I think that the provision as it came from the House makes sufficiently high the rate of duty.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator then desire to have the entire amendment stricken out?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire, at least, to have a vote upon the question whether we shall leave that clause of paragraph 82 as it was before it was amended by the Senate committee.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has asked that this paragraph be passed over.

Mr. HUGHES. Not paragraph 82.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not done so, but I am going to make that request.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to refer to paragraph 81.

Mr. STONE. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin asked that paragraph 81 be passed over, and he also indicated that he would ask that paragraph 82 be passed over.

Mr, LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I am going to ask that paragraph 82 be passed over.

Mr. STONE. I understood the Senator to so state, but it had not been read at that time. If it is to be passed over, I suggest that it might not be objectionable to let the amendment remain for further consideration. If there is anything of real merit in the suggestion of the Senator from Washington, the committee will desire to conform its labors to meet the objection. I do not think the objection is well founded at present, but I may be mistaken. Inasmuch as the paragraph is to go over, we shall take up the matter in the committee along with the paragraph itself, if that is satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not say it is satisfactory, because I might not be present at the exact time when it is reached; but I accede to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, and will defer any further remarks on the subject until it is again taken up.

Mr. STONE. Then, let us go on with the bill. Let the paragraph be passed over on the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and let us take up paragraph 83.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, just a word before the next paragraph is read. I think if the Senator from Washington will carefully examine the two paragraphs, he will find that they are entirely distinct one from the other and refer to different classes of commodities. The first covers all wares that are made of absorbent bodies; the second covers all wares that are made of nonabsorbent bodies. Consequently, the words "and other" were designed as an amendment to include such wares made from "other" nonabsorbent bodies as might not be included in the term "china and porcelain." I think that makes it very distinct.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, apropos of the statement just made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I would say that I agree with him that there is that distinction between the two paragraphs. I did not claim that paragraph 82 corresponded in every respect with paragraph 81.

Mr. THOMAS. I understood the Senator to say that semiporcelain earthenware might be included in the classification of paragraph 82 because of the Senate amendment. I do not see how it is possible, as these wares are composed of nonabsorbent bodies, while semiporcelains are composed of absorbent bodies.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The best information I have is that practically all wares in common use by the ordinary people of the country are nonabsorbent wares and that they would all bear under the Senate amendment a rate of 50 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be. Of course, I am not conversant with the proposition.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in paragraph 83, page 22, line 15, after the word "carbon," to insert "and manufactures of carbon not specially provided for in this section," so as to make the paragraph read:

83. Earthy or mineral substances wholly or partially manufactured and articles and wares composed wholly or in chief value of earthy or mineral substances, not specially provided for in this section, whether susceptible of decoration or not, if not decorated in any manner, 20 per cent ad valorem; if decorated, 25 per cent ad valorem; unmanufactured carbon, not specially provided for in this section, 15 per cent ad valorem; electrodes for electric furnaces, electrolytic and battery purposes, brushes, plates, and disks, all the foregoing composed wholly or in chief value of carbon, and manufactures of carbon not specially provided for in this section, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will ask to have paragraph 83 passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator desires that the paragraph go over without agreeing to the amendment or that the amendment shall be first agreed to?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not wish to oppose any agreement to the amendment being disposed of at this time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paragraph as amended will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in paragraph 84, page 22, line 23, after the word "feet," to insert "carbons for flaming arc lamps, not specially provided for, and," so as to make the paragraph read:

84. Gas retorts, 10 per cent ad valorem; fava tips for burners, 15 per cent ad valorem; carbons for electric lighting, wholly or partly finished, made entirely from petroleum coke, 15 cents per hundred feet; if composed chiefly of lampblack or retort carbon, 40 cents per hundred feet; carbons for flaming arc lamps, not specially provided for, and filter tubes, 30 per cent ad valorem; porous carbon pots for electric batteries, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have paragraph 84 passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the paragraph as amended will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in paragraph 85, page 23, line 6, after the word "merchandise," to insert "exclusive of those containing quicksilver," so as to make the paragraph read:

85. Plain green or colored, molded or pressed, and flint, lime, or lead glass bottles, vials, jars, and covered and uncovered demijohns, and carboys, any of the foregoing, filled or unfilled, not otherwise specially provided for in this section, and whether their contents be dutiable or free (except such as contain merchandise, exclusive of those containing quicksilver, subject to an ad valorem rate of duty, or to a rate of duty based in whole or in part upon the value thereof which shall be dutiable at the rate applicable to their contents), 30 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That the terms bottles, vials, jars, demijohns, and carboys, as used herein, shall be restricted to such articles when suitable for use as and of the character ordinarily employed as containers for the holding or transportation of merchandise, and not as appliances or implements in chemical or other operations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the reason those words are proposed to be inserted is that quicksilver in flasks will be taken care of in paragraph 161.

Mr. THOMAS. That is it precisely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read paragraph 86, as follows:

86. Glass bottles, decanters, and all articles of every description composed wholly or in chief value of glass, ornamented or decorated in any manner, or cut, engraved, painted, decorated, ornamented, colored, stained, silvered, gilded, etched, sand blasted, frosted, or printed in any manner, or ground (except such grinding as is necessary for fitting stoppers or for purposes other than ornamentation), and all articles of every description, including bottles and bottle glassware, composed wholly or in chief value of glass blown either in a mold or otherwise; all of the foregoing, not specially provided for in this section, filled or unfilled, and whether their contents be dutiable or free, 45 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That for the purposes of this act, bottles with cut-glass stoppers shall, with the stoppers, be deemed entireties.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I desire to propose to this paragraph. It applies entirely to the language and not to the rate. I will offer the amendment and ask that the paragraph go over, in order to allow the Senator in charge of the bill and the Committee on Finance to study the matter and see if they can not bring themselves to agree to the terms of the amendment. The object of the amendment is simply to make more certain the intent of the bill. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend paragraph 86 as follows:

On page 23, line 25, after the word "glassware," insert "goblets and other glass stem ware"; on page 23, line 25, strike out the words "chief value" and insert in lieu thereof the word "part"; and on page 23, line 25, after the word "blown," insert a comma and the words "cast or pressed."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. OLIVER. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to say a word in explanation of the amendment. I will state that I am not offering an amendment to the rates, not that the manufacturers of table glassware are satisfied with the rates mentioned, but I do not propose to take up time in offering amendments which I do not believe will meet with the approval of the committee or with a majority of the Senate. The phraseology of this paragraph is, however, faulty. I really think that if the Senator in charge of the bill will allow me to talk to him for a few moments I can convince him to that effect and that he will agree to this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's purpose is to perfect the paragraph?

Mr. OLIVER. It is solely to perfect the paragraph.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think there is a general feeling among glassworkers—certainly among those in Massachusetts—that the reduction which is proposed in this paragraph will bring about a reduction of wages. I am not sufficiently familiar with the matter to demonstrate that fact, but I want to put in the RECORD the opinion of a labor organization, the American Flint Glass Workers' Union, No. 113, of New Bedford, Mass., to the effect that the reduction in the tariff will have a tendency to reduce the wages of glassworkers. They make a protest against the reduction which is contemplated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether he desires to have the document to which he refers printed?

Mr. WEEKS. I offer no amendment, Mr. President. I wanted to get the expression printed; that is all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rose to prefer a request that this paragraph, 86, might be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in paragraph 87, page 24, line 7, after the word "Unpolished," to strike out the comma; and in line 8, after the word "glass," to strike out the words "not exceeding 150 square inches, ⅞ of 1 cent per pound; above that, and," so as to make the paragraph read:

87. Unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window glass, not exceeding 384 square inches, 1 cent per pound; above that, and not exceeding 720 square inches, 1¼ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 1,200 square inches, 1½ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 2,400 square inches, 1¾ cents per pound; above that, 2 cents per pound: Provided, That unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window glass, imported in boxes, shall contain 50 square feet, as nearly as sizes will permit, and the duty shall be computed thereon according to the actual weight of glass.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think that paragraph ought to be recast, and I am sure, upon a moment's reflection, that it will be apparent to the committee that it ought to be revised. The present classification begins with "crown and common window glass, not exceeding 150 square inches." This bill, through the amendment which is proposed, extends that classification to take in all such glass, not exceeding 384 square inches, and the duty which is proposed is 1 cent per pound. I can not understand why our Democratic friends propose a duty of 1 cent a pound upon such a classification as this. The Tariff Handbook, before us, furnished for our information, shows that last year the average value of the glass here described, not exceeding 150 square inches, was 1.4 cents per pound. It is provided here that the duty upon that glass shall be 1 cent per pound, or 71 per cent of the foreign value. I see the handbook declares that it is 73.53 per cent. Why in the world do you propose to put a duty of 73.53 per cent upon this small window glass, glass that is a little more than 12 inches each way, the glass which ought to be the cheapest of all the glass in the market? I do not believe that there is any such difference in the cost of production of that kind of glass here and abroad as to warrant a duty of 73 per cent. The highest value of the glass imported under this whole bracket or classification, I believe, is 3.1 cents per pound; and even upon that the duty of 1 cent per pound would be more than 33⅓ per cent.

It is manifest that there is no reason for enlarging this bracket and taking in all the glass up to 384 square inches. Even from the standpoint of the protectionist the duty is altogether too high, and from the standpoint of the revenue man it can not be defended at all; and so I must think that it has been an error on the part of the committee.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will not adopt this amendment, but will preserve the classification of the House, which did limit at least the first bracket to glass not exceeding 150 square inches with a duty of seven-eighths of a cent a pound. In my opinion, one-half a cent a pound would be abundant.

I grant you that it is a considerable reduction as compared with the present law; but while there are some duties upon glass in the present law that are not too high, there are many duties, as we demonstrated in the debate of 1909, that are very greatly in excess of the needs of protection.

Now, I should like to know from the Senator from Missouri why he wants to put a duty of 73 per cent on this small glass? If there is any reason, of course I will yield my contest against it at once. I await his reply.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator repeat his question; I did not hear what he said.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri did not hear me, I despair of making him hear me, because I was using a reasonably loud tone of voice. Does the Senator from Missouri refer to any particular part of what I said?

Mr. STONE. I understood the Senator to ask a question. I was engaged here at the moment, and I did not understand what the question was.

Mr. CUMMINS. I asked the Senator from Missouri why he was desirous of imposing a duty of more than 73 per cent upon the small-sized, plain, common window glass?

Mr. STONE. I will say, Mr. President, as to the particular bracket to which the Senator refers and the class of glass to which he refers——

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not hear the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. The class of glass to which the Senator refers is embraced in the tables in brackets 1 and 2. Practically none of that glass used in this country is of domestic production, almost all of it being imported. It is not, in fact, used as a window glass, but——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, of course there is practically none of it imported because the duty upon it is prohibitive, and this duty will be prohibitive also.

Mr. STONE. This glass is used, as I understand, for pictures and photographic purposes, and is not used for window glass in buildings. It is an imported glass. I will say to the Senator that the manufacturers of glass in different sections of the country who came before the committee stated, as will appear in some of their hearings, that they were indifferent as to what duty might be placed upon glass of this character, for the reason that it was not manufactured in this country for domestic use.

Mr. CUMMINS. What difference does it make what the manufacturers say about it? They are not making this bill; and I am sure the Senator from Missouri will not declare that none of this glass is used, because last year of the glass in this bracket, not exceeding 150 square inches, we imported more than 1,900,000 pounds. Why should we make it expensive to those who have to use it by putting a duty of this kind upon it?

Mr. STONE. What I said to the Senator was that this glass in these sizes is not manufactured in the United States, and I said that the manufacturers who filed briefs, or who were heard by the committee, gave the committee that information, and I think that is correct information. It is imported from Belgium and other foreign countries, but not for window glass, for it is not used as window glass to any considerable extent, and it is not competitive with anything produced in the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not accept the statement of the manufacturer if he declares that it is not used in this country for window glass. It is named "window glass" in the very language of the bill; and the Senator from Missouri does not mean to say that that class of window glass, 10 by 14 or 12 by 14, is not used in this country as window glass. I know by observation that that is not true.

Mr. STONE. I do not know to what extent it is true; but I do know that the information we had before the committee, upon which we rested our belief, was that the window glass of the size described in these brackets was not manufactured in the United States and was not used for window-glass purposes unless to a very limited extent. While the Senator says that he would not take the opinion of the manufacturers as to that, I give a good deal of credence to it for this reason, if for no other——

Mr. CUMMINS. I would take the statement of a manufacturer as to a fact, but I would not take his statement as to what duty ought to be put upon an article.

Mr. STONE. No manufacturer ever suggested a duty on this particular description of glass. On the contrary, those who conferred about it with me or with the committee stated that they were absolutely indifferent about the duty on that commodity.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, I am sure the Senator from Missouri, if they are indifferent about it, will be willing to reduce the duty at least to about 40 per cent.

Mr. STONE. I am not willing to reduce it.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Missouri is talking about one kind of glass and the Senator from Iowa about another. The Senator from Iowa calls attention to the first item, which is unpolished window glass not exceeding 150 square inches, valued at not more than 1½ cents per pound. The equivalent ad valorem rate on that glass is 73.53 per cent. The next bracket refers to the same sized glass valued at more than 1½ cents per pound. That is the glass about which the Senator from Missouri is talking. The equivalent ad valorem rate on that is 28.57 per cent. That is the kind of glass which is used in framing pictures and in photographic work. The Senator from Iowa is correct in saying that glass not exceeding 150 square inches and valued at not more than 1½ cents per pound, in the bill as reported by the committee, carries an equivalent ad valorem duty of 73.53 per cent. Very little of it is imported into this country, but it is made in this country.

Mr. STONE. Well, the Senator from Utah, as usual, makes his statement in a somewhat dogmatic form.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not intend to do so, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. He usually depends upon what the manufacturers tell him and quotes from them——

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. STONE. Very largely so; and quotes from them more than any other Senator here, or as much as any other Senator here. Now, he seeks to discredit what they say with respect to it. I should think that the men who make glass in this country would have some notion as to the uses to which glass is applied.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not disagree with me in this matter, as he will see if he will look at the bill as reported. I am perfectly aware that the glass costing over 1½ cents a pound is used in picture framing and photographic work, and of that kind of glass there are great importations—in fact, there were 15,632,000 pounds imported in 1912—but the glass about which the Senator from Iowa is talking is glass that is valued under a cent and a half a pound. The importations of that kind of glass are very small, and it is nearly all made in this country. The equivalent ad valorem at a cent a pound is 73.53 per cent, as the Senator from Iowa has stated.

I am not disputing the statement made by the Senator from Missouri that the glass under the second bracket, valued at over 1½ cents a pound, is largely imported and is not made in this country to any considerable extent. The equivalent ad valorem on that glass is only 28 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope that I may be able to continue my discussion with the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from Utah has very kindly interpreted what I said and has interpreted it correctly. I have been speaking about that kind of glass upon which there is a duty placed of 1 cent per pound, which amounts to 73 per cent of its value. I thought I made that perfectly clear to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I know what the Senator said, but I do not think he is correct in his statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. In what respect am I wrong?

Mr. STONE. And I do not think the Senator from Utah is correct in his statement of fact. The House committee combined the first two brackets of the paragraph, as found in the present law, and reduced the rate from 1¼ cents per pound on the small-sized glass and 1⅞ on the larger size, putting both at 1 cent per pound. That is a very material reduction on the existing rate. Inasmuch as we contend that this glass is an imported article, entering but little into competition with the domestic article, after making a reduction such as was made and considering the uses to which it is put, it is an entirely legitimate subject for a good revenue for the Treasury.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri, as it seems to me, attempts to defend an inordinately high duty by referring to the fact that the committee has reduced the duty upon some other article or an article of the same kind of a different class.

I repeat that plain window glass not exceeding 150 square inches in size is manufactured in this country and is used in this country by a great many people. The higher grades of glass that are above 1½ cents a pound in value, I agree, have been mainly imported. I am not dealing with them, however; and if the Senator from Missouri believes we do not manufacture much of this sort of glass and that there is substantially no competition upon it he is greatly in error. I can not think any manufacturer has so declared. If so, my information is altogether wrong.

But, however that may be, even for the sake of a revenue it seems to me we ought not to levy more than 40 or 50 per cent duty upon it. We are using it; every Senator knows we are using it. It is bought by the people who can not afford to buy high-priced glass. Yet we are putting, as we did before—and I am not distinguishing now between the Democratic majority and the former Republican majority—practically a prohibitive duty upon this kind of window glass, and I protest against it.

I did what little I could four years ago to prevent any such duty being imposed upon this article. As it was wrong then, it is wrong now. While the House provision does not entirely meet the demand of the times, it is better than the Senate amendment.

I therefore hope the Senate amendment in this particular will not prevail, because it is an increase over the House provision upon an article in general use—an increase that imposes a duty not required by any theory, principle, or doctrine of taxation.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, there is no doubt whatever that the duties levied upon what is known as ordinary window glass, measured from an ad valorem standard, are rather high, and with very good reason. There is no industry of any magnitude in this country that has been less profitable to its owners during the past 20 years than the manufacture of window glass. The reason for this is, in the first place, that it must be made by workers of great skill, and it is made in competition with a country where skilled workers can be obtained at less wages than in any other country in the civilized world except in the Far East. Belgium secures work involving skill at less wages than any other country in Europe, and it is a country that is keen to find a market for its goods. For that reason, if this glass is to be made in America and not in Belgium, it is absolutely necessary that what might appear to be a high duty shall be imposed upon it.

Pittsburgh was formerly the seat of most of the window-glass manufacture of the country. There is comparatively little of it made in the Pittsburgh district now; but it is made generally throughout the Middle West. There are factories in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and quite a number in Kansas. It is not a severe tax upon the people or upon the builders of houses. The item of glass is a very inconsiderable item in any house, no matter how large or how small.

When this matter was up for discussion four years ago I had before me the plans of a house which had been built the year before in the city of Pittsburgh, the contract price of which was $4,200. All of the glass for that house was furnished delivered at the house for between $11 and $12. I make bold to say that if the glass had been imported under free-trade conditions the owner of the house never would have gotten it for so low a price as that.

Mr. President, I do not desire to take up time with the discussion of these matters. I do not think the duties provided in this paragraph are high enough. I have an amendment here I wish to offer, which I will ask the Secretary to read, and then I shall be willing to let the matter go to a vote without debate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Pennsylvania takes his seat, while I understand he believes this duty ought to be where it is or even higher——

Mr. OLIVER. Higher.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask him whether he perceives any justification for putting upon the glass included in the first bracket glass not exceeding 150 square inches, valued at not more than 1½ cents a pound, a duty of 73 per cent, more than upon the glass included in the next bracket of the same size, but valued at more than 1½ cents a pound, which carries a duty of 28 per cent; or more than upon glass included in the next bracket, which is glass above 150 square inches, but not worth more than 1⅞ cents a pound, upon which a duty of 56.6 per cent is imposed; then dropping down on the next bracket to 32 per cent; then up on the next bracket again to 56.25 per cent? I ask whether he knows of any need of the trade or of the manufacturer that requires that discrimination or classification?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I am not standing here in defense of this bill. I think all of these duties ought to be higher. As far as the inconsistencies in the bill are concerned, I leave it to the Senators in charge to explain them. I do not propose to do it.

I ask for the reading of the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, is it true that the amendment of the committee is now pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know whether the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is an amendment of the committee amendment or not.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not well versed in parliamentary procedure, but my amendment proposes to change all of the duties in the paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Chair rules that the committee has the right to perfect the paragraph before other amendments are offered.

Mr. OLIVER. I am perfectly willing to have my amendment voted upon later.

Mr. STONE. Let us have a vote on the committee amendment now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee in lines 8 and 9, page 24.

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been called for and ordered.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. STONE. I was going to make the point of no quorum, so that we might have a quorum present at the time the vote is taken.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will wait until the roll is called before I make the remarks I desire to make upon this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Gore	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Gronna	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.
Bradley	Hitchcock	Oliver	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Hollis	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Hughes	Page	Smoot
Bristow	James	Penrose	Stone
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Swanson
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Pittman	Thomas
Catron	Jones	Poindexter	Thompson
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thornton
Chilton	Kern	Ransdell	Tillman
Clapp	La Follette	Reed	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Robinson	Walsh
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Sheppard	Weeks
Crawford	Lewis	Sherman	Williams
Cummins	Lodge	Shields
Dillingham	McLean	Shively
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN (at 3.17 p. m.). Mr. President, owing to the severe thunderstorm, which makes it impossible for Senators to be heard, I move that the Senate take a recess for 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate took a recess for 15 minutes; and at the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to paragraph 87.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like the attention, if I can have it, of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I listened with great interest to the discussion between the Senator from Iowa and the Senators from Missouri and Pennsylvania. The Senator from Missouri, if I understood him correctly, said that the duty in the first bracket on common window glass, unpolished, not exceeding 150 square inches, was levied for revenue and that there was very little of it manufactured in this country.

As I understand it, those are the small panes of window glass that are in common use, and we imported only 497,000 pounds in 1912. It seems to me that the importations must be very small. The duty under the present law, the Senator will observe, is 1¼ cents per pound, or approximately 92 per cent ad valorem. The House reduced that to seven-eighths of a cent a pound, or approximately 64 per cent ad valorem. The Senate committee increases it to 1 cent a pound over the House rate, or 73 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would be sorry if the Senator from Kansas were misled by anything that I have said. Therefore I want to call his attention to the fact that the bracket which he is now mentioning is not the entire bracket covered by the 1-cent-a-pound duty. It is limited to glass 150 square inches or less, valued at not more than 1½ cents per pound. Another glass of the same size valued at more than 1½ cents a pound is found in the next bracket, where the duty retained by the Senate committee is only 28 plus.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; I understand. But I was going to inquire why the committee found it necessary to increase the duty on these small panes of glass while it did not increase the duty on the larger panes of glass found in the third bracket. The Senator will observe that in the third bracket under the present law the equivalent ad valorem is 96 per cent, while the House reduced it to 56 per cent and the Senate committee leaves it at that amount.

Going on down to the fifth bracket, where panes of glass contain 720 inches, the equivalent ad valorem is now 117 per cent. That is reduced by the House to 56 per cent, and the Senate committee leaves that at 56 per cent, being quite a radical reduction.

In view of the fact that the duties on the large panes are radically reduced I would like to know why the Senate committee increased the duty on the small panes. The Senator can not say that it is for revenue, because the revenue collected in 1912 on the importations of this bracket amounted to only a little over $6,000, and the estimate of the Senate committee is for revenue only $5,000. I have not been able to find out the basis upon which this increase is made.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the attitude of our friends on the other side is a rather strange one. Some of them complain that the reduction is too great, and some of them complain that it is not great enough. I understand the Senator from Kansas to insist that the reduction in the smaller sizes, the rates fixed in brackets 1 and 2, are too high, while in brackets 3 and 4 they are not high enough.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; my complaint was that the duties in bracket 1 are too high. The duties in bracket 2 seem to be reasonable. It is an approximate rate of 28 per cent. That is on the larger sizes.

Mr. STONE. No; brackets 1 and 2 are the same sizes.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is a higher priced glass of the same size.

Mr. STONE. They differ in price and value.

Mr. BRISTOW. I stand corrected as to the higher priced glasses.

Mr. STONE. The Senator then complains that the rate fixed in bracket 1 is too high?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. STONE. What does he say of bracket 2?

Mr. BRISTOW. The rate in bracket 2 seems to be very reasonable. It is only 28 per cent on the value.

Mr. STONE. It is the same rate per pound. What does the Senator say about brackets 3 and 4?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is 56 per cent in one instance and 32 per cent in the other. A reduction from 96 per cent to 56 per cent seems to be a pretty substantial reduction.

Mr. STONE. Then the Senator's complaint is confined to bracket 1?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; that is what I am complaining of now.

Mr. STONE. If we should reduce it to half a cent a pound, the Senator from Kansas would be satisfied?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think that half a cent a pound would be very much better than it is.

Mr. STONE. What about the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BRISTOW. That is for the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Pennsylvania to settle between themselves. They seem to be in accord on this proposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. STONE. He said it is too low now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Missouri listen to me for a moment?

Mr. STONE. Always.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the amendment proposed by the committee will not be adopted. If it is not adopted, I intend to offer an amendment reducing the rate on glass not exceeding 150 square inches and worth not more than a cent and a half a pound to one-half a cent per pound.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator will admit there is no value classification given here now.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not hear the Senator.

Mr. HUGHES. There is no value classification in the proposed bill. Consequently the Senator's amendment would not be germane as he states it. It would not harmonize with the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; but I intend to offer a value classification.

Mr. HUGHES. I see.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that you can fairly attach a duty measuring it only by the pound when it is well known that the glass is of so greatly different value. That is evident here. We have two brackets of the same size of glass. Under one, I think, the importations were valued at 1.4 cents per pound and under the other at more than 3 cents per pound. It is obvious that a duty of a cent a pound or any absolute sum per pound can not do justice to those two different kinds of glasses.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator suggests offering an amendment preserving the old value classification with reference to this commodity. I am not asking the Senator a question; I am simply making a statement with reference to this item. He suggests offering an amendment which will preserve in part a low value classification. Both the House committee and the Senate committee decided after full investigation that that sort of a classification is absolutely impossible.

I suppose this glass paragraph is one of the most difficult paragraphs in the whole bill. Under the old law, where there was a value classification, the testimony and the Treasury figures developed the fact that glass in this country was often sold for less than the face of the duty. A most peculiar competitive condition exists in the glass industry in this country now. Right at this time there is being installed a new glass-making machine which, so far as it has been installed, has absolutely revolutionized the whole glass-making industry. The value classification that the Senator suggests even now with the progress that has been made in the installation of this machinery would become absolutely worthless.

I wish to call the Senator's attention to this fact. These great variations between the equivalent ad valorems are misleading. You will notice that both the House and the Senate committees made very slight and gradual increases as they went along on the higher priced glasses in the specific duties. It is misleading to attempt to compare the equivalent ad valorem. You only get a fair knowledge of what both committees were trying to do when you look at the specific rates themselves, because there is no relation between the value of the glass and the price at which it is sold.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Jersey why he did not pursue the general policy of the bill and attach an ad valorem duty to glass?

Mr. HUGHES. For the reason that we discovered that a great deal of the glass that falls under this first bracket is a by-product of the manufacture of other glasses, and, as in many other paragraphs in the bill, we found it almost impossible to ascertain the value, because this production is incident to the production of something else. A ridiculously high ad valorem rate would have to be laid upon the commodity in order to collect any duty at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume the Senator from New Jersey hardly means a by-product. What he means is that the manufacturers of other glasses find some pieces broken, and they are cut into smaller sizes.

Mr. HUGHES. Exactly. Great quantities of this glass are produced undesignedly, the manufacturer having something totally different in mind. This glass is on his hands and on the hands of the foreign manufacturer, too, and under an ad valorem rate it would be sent here in great quantities at very, very low values.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from New Jersey has said—and I am sure he is right upon that—that hitherto there has been a great deal of glass sold in the United States for less than the duty imposed upon it. Now, does not the Senator know that some four years ago, I think shortly after the passage of the Payne-Aldrich bill, there was a trust organized in the window-glass business?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. And it succeeded in putting up the price very greatly?

Mr. HUGHES. I used to be under the impression that the American Plate Glass Co. absolutely dominated the market, made a world of money, and had a very pleasant time generally.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator know——

Mr. HUGHES. But the information I received was that the American Plate Glass Co., over a very extended period of time, and the other American glassmakers in this country, habitually sold the product for less than it cost them to make it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. Then we come to the making of this bill. You find a condition which you want to change. You change it by leaving a duty of 73 per cent on common window glass not more than 150 inches square. Does the Senator from New Jersey assert that there is no way in which justice can be reached concerning that commodity?

Mr. HUGHES. The difficulty is, the Senator and I will never get together if he keeps talking about ad valorem rates and I am speaking about specific rates of duty. I think there ought to be a small specific duty on this glass for this reason: One of the biggest concerns in this country which makes it has a factory in Belgium. There is no doubt that glass can be made in Belgium more cheaply and more profitably and better, I think, than it can be made anywhere else in the world. The reason for that is that the glass manufacturers of Belgium have tremendous natural advantages. Of course, as the Senator knows, we did not go into the writing of this bill with the object of making a free-trade bill. As has often been said here, we were confronted by certain conditions.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the House put a duty of seven-eighths of a cent a pound upon glass not exceeding 150 square inches. What was wrong with that provision?

Mr. HUGHES. In the opinion of the committee it simply gave an additional advantage for the disposition of what is largely a by-product to a foreign——

Mr. CUMMINS. An advantage to whom?

Mr. HUGHES. To a foreign manufacturer. I was coming to that. One of the biggest concerns in this country has already established a factory in Belgium.

Mr. CUMMINS. How can a duty of seven-eighths of a cent a pound on glass of this size give a greater advantage to a foreign manufacturer than a duty of 1 cent a pound upon it?

Mr. HUGHES. I am trying to get to the point, if the Senator will permit me. Take the case of an American manufacturer who has a market in this country and selling agencies and means of distribution for this particular product and has also a large factory abroad. It was pointed out to me, I know—I do not know whether it affected the other members of the committee or not—it was pointed out to me by certain independent manufacturers in this country that an extremely low rate of duty would simply enable this American manufacturer to bring in the by-product of that factory and close his factory here or change its method of operation, and that the Government would simply lose that amount in revenue.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then the substance of all that is that the duty was raised to 1 cent a pound in order to protect the domestic manufacturers of this sort of glass. What I say is that that is too much protection.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator says it is too much protection because there is an equivalent ad valorem of 74 per cent, but the equivalent ad valorem is obtained by taking the price of glass, which is the most unfixed and variable proposition that I know of, and comparing it with these specific rates of duty, and it is absolutely and altogether misleading, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree to that. I agree that when you turn ad valorem duties into specific duties and separate the commodities into classes or brackets the lower-priced commodities will appear to have tremendous rates of duty.

Mr. HUGHES. Tremendous rates of duty.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is undoubtedly true. Therefore the bracket ought to be divided so that this range would be as small as possible.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that it is impossible to do it with a value classification, because the value of glass fluctuates to such an extent that that classification is really valueless. It is a difficult proposition. I do not mean to say that we have it exactly right, but we did the best we could with the information we had at hand. We started at this rate and we went up gradually and slowly and in an orderly way, increasing the specifics, knowing, of course, that any Senator could take a specific rate and change it to an ad valorem rate and show great variations in the different brackets. But that is caused, not by the rates that we propose to lay in this bill, but by the fluctuations of the glass market, the exigencies of the business, and the attempt on the part of this or that crowd to control the market at a particular time.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey alluded to an American manufacturer who has a factory in Belgium. I am inclined to think that he is mistaken with regard to that having any application to this paragraph. I presume the manufacturer to whom he alludes is the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co.

Mr. HUGHES. I think so. I know the representative told me himself——

Mr. OLIVER. The Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. does not make any of this kind of glass.

Mr. HUGHES. They would be bound to make it in the manufacture of other glass.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg pardon. Plate glass is an entirely different commodity from what is known as window glass.

Mr. HUGHES. My recollection is that he made that very point, and I asked him that question.

Mr. OLIVER. But I think it is with regard to a subsequent paragraph treating of plate glass and not with regard to this paragraph.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, Senators on the other side are not able to agree as to this rate of duty. Every day we hear complaints from that side that we want to ruin the country by having duties too low. Now, when we find some of them complaining that the duties are too high and that they ought to be reduced in the public interest, I feel very much inclined to give consideration to that remarkable expression of opinion. It may be we can reduce this rate somewhat. I do not say that it can be done or should be done; but since so many Senators on the other side think we have placed the rate too high, I will ask that the order for the yeas and nays be vacated and that the paragraph be passed over, and we will take it up and see if we can not accommodate our friends on the other side by a lower duty.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is very agreeable to me. I do not speak for any of my associates upon this side. I am sincere in the belief that the first bracket in this paragraph ought to be reduced below the rate named in the bill.

Mr. STONE. I understand the Senator's attitude. I am so much gratified at the disposition to lower duties that I will ask that the paragraph be passed over that the committee may look into it again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn, and the paragraph will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was continued as follows:

88. Cylinder and crown glass, polished, not exceeding 384 square inches, 3 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 720 square inches, 4 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 1,440 square inches, 7 cents per square foot; above that, 10 cents per square foot.

89. Fluted, rolled, ribbed, or rough plate glass, or the same containing a wire netting within itself, not including crown, cylinder, or common window glass, not exceeding 384 square inches, ½ cent per square foot; all above that, 1 cent per square foot; and all fluted, rolled, ribbed, or rough plate glass, weighing over 100 pounds per 100 square feet, shall pay an additional duty on the excess at the same rates herein imposed: Provided, That all of the above plate glass, when ground, smoothed, or otherwise obscured, shall be subject to the same rate of duty as cast polished plate glass unsilvered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that paragraph passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be passed over.

The Secretary read paragraph 90, as follows:

90. Cast polished plate glass, finished or unfinished and unsilvered, or the same containing a wire netting within itself, not exceeding 384 square inches, 6 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 720 square inches, 8 cents per square foot; all above that, 12 cents per square foot.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that that paragraph be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paragraph goes over on the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary read paragraph 91, as follows:

91. Cast polished plate glass, silvered, cylinder and crown glass, silvered, and looking-glass plates exceeding in size 144 square inches, shall be subject to a duty of 1 cent per square foot in addition to the rates otherwise chargeable on such glass unsilvered: Provided, That no looking-glass plates or glass silvered, when framed, shall pay a less rate of duty than that imposed upon similar glass of like description not framed, but shall pay in addition thereto upon such frames the rate of duty applicable thereto when imported separate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask that paragraph 91 be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read paragraphs 92 and 93, as follows:

92. Cast polished plate glass, silvered or unsilvered, and cylinder, crown, or common window glass, silvered or unsilvered, polished or unpolished, when bent, ground, obscured, frosted, sanded, enameled, beveled, etched, embossed, engraved, flashed, stained, colored, painted, ornamented, or decorated, shall be subject to a duty of 4 per cent ad valorem in addition to the rates otherwise chargeable thereon.

93. Spectacles, eyeglasses, and goggles, and frames for the same, or parts thereof, finished or unfinished, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on paragraph 93 and the succeeding paragraph I merely desire to say that the reductions which have been made are extremely serious, if not disastrous, to these industries. The cost of production of spectacles, optical instruments, and so on, as anyone will readily find, is chiefly labor. The raw material is not an expensive part of the cost. The labor costs are very much greater, from two to four times greater, in this country than they are among our competitors. I do not care to argue the matter at any length, but I ask leave to submit and have printed as a part of my remarks a letter from a constituent of mine, a very large maker of these articles, at Southbridge, Mass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission to do so is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS., U. S. A., May 21, 1913.

OPTICAL GOODS.

(House bill 3321, Schedule B, pars. 93, 94, and 95.)

Hon. HENRY C. LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have before us statements recently submitted to you by the United States Lens Co., the Tilton Optical Co., and the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. in connection with these goods, and desire not only to record our concurrence in the truth and importance of these statements bearing on the tariff question, but to emphasize the fact that the proposed reduction will seriously injure a legitimate business without benefit to the consumer.

The consumer will not benefit by a reduction in the tariff rates, because the cost of the article itself is included in a much greater charge for professional services and is almost negligible. A difference of $1 a dozen would not show in the charge to the consumer, but would be extremely injurious to the manufacturer and the workman.

The workman and the manufacturer will be seriously injured, the reason being that the product as made in this country is from 70 to 85 per cent labor, and our labor cost is from two to four times greater than the labor cost abroad (Germany and France). Under the present rates the tariff is no more than competitive, and surely under these circumstances a one-third reduction in the tariff would be unwise and unsafe.

PERFECTION DEPENDS ON THE PERSONAL TRAINING OF THE WORKMAN.

The nature of eyeglasses and spectacles is such as to require the most delicate and accurate treatment, error being detrimental to the consumer. We know of no other industry where poor work on the part of the workman will show more quickly and be more injurious to the general public than in the preparation of accessories in the aid of eyesight. Commercial efficiency, furthermore, is obtained only by long years of careful training of the workman, years of patient care and endeavor to reduce the waste within practicable limits and secure the high grade of product manufactured.

If the industry were injured, it would take years to recover and the magnificent scientific progress of the art, which is tending to the betterment of the health and welfare of the consumer generally and fostered by wise and stringent optometry laws, would be stayed if not destroyed.

PRESENT PROGRESS HAS BEEN MADE WITHOUT INCREASED COST TO CONSUMER.

Owing to the activity and research of our oculists and optometrists the scientific requirements have increased, with a consequent increase in cost of production. Wages and raw materials also in our art, as well as in others, have generally increased in the last few years; but in spite of the increase in scientific requirements and in wages the consumer is getting better goods than ever before without increased cost to himself; and this is solely due to the fact that competition has kept well apace, if not ahead, trade conditions being healthy and prices to the trade strictly regulated by open, well-developed competition.

PRESENT-DAY CONDITIONS ARE NOT THOSE OF YEARS AGO.

It would be impossible to build up a successful going plant to-day under the triple burden of high and increasing scientific requirements, high and increasing wages, and a reduced tariff, in view of the highly developed domestic competition now existing. A careful study of the experience of the present manufacturers will demonstrate this fact, and it is therefore earnestly hoped that the present rates will be retained, for it will not only benefit the workman and his employer, but will also benefit the general public.

Respectfully submitted.

AMERICAN OPTICAL CO.,
C. M. WELLS, President.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not, of course, know what the Senator from Massachusetts has asked to have printed, and I have no wish to have it read; but I wish to be informed about it.

Mr. LODGE. It is merely a letter setting forth in detail the points which I myself have briefly made as to labor costs, as to competition, and the general character of the industry. The letter comprises only a page and a half; it is a mere discussion of the rates of duty; that is all.

Mr. STONE. Very well.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to add a word to what has been said by my colleague [Mr. LODGE] in connection with this subject. This is one of the industries which has been built up in the United States, not so much as a result of the duty imposed as on account of the excellence of the product and the development of machinery in connection with the industry. Our manufacturers for the last 20 or 25 years have been in advance of the rest of the world in that respect. They have been closely followed and copied from time to time. Foreign manufacturers have agents in this country who are trying at all times to copy or to conform to the methods which have been in use here.

The duty of 50 per cent which has hitherto prevailed has probably not had a great influence in developing the industry, and if conditions in the future were to be what they have been in the past a reduction to 35 per cent might not materially injure the industry; but conditions have so changed that now our foreign competitors have reached a point where they can manufacture as cheaply and develop a product as good as that manufactured in this country.

The rate of duty is an extremely small item in the total cost of an eyeglass. If a person goes to an oculist, pays three or four or five dollars for his opinion, and then goes to the dealer in eyeglasses, the price of the glass depends very largely on the personal service performed by the dealer rather than the value of the glass. For instance, the glass which I have in my hand [exhibiting] would probably be sold by the manufacturers for not more than $3 a dozen, or 25 cents a pair, and yet the total cost to myself, including the fee to the oculist, was $7.50.

I want to give two or three of these figures, because they illustrate what a small item the duty is in the total cost. The duty under the prevailing law on glasses that cost 40 cents a dozen is 26 cents a dozen; on glasses that cost $1.50 a dozen, it is 75 cents a dozen; the duty on glasses that cost $3 a dozen is $1.50 a dozen. The reduction proposed would make the duty, instead of 26 cents a dozen, 14 cents a dozen; the duty proposed, instead of 75 cents on the next grade, would be 32 cents; on the next grade, instead of being $1.50 a dozen, it would be $1.05 a dozen. In the lowest grade it would be a difference of 1 cent a pair; on the next grade it would be a difference of 2 cents a pair; and on the next grade it would be a difference of 4 cents a pair.

Nobody can contend that that is going to have a great influence in affecting the price to the consumer when the cost of his glasses has been several dollars paid either to the oculist or to the dealer in glasses.

But the point I wish to make, Mr. President, is that the industry abroad has reached a state of perfection equal to that in this country, and we take great chances when we reduce duties under these circumstances, duties which are not burdensome on the consumer in this country under present conditions, and in cases where we make a reduction which is not going to bring any compensating advantage to the consumer. Nobody can tell just what the result will be in this case. It may not make any material difference for the time being, but it is opening the door to the possibilities of a serious change.

This industry has been developed after long experience and is an expensive industry to develop, because every workman engaged in it has to go through a long course of training in order to reach a stage of perfection which enables our manufacturers to put out the quality of product which they have done. Therefore I think it is inadvisable to make any change in a schedule of this kind which is not going to bring any advantage to anybody and which may be of serious disadvantage to every manufacturer and every workman engaged in it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move to amend paragraph 93 by striking out "35" and inserting "45." I do not believe in the ad valorem system, but that is the nearest I can bring it——

Mr. STONE. The present ad valorem rate is 51 per cent in the brackets.

Mr. LODGE. I want to make it as high on the equivalent as the specific makes it. I will ask to make it 45 per cent. The present duties are specifics and these are ad valorems.

Mr. STONE. The duty was reduced by the House bill from "51" to "42.35" per cent. The fact is that in 1912 there were only sixty-three thousand and odd dollars worth of importations, as against a domestic production in 1910 of $11,734,000 worth. On these optical goods, I think, 35 per cent is certainly enough.

Mr. LODGE. I move to make the rate "45 per cent."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 93, page 26, line 15, before the words "per cent," it is proposed to strike out "35" and to insert "45."

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in paragraph 94, page 26, line 20, after the word "manufactured," to strike out "30 per cent ad valorem" and to insert "strips of glass, not more than 3 inches wide, ground or polished on one or both sides to a cylindrical or prismatic form, including those used in the construction of gauges, and glass slides for magic lanterns, 25 per cent ad valorem," so as to make the paragraph read:

94. Lenses of glass or pebble, molded or pressed, or ground and polished to a spherical, cylindrical, or prismatic form, and ground and polished plano or coquill glasses, wholly or partly manufactured, strips of glass, not more than 3 inches wide, ground or polished on one or both sides to a cylindrical or prismatic form, including those used in the construction of gauges, and glass slides for magic lanterns, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 27, to strike out paragraph 95, as follows:

95. Strips of glass, not more than 3 inches wide, ground or polished on one or both sides to a cylindrical or prismatic form, including those used in the construction of gauges, and glass slides for magic lanterns, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 27, line 6, to change the number of paragraph "96" to "95," in line 6, on the same page, after the word "glasses," to strike out "telescopes, microscopes, photographic and projection lenses, and"; in line 7, after the word "optical," to strike out "and surveying"; in line 8, after the word "frames," to strike out "or" and insert "and"; and in line 10, before the words "per cent," to strike out "30" and insert "35," so as to make the paragraph read:

95. Opera and field glasses, optical instruments and frames and mountings for the same; all the foregoing not specially provided for in this section, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 10, to insert as a new paragraph the following:

96. Surveying instruments, telescopes, microscopes, photographic and projection lenses, and frames and mountings for the same, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read paragraph 97, as follows:

97. Stained or painted glass windows, or parts thereof, and all mirrors, not exceeding in size 144 square inches, with or without frames or cases; incandescent electric-light bulbs and lamps, with or without filaments; and all glass or manufactures of glass or paste or of which glass or paste is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that paragraph passed over for the time being.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in paragraph 98, page 27, line 22, after the word "Fusible," to insert "and glass," so as to make the paragraph read:

98. Fusible and glass enamel, 20 per cent ad valorem; opal or cylinder glass tiles or tiling, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read paragraphs 99 and 100, as follows:

99. Marble, breccia, and onyx, in block, rough or squared only, 50 cents per cubic foot; marble, breccia, and onyx, sawed or dressed, over 2 inches in thickness, 75 cents per cubic foot; slabs or paving tiles of marble or onyx, containing not less than 4 superficial inches, if not more than 1 inch in thickness, 6 cents per superficial foot; if more than 1 inch and not more than 1¼ inches in thickness, 8 cents per superficial foot; if more than 1¼ inches and not more than 2 inches in thickness, 10 cents per superficial foot; if rubbed in whole or in part, 2 cents per superficial foot in addition; mosaic cubes of marble or onyx, not exceeding 2 cubic inches in size, if loose, 20 per cent ad valorem; if attached to paper or other material, 35 per cent ad valorem.

100. Marble, breccia, onyx, alabaster, and jet, wholly or partly manufactured into monuments, benches, vases, and other articles, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, and all articles composed wholly or in chief value of agate, rock crystal, or other semiprecious stones, except such as are cut into shapes and forms fitting them expressly for use in the construction of jewelry, not specially provided for in this section, 45 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BRISTOW subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to ask that paragraph 99 be passed over, because I have observed one or two duties in the paragraph into which I should like to look a little further.

Mr. JAMES. It is impossible to hear what the Senator says.

Mr. BRISTOW. I say I should like to have paragraph 99 go over with the other paragraphs that have gone over, because I desire to look into some of the duties contained in that paragraph.

Mr. JAMES. In regard to surveying instruments?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; in regard to marble, onyx, and surveying slabs.

Mr. STONE. The Senator refers to paragraph 99.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. STONE. We have no objection, of course, if the Senator wishes that paragraph passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to the end of paragraph 101, which is as follows:

101. Freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone, lava, and all other stone suitable for use as monumental or building stone, except marble, breccia, and onyx, not specially provided for in this section, hewn, dressed, or polished, or otherwise manufactured, 25 per cent ad valorem; unmanufactured, or not dressed, hewn, or polished, 3 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the member of the committee having this matter in charge what consideration moved the committee in reducing the rate of duty upon granite from 50 per cent to 25 per cent ad valorem?

Mr. GALLINGER. And the duty on unmanufactured granite from 10 cents to 3 cents per cubic foot?

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator refer to marble?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The paragraph covers freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone, and so forth, but I am asking particularly in relation to granite.

Mr. STONE. That is the rate fixed by the House bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But, perhaps, the committee can tell us upon what ground the reduction was made and what reasons were presented to it in the hearings why the reduction should be made.

Mr. STONE. It was reduced by the House one-half, from 50 per cent to 25 per cent, because the House presumed that the reduction was a proper one in the interest of the consumer and of the revenue.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have examined the House hearings, but have been unable to find that anybody recommended it, excepting Mr. Hanold, who represented the firm of Townsend, Townsend & Co., of 423 West Twenty-first Street, New York City. Mr. Hanold said that, in appearing before the committee, he represented the "National Wholesale Granite Dealers' Association, comprising 18 firms engaged in the business of selling domestic and imported granite monuments at wholesale," and so forth.

If anybody else appeared before either the House or the Senate committee recommending this reduction or giving any reason for it, I should be glad to know who it was.

Mr. STONE. I was just about to say that I do not recall that anyone appeared before the Senate committee in relation to this item; but my attention is now called to the fact that a granite manufacturers' association of Quincy, Mass., filed a brief.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes; but they were opposed to the proposed reduction.

Mr. STONE. Yes; they were opposed to it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Now, I am asking upon what consideration the recommendation was made that the rate be reduced? Who asked for it?

Mr. STONE. Just upon the ground that it was thought that the rate was unnecessarily high and should be reduced. There are practically no importations.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Does the Senator recall anybody except the band of importers in New York represented by Mr. Hanold who recommended the reduction?

Mr. STONE. I know nothing about "the band of importers" of whom the Senator speaks. They did not appear before the Senate committee.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. No; but Mr. Hanold says he represented 18 firms engaged in importing granite.

Mr. STONE. No; I do not know who appeared.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Well, Mr. President, I do not think that anybody else appeared before the House committee demanding a reduction in the rate.

Mr. STONE. I do not think any person interested in quarrying or manufacturing marble or granite appeared before either committee to insist upon a reduction of the duties. I think not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think not, too. No consumer in the United States asked for it, so far as I have been able to find by an examination of the record of the hearings. I do not think that anybody asked for it, except the importing companies in New York, and they recommended that the duty be reduced from 50 per cent to 20 per cent.

Mr. STONE. That may be so, if the Senator please. I do not know.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In connection with this matter I want to call the attention of the Senate——

Mr. STONE. But I can not see how that affects the question of whether the reduction should have been made.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Perhaps I can help the Senator to see that, because I think that a very great injustice has been done in this instance.

Mr. STONE. I am not asking to be helped.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that the granite output of the country that goes into monumental work is disposed of almost entirely by the class of firms that came and asked for this reduction, and they have——

Mr. STONE. Are they importers?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes; they are importers and also dealers in the domestic article.

Mr. STONE. Well, now, will the Senator let me call his attention to the fact at this pertinent point in his statement that I find on looking at the data before me—official statistics—that in 1912 of all the articles mentioned in the paragraph, freestone, granite, and so forth, only $74,991 worth were imported——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I was aware of that fact.

Mr. STONE. While there was a domestic production of these articles in 1911 of $76,966,000.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I was aware of those facts.

Mr. STONE. Then, if the tariff would affect the question of importation of these heavy materials—in other words, if they are likely to be brought in any considerable quantity from abroad, the tariff was prohibitive, and it has been reduced one-half by the House bill. With a domestic production of over $76,000,000 against an importation of $74,000, and with a tariff either prohibitive in itself or which added to the cost of transportation from abroad makes it prohibitive, I rather think the House has not overleaped the bounds of wisdom in making the reduction.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I can not find that either the House or the Senate committee has made any inquiry to ascertain what would be a fair competitive rate of duty upon this article. I would not stand here to ask for a prohibitive duty, but I do think that the duty should be equal to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad; and it is to that question that I desire to address myself to the Senate for a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me just a word?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is aware of the fact that there is the most intense domestic competition in the production of granite. It is produced in several of our New England States and in other parts of the country, and the competition is so keen that there is really very little profit in that industry. I agree with the Senator from Vermont that the reduction proposed to be made is a violent reduction and that it will result in greatly reducing the domestic production and increasing the importations of the product.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I was about to remark, Mr. President, that the class of firms that have come here and asked for this reduction substantially control the granite trade of the United States. I am referring now to the monumental trade, into which granite so largely enters. They employ artists to prepare designs, which are numbered, and every one of these firms has perhaps a hundred or a thousand different designs. They have their subagents all over the United States. Whenever they hear of a death in a family their agent immediately seeks an interview, submits prices upon which they will furnish different styles of monuments composed of this, that, and the other variety of granite, foreign and American. Having secured the contract for a monument, they submit plans and specifications for the same to different producers of granite in Vermont, in New Hampshire, in Maine, and in other parts of the country, and in the competition among the manufacturers for the job they secure the lowest possible price. In that way they have brought about the brisk competition which has been mentioned by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. So that the price of granite monuments is probably as low in this country to-day as it ever can be under the prices which the manufacturers are compelled to pay for wages in that industry. This is shown by the fact that the business is not in the hands of a trust. It is entirely in the hands of individual producers.

I live in the center of the granite industry in Vermont, and it is one of the largest industries of the State. The census reports show there are 51 quarries in operation in Vermont; that 21 of them are controlled by individuals, 12 of them by partnerships, and only 18 by corporations. It will, therefore, be seen that the business is not under the control of any trust nor of any combination whatever, but that it is an individual enterprise in every instance, and the competition that I have mentioned is always maintained.

The cost of producing granite and placing it on the market is almost wholly labor; and that is a matter that ought not to be overlooked. According to the report of the last census the element of labor entering into the cost of finished granite is given as at 80 per cent of the whole.

In the manufacture of granite the hours necessarily have to be short. They are universally eight hours a day for granite cutters. The minimum wage paid there is $3.25, and the daily wage is increased according to the skill of the person employed to $4.50 and in some instances to $5 per day.

Probably 2,000 persons are employed as cutters in this industry. I suppose that in the stone industry of Vermont there are 10,000 persons engaged. They are highly skilled workmen and command a high rate of remuneration. If the American manufacturers, paying these prices for labor, are to be driven into comptition with foreign producers, where, as in Scotland, the average rate of wages is only 15 cents an hour, while with us the minimum rate is $3.25 a day, Senators can see what that competition means.

In Barre, which is in the county where I reside, there are 104 concerns engaged in manufacturing granite, after convering the stock into monuments and selling them in all parts of the United States, largely through the firms in New York to which I have already called attention. In Montpelier there are 21, and in the towns of Hardwick and Bethel there are 74, making 199 in all. The minimum rate of wages paid, as I have stated, is $3.25 a day, or 40⅝ cents per hour, while in Scotland the same work commands only 15 cents an hour, or $1.35 for a nine-hour day.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I assume his figures as to wages in Vermont and Scotland to be correct. I can not assail them, because I do not know where he obtained his data.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I obtained my information to some extent from the census but more largely from inquiry.

Mr. STONE. As to the Scotch rate?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The Scotch rate comes to me from two different sources. I have it from Mr. Wishart, who is the secretary of the Granite Manufacturers' Association at Barre. I find it also given in a brief that has been filed with the committee, to which the Senator has called my attention, by the Quincy (Mass.) Granite Manufacturers' Association. In that brief, which the Senator mentioned a little while ago, they say:

> Monuments are a luxury, and the principal item in the cost of production is labor. We pay our granite cutters and granite polishers a minimum wage of $3.25 per day, many of our workmen getting $4 or $4.50 per day. In Scotland the pay is $1.35 per day. Our workmen have already given warning that as fast as existing agreements expire they will expect and demand a minimum wage of $4 per day. Without a tariff sufficient to offset the difference between what we pay and what is paid in Scotland it means Scotch monuments in our cemeteries instead of native monuments.

Mr. STONE. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am reading from a communication filed with the committee by the Granite Manufacturers' Association of Quincy, Mass., to which the Senator from Missouri called my attention a few moments ago.

Mr. STONE. Very well. It is but natural, and not improper, that manufacturers and others who have interests to promote before Congress should state their case as strongly as possible. They say that they pay some of their workmen as high as $4 a day. Then they give the average of the Scotch rate as $1.35. I should like to know a little more definitely, from less interested concerns, just what the average wage would be in this employment.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think I can speak with authority on that subject. I live in the center of the largest granite industry in the United States. The rate of pay there is fixed by agreement between all of the manufacturers and all of the workmen. It is entered into year by year. The present agreement between them is equivalent to $3.25 a day. The minimum rate is 40⅝ cents per hour. That is the equivalent of $3.25 per day for an eight-hour day. It is the union rate, and they are compelled to pay it. I have neighbors within a stone's throw of my house who are skilled laborers, who get $4 and $4.50 a day for their work.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I chance to live in a city one of the chief industries of which is granite. The granite in the Congressional Library building came from my home town. The granite used in the first story of the Senate Office Building came from my home town. I know that the scale of wages that the Senator from Vermont says is being paid in Vermont is precisely the scale of wages that is being paid in Concord, N. H. It is the union scale.

I have no knowledge as to the rate paid in Scotland, except that it has been stated to me by parties who claim to know that the rate is as the Senator from Vermont has stated.

Mr. STONE. Can the Senator from Vermont tell me the cost of transportation, cutting, and so forth?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The ocean freight rate is low. I will say in reply to the Senator that this Mr. Hanold, representing these importing firms in New York, made a computation, which he filed with the committee, on different classes of monuments, giving the price for which he thought they could be brought into New York under the proposed duty and what would be asked by the American manufacturers, delivered free on board the cars at the quarry, but not in New York. The Granite Manufacturers' Association of Quincy, Mass., have taken that table, and on page 291 of the documents relating to Schedule B, second print, they have compared the figures. They say that taking a monument costing $16 imported from Scotland, as represented by the gentleman to whom I have referred, it would cost $20 to put one of the same character free on board cars at Quincy from Quincy granite; that a monument that would cost $118 imported can not be reproduced in Quincy granite and delivered on the cars at Quincy for less than $134.

That is the statement of the Quincy Manufacturers' Association, which is a very reputable one, as the Senator from New Hampshire will be able to assure you.

I do not want the Senator to understand that I am opposing any reasonable rate of duty, but I insist that in an industry as large as this, one furnishing employment to such a large number of men, and in which 80 per cent of the cost of the product is labor, it is an absolute injustice to the men who have made the necessary investments, it is an absolute injustice to the industry and all who are dependent upon it, to open up competition with Scotland in such a way that wages must necessarily be reduced or the output curtailed. I do not think our friends on the other side want to do that. I do not think they want to make such a record.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Very gladly.

Mr. HUGHES. I am informed that a very great proportion of the granite produced in this country is polished at the various penitentiaries throughout the country. Has the Senator any information as to that?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not think that is the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think there is a foot of it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not a foot of granite produced in Vermont is polished in penitentiaries.

Mr. LODGE. Not a foot of the Massachusetts granite is polished in penitentiaries. Our laws do not permit it.

Mr. HUGHES. Not in Massachusetts, not in my State, not perhaps in the State of Vermont, but in States where under the law convicts are permitted to labor for private contractors.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator please state what State he refers to?

Mr. HUGHES. My information is that in the State of Indiana a great deal of American granite, quite a considerable percentage of the total production, is polished by the convicts in the penitentiaries.

Mr. LODGE. It is rather hard to make Massachusetts and Vermont and New Hampshire all suffer for that.

Mr. HUGHES. I state that only as bearing upon the general labor conditions throughout the country, and as bearing upon the question of the tremendously high rate of wages paid in this industry.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, of course, it does not reduce the rate of wages in the New England States, where we are paying and are compelled to pay union rates.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand that; but the rate of wages in the State of New Hampshire, or any other New England State, is affected, of course, if there is anything in the Senator's argument, by the cost of production by convicts.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator indicate what proportion of the granite that is produced in this country is polished in penitentiaries?

Mr. HUGHES. My information is that it is a very large proportion; but my information is not sufficiently accurate for me to venture a statement as to the proportion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator must be mistaken.

Mr. HUGHES. I will promise to make an investigation and state the result of it to the Senator in due time. I can not do it now.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I move that the figures "25," in line 1, page 29, be stricken out and that "50" be inserted, that being the present rate.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, before that motion is put, I desire to submit a letter on this subject from the board of trade of the city of Quincy, which I should like to have read as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

QUINCY BOARD OF TRADE,
Quincy, Mass., May 15, 1911.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WEEKS: Realizing that any reduction in the duty on granite will be disastrous to our city, it was unanimously voted at a meeting of the Quincy Board of Trade on May 7 to urge upon the Government at Washington that every effort be made to prevent a reduction of that duty.

Upward of $2,000,000 is involved in the granite plants and industry in Quincy. We have 130 firms engaged in that business, employing 1,600 workmen, with an average pay roll of $25,000 weekly.

At the time that the duty on granite was only 30 per cent our stonecutters were walking the streets with nothing to do, and we earnestly hope that such a condition will not be repeated.

Respectfully,

JOHN O. HALL, Secretary.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it will be noticed that as far as the character of the industry is concerned, that statement bears out the statement which has been made by the Senator from Vermont. An industry employing a capital of $2,000,000 has connected with it 127 different firms, and they are all in active competition with one another, so there is not anything resembling in any sense a trust or a combination in the industry.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator one question before he takes his seat. If I heard correctly the reading of the document which was sent to the Secretary's desk, it said that when there was a duty of 30 per cent upon granite the people of that town were walking the streets without employment. What time does that refer to—the time when the Wilson bill was in effect?

Mr. WEEKS. I suppose it refers to the time the Wilson law was in effect. I did not look it up.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Wilson bill duty is 30 per cent, so I suppose it refers to that; but I find that the importations under the Wilson bill were only about $300,000 annually. It does not seem as if importations of $300,000, with the enormous production in this country, would throw everybody out of employment.

Mr. WEEKS. Under the operation of the Wilson bill nobody could buy monuments anywhere; it did not make any difference how cheap they were.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was too expensive to die then.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the old gag that we have heard so frequently that it has lost its force and meaning to intelligent people—not meaning, of course, any reflection.

I want to call the attention of the Senator also to the fact that according to the report of the Geological Survey on "The mineral resources of the United States" for the year 1911 there seem to have been produced in the country 21,391,878 tons of granite, and I find that under the present rate last year there was imported into this country only $140,000 worth of granite.

The present rate would seem to be, speaking relatively, an absolutely prohibitive rate. I hope the Senator is not contending for a prohibitive rate. I hope the Senator is not contending that we ought to have a law with reference to this product of his State, which means that nobody on the outside is to be permitted to import any granite into this country.

That is the present condition. That is practically what the present law means. We are reducing the duty just one-half in the hope that it may bring about some competition.

If the Senator will permit me, I will ask him one other question. From whence does the Senator fear competition in this business?

Mr. WEEKS. I naturally fear competition from the only other point where granite which would enter into competition with our domestic product is mined and perfected, and that is in Scotland. The fact is, Mr. President, that I am quite familiar with the figures which the Senator has read, and it does seem as if there was relatively a prohibitive duty on granite. But the figures which he read need some explanation, because a very large percentage of that granite—quite likely 95 per cent; I do not know just how much—enters into the building trade and not into the trade that is in competition with this trade at all. It is not so much a question of a duty on the raw granite as it is of a duty on the finished product, although both involve a large percentage of labor.

The main point, however, is just what has been so well stated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], that this duty is being reduced 50 per cent without any information whatever being in the hands of the Finance Committee. There is no demand from anybody to reduce it 50 per cent or 40 per cent of 25 per cent. It is possible that if the subject were investigated it might be demonstrated that a reduction of 10 or 15 or 20 per cent might be made and increase foreign competition. There is ample domestic competition now. But no investigation has been made. Simply an arbitrary reduction of 50 per cent has been made, and it may be seriously damaging to an important industry.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I wish to ask him whether he knows what is the freight rate on granite coming from Scotland to this country?

Mr. WEEKS. I have seen the figures, but I have not them before me just at this minute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator ask the transportation rate?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. From Scotland?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some of it has been brought in ballast, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am talking about the rate on the finished granite, the polished granite.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is safe to say that when we transport a monument, for instance, from Concord, N. H., to Boston, 100 miles, by rail, we pay a rate certainly as large as the water rate from Scotland to Boston.

Mr. SIMMONS. If you have to import it from Scotland, it comes and is landed at Boston; and if then you want to send it 100 miles inland you have to pay the additional rail rate, do you not, on the monument?

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not quite understand him.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator said the freight rate on a finished monument from Boston 100 miles into the interior was so much.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. If that same monument was imported from Scotland, was landed at Boston, and was destined for this point 100 miles from Boston, in addition to the ocean transportation the importer would have to pay the transportation to the interior, would he not?

Mr. GALLINGER. The foreign product would be largely sold in our large cities and we would pay the land transportation for 100 miles. If we wanted to get to New York, we would have to pay the land transportation two hundred and thirty-odd miles more by rail or else by water. So I think the matter of transportation can not be urged as against the domestic product.

It is a fact that granite has been brought to this country from Scotland in ballast, and if this violent reduction is made I have no doubt that pretty much all of it will come here at a rate as low as we can get transportation, and that the trouble certain Senators have because we are manufacturing so much in this country will be solved and American capital and American labor will be wiped out, to a very considerable extent, for the benefit of the producers of granite in Scotland, and to some extent in Nova Scotia.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina will look at the brief he has in his hand——

Mr. SIMMONS. What brief does the Senator refer to? I do not know what brief he is talking about.

Mr. WEEKS. I refer to the only information the Finance Committee has on the subject, and that is the brief filed by the Granite Manufacturers' Association of Quincy, Mass. The Senator will find on the last page of that brief that the price of Scotch or Swedish granite, free on board the dock in Boston and New York, for various classes of monuments, averages something like 15 or 20 per cent less than the local price on board the cars in Quincy, Mass., at this time.

For instance, in Exhibit A, the foreign granite is $16; the Quincy granite on board the cars is $20. In Exhibit B it is $24 as against $26; and so on down through the list.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is from what point?

Mr. WEEKS. That is granite that is imported from either Sweden or Scotland in competition with Quincy granite.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is talking about the rough granite, is he not, that is brought over as ballast?

Mr. WEEKS. I am talking about monuments.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator makes a mistake when he says that is the only brief I have. The brief I have in my hand is a brief not filed with the Finance Committee at all, but filed with the Ways and Means Committee. I will read part of it to the Senator:

Mr. HANOLD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am not Mr. William M. Dodd. Mr. Dodd telegraphed me to represent him.

The CHAIRMAN. Give your name and address to the stenographer.

Mr. HANOLD. My name is Frank J. Hanold, of Townsend, Townsend & Co., 453 West Twenty-first Street, New York City. I might also say that you have allotted me from 3.40 to 3.50 p. m. on behalf of my own firm. In what I have to say as representing the wholesale granite dealers I will cover ground on behalf of my own firm at the same time, and it will be unnecessary to give me that time this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. What paragraph are you interested in?

Mr. HANOLD. Paragraph 114.

On behalf of the National Wholesale Granite Dealers' Association, comprising 18 firms engaged in the business of selling domestic and imported granite monuments at wholesale, I respectfully recommend that section B, paragraph 114, of tariff act of August 5, 1909, be amended by reducing the tariff on manufactured granite mentioned in said paragraph from 50 per cent ad valorem to 20 per cent ad valorem.

The present rate of 50 per cent ad valorem is prohibitive to that extent, that the cost of imported granite monuments is far in excess of the cost of the same article of domestic manufacture, so that the importation of granite monuments has diminished, resulting not only in preventing the imported article reaching the consumer of moderate means, but must have resulted in decreased revenue to the Government.

That seems to be the statement of the representative of the national association, representing 18 firms engaged in the manufacture of monuments in this country.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to another point that has been omitted in the discussion of this matter, and that is where the larger part of the competition is likely to come from under this lower tariff.

Like my colleague, I live in a section very near the granite quarries. My colleague lives in the vicinity of Barre and Montpelier, while I live near Hardwick and Woodbury. I am very closely connected with the granite people there. When this matter came up I asked them where they thought their hardest and keenest competition would come from. They said: "We think not, perhaps, from Scotland, but from Canada." I said to them: "What is there in Canada that you must compete with?" They said that on the border line between Vermont and Canada, at a place known as Beebe Plain, there was a very extensive quarry; that the same class of granite that we produce in Vermont extends into the edge of Canada, and at Beebe Plain there is a very vigorous concern. In order the we might know more about that competition, I wrote and ascertained that the cost of labor there was $2.25 per day, and that the men were nonunion men and worked nine hours per day. In Vermont, as my colleague has said, everything is under the unions.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask the Senator a question. Is the rate he has just given the wage paid to those who polish the stone, or is it the wage paid in the quarries?

I ask the Senator that question because it seems to have been pretty well understood here, in the discussion we have had about the relative wage scale in Canada and in this country, that there is practically no difference. They are the same kind of people that we are. They live in a prosperous country, as we do. They have the same standard of living over there that we do, and the wage scale, as a rule, is the same over there. If it is not the same in this particular industry, then it would seem to be an exception; and if there is a difference so near the border, if the difference were very great, the men would probably come across the line and work in the mines in the Senator's State, instead of working in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator certainly has a false idea in regard to the scale of living in Canada and the scale of wages paid there. You can almost see the difference in the civilization as you go across the line from Vermont into Canada. The houses are poorer, the churches are fewer, the schools are poorer, the scale of living certainly is different. There is no question about that. The Senator has only to travel there to recognize it. I live only about 35 miles from the line, and this quarry at Beebe Plain is probably 40 or 45 miles from my place. I have been there. Now, I will give the Senator my authority.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has not yet told me whether he was referring to the wages paid in the quarries or the wages paid to the polishers.

Mr. PAGE. I will read what I have here from Charles H. Wishart, secretary of the Granite Manufacturers' Association of Barre. He says:

> The quarry owners also employ nonunion help, and I understand a first-class quarryman gets $2.25 per day for 9 hours.

He does say, in addition to that—I want to be perfectly fair about it—that they advertise there to pay from 29 to 38 cents per hour in Canada.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was the wage paid in the quarries in Canada. The Senator gave us a little while ago not the wage paid in the quarries in this country, but, as I understood, the wage paid to the polishers that polish the monuments. Now, can the Senator tell us the wage paid in the quarries in his State?

Mr. PAGE. My colleague has taken up the question largely of monumental work, but I want to address myself to the particular fact that the wages in this country were certainly more than 25 per cent in Barre than just across the line, on the Boston & Maine road, the same road in which these quarries are pretty much all situated in Vermont, and that in addition to the one hour of extra service per day they are not under union rule; and he says that when a man breaks a piece of granite there in that quarry he is compelled to pay for it. They have to have a great deal better scale in all the details for a union worker on this side of the line than they have for a union worker on the other side.

Now, speaking with reference to the polished granite, I want to ask the Senator——

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask what are the wages paid in the quarries in Vermont?

Mr. PAGE. The minimum wage in Vermont is $3.25.

Mr. SIMMONS. In the quarries?

Mr. PAGE. The granite cutters in Barre, Vt., have a minimum wage rate of $3.25 per day, although many are paid as high as $5 per day.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am talking about the quarries. I was trying to get the rate paid in Canada and the rate paid here.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say that as between the wages in Vermont and the wages in Canada I am assured that the wages in Vermont are at least 25 per cent higher than they are just across the line in Canada.

Mr. SIMMONS. If that be so, the 25 per cent allowed in this bill would amply cover the difference between the rates paid here and in Canada.

Mr. PAGE. But I should like to hear what the Senator says when he takes the bill and reduces the duty from 10 cents a cubic foot to 3 cents. Is there any other schedule that is reduced in that way? Why do you go to Vermont to select out that industry?

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the Senator was talking about monuments, and that rate is reduced from 50 per cent to 25 per cent.

Mr. PAGE. I understand, Mr. President, that the rate on finished granite is as stated by the Senator; but I should like to ask why, because it all comes under the same schedule, they have taken Vermont's leading product and reduced the duty from 10 cents to 3 cents per cubic foot in the last part of paragraph 101.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let us see about that. The rate on monuments, not dressed, hewn, or polished granite, is 10 cents now. In 1911 the entire importation into this country amounted to only $3,185. It was almost prohibitive, almost to the point of absolute exclusion.

Mr. PAGE. I want to speak with the Senator with very great candor about that, because I have taken this question up with our people at Hardwick, who make very largely building stone. The Hardwick Granite Co. furnished the stone for the Union Station here. They are now furnishing the stone for the new post-office building here. They say to me that when there is active business everywhere the Canadian quarries are occupied in the manufacture of goods for their own market, and the Americans have the American market; but the moment there is any dullness in trade the Canadians can manufacture this stock, the rate on which you have reduced from 10 cents to 3 cents per foot, so as to drive them out of the market in spite of all they can do. They may be wrong about it, but they tell me that in all candor, and I believe that they believe what they say.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me call the Senator's attention to a fact. He says when there is a dull time the importations are very great. I have understood the Senator and his colleagues on the other side as contending that there was not great prosperity in this country in 1896. At that time, when there were dull times according to your contention, there were imported into this country under the Wilson rate only 65,000 cubic feet, valued at only $21,000.

Mr. PAGE. But the Senator has not understood my question. Why has he selected this Vermont industry, and whereas you make an average reduction of only 27.4 per cent, why have you taken this industry and made a reduction of 70 per cent?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will find, if he will follow these schedules and paragraphs, innumerable instances where we have found a situation like this. In cases where there were no importations we have made reductions of 66⅔ and 70 and 80 per cent. This is not an exception at all.

Mr. PAGE. Can the Senator name to me any industry as large as the granite industry, certainly as large as that industry is in proportion to the other industries of Vermont, where any such reduction as 70 per cent has been made?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And an industry where 80 per cent of the production is labor.

Mr. SIMMONS. On the articles we were discussing yesterday, pumice stone and other things, the reduction was as much as that. A large part of this granite is building material. It is not used altogether for monuments; it is a building material. The Senator has just said that the magnificent station down here was built out of granite from his State. The use of that is as a building material, and all through this bill where an article was used for building purposes and purposes of that character we have been not simply reducing duties, but we have been putting them on the free list.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from North Carolina think it would have been desirable that the Union Station should have been built of Scotch granite?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; and I think we only imported last year about $30,000 worth of Scotch granite. It would take about a hundred years at that rate to get enough here to build the Union Station.

Mr. GALLINGER. But if you reduce the duty one-half and open our markets to all the countries of the world——

Mr. SIMMONS. You can put this article on the free list and there will be practically no importations.

Mr. GALLINGER. I challenge the Senator to furnish the least scintilla of proof of that assertion.

Mr. SIMMONS. There are a great many heavy articles like this put on the free list, and there will not be any great increase in the importations.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that be so, is it wise to disturb the present rate? If putting it on the free list is not going to do any good, let the present rate remain. It will not do any harm.

Mr. SIMMONS. There will be some little importations, and we will get some little revenue from it.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator referred to the Vermont granite which appears in the Union Station here. We are very proud of our granite in Vermont. There is probably nothing in the world that equals the Bethel white which has gone into the construction of the post-office building here. I am very glad that has been referred to. When we commenced a few years ago we were down near the bottom of the list in regard to the production of granite. I think it was only as few years back as 1907 when we stood third or fourth in the list of granite-producing States. About 1910 we reached the second place, and in 1911 or 1912 we took the first place, and I think, perhaps, we are leading even more than formerly in the proportion of granite which we produce. We are very proud of it.

But I want to say when you take this industry, which is one of our leading industries, and reduce the duty 70 per cent—from 10 cents per foot to 3 cents per foot—I think you are doing us a great wrong.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I think this debate has served to distract attention from the provision in the first portion of paragraph 101. In what I had to say in opening I addressed myself to that portion of the paragraph which provides that—

Freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone, lava, and all other stone suitable for use as monumental or building stone, except marble, breccia, and onyx, not specially provided for in this section, hewn, dressed, or polished, or otherwise manufactured, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Granite such as that which is being employed in the construction of the new post-office building comes in blocks, and that is what my colleague [Mr. PAGE] probably refers to as being competitive, in that it can be produced in Canada and be made available from that source. But when we come to monumental work the stone that goes into that work here comes mainly from Scotland. I want it distinctly known that when you have reduced the rate ad valorem from 50 per cent to 25 per cent, 80 per cent of the production being labor, you have put the labor of the Vermont cutter upon a basis where it is in danger and where it must necessarily be reduced if this rate is adopted.

The question of competition was suggested by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], the competition which comes through the men who want to import it. If you go into a Massachusetts or a Vermont community and see how the business is done, you will find a large number of individual cutters, men who have come right out from the ranks of workmen. They are Scotch, Italians, and Americans. They are men of individual character and initiative. They have started little industries and they get their work through the New York firms. Competition between them is extreme. It is that branch of the industry, and conducted in that way, that you are attacking in this measure. It is not a very large corporation or any combination of capital, but it is the small manufacturer.

Now, Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment that I offered, if I may be permitted to do so, and I will offer an amendment covering both passages in the paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his prior amendment and submits an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28 strike out paragraph numbered 101 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

101. Freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone, and all other monumental or building stone, except marble, breccia, and onyx, not specially provided for in this section, hewn, dressed, or polished, or otherwise manufactured, 50 per cent ad valorem; unmanufactured, or not dressed, hewn, or polished, 10 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. STONE. That is the present law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say only a single word about one point that was made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I am aware that it is a waste of time to go into the question of labor cost. The differences of cost were not considered by the committee in making up these duties. They frankly put them aside. I admit that to consider comparative labor costs in production here and abroad is a difficult and complicated thing to do. It is much simpler to look at the amount of importations of last year of a given article, which only requires ability to read the statistical returns, and say, "Why, there is a great deal or there is very little. If very little, the duty is prohibitory, and we will cut the rate down; and if there is a great deal we will cut it so much." That system has much that can be said for it. It is a simple and a labor-saving system.

But when the Senator from North Carolina characterizes the statement made by the secretary of the Quincy Board of Trade that the workmen in the Quincy quarries and granite shops were walking the streets when the duty was low, at 30 per cent, as an old gag, that may be one way of disposing of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to withdraw that word. I regretted it the minute I used it. I did not desire to do such a thing.

Mr. LODGE. I am obliged to the Senator. I only wanted to say in regard to that that whatever the cause at that time, the period when those rates of duties were in force was a period of very great industrial depression in my State as in others. The Quincy granite workers, like the workers in the woolen mills and all other industries, were largely unemployed; many stonecutters' yards were closed; there was a great deal of distress.

Of course, the importation of $300,000 worth of granite did not throw the Quincy workmen out of employment. There would have been a great deal more granite imported if anybody had had any money to spend on monuments. But when people are in distress and there is grave doubt as to where they are to get money to buy food they have a tendency to save on monuments. That is not one of the necessaries of life that they think of buying first. The business fell off, of course, when the community was in distress, and work was scarce, and people were economizing in every direction. The monument industry was one of the first to feel it, because, I will not say luxuries of that kind, but things of that kind are the first that people attempt to economize on. The result, of course, of this economizing in monuments was to produce great distress among the granite workers of Quincy and, I have no doubt, of Concord and of Vermont. The amount of imported granite did not increase very much; relatively to the total production of the United States it was a small amount.

The place where the competition would come with severity if this great reduction is made would, of course, be along the coast. I have no idea that Scotch granite will compete seriously with the granite which the Senator from New Jersey has told us is polished by convict labor in Indiana. I do not believe they will need fear any competition from the Scotch yards, but on the coast of New England, on the coast of New York, the great market of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and all along this coast, which is densely populated, and where there is a very large market for articles of that description, owing to the density of population and also as a distributing point, of course the competition will be immediate and direct, because the ocean rates are extremely low, and a good deal is brought in ballast, as the Senator from New Hampshire said. Some years ago I had occasion in a tariff discussion to look into this matter with some care, as we have very large granite quarries in Quincy, and I found that the ocean rates on granite were almost negligible when it came to the question of competition.

The industry which is thus exposed to competition has been described so thoroughly and well by the Senators from Vermont, my colleague, and others who have taken part in the debate that it is not necessary for me to go into it. But I wish to emphasize the fact that the granite industry, in New England at least, is carried on by innumerable small manufacturers. There are some corporations, but comparatively few. They are men who come up, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] says, who have a small business, and competition is intense. They work entirely on the union scale of wages. The whole industry is unionized, from the men who take it out of the quarry up to the men who do the last work in carving and polishing the monument, who are a very highly paid class of labor. I know of scarcely any article in this entire tariff bill in the production of which American labor is brought so directly in competition with foreign labor. The margin of profit is extremely small and the wages are high. I think that should be considered in fixing the rate of duty on this particular article.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I desire to say a few words in reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28 it is proposed to strike out paragraph 101 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

101. Freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone, and all other monumental or building stone, except marble, breccia, and onyx, not specially provided for in this section, hewn, dressed, or polished, or otherwise manufactured, 40 per cent ad valorem; unmanufactured, or not dressed, hewn, or polished, 8 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is a proposed reduction of 20 per cent from the present law, and as a matter of justice to this industry it is all the reduction that ought to be made.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has called attention to the fact that the Wilson law had a duty of 30 per cent on this article, and that under that there were no importations. That is true. During that period, whatever the cause may have been, the people were asking for bread and they were not willing to accept a stone, and especially a foreign stone, as a substitute. The people then did not purchase foreign granite nor did they purchase domestic granite to any very considerable extent.

Mr. President, this is an industry, as has so well been said by others, that is subject to the keenest possible domestic competition.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from New Hampshire overlooks the fact that the American people did then buy several times as much as they did last year under the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not quite understand the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said that the Senator from New Hampshire overlooked the fact that under the Wilson law the people of this country did import from abroad more than twice as much as they did last year under the high rates of the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; undoubtedly; because they had a 30 per cent duty. Now, if you give them a 25 per cent duty they will import still more, which will put out of work American artisans and reduce the production of American granite. If you make the rate 20 per cent, you will put out of employment more American workmen, if that is what you want to do. All you have to do is to reduce the duty still further, and you will accomplish your result beyond peradventure.

Mr. SIMMONS. What the Senator from New Hampshire wants to do is to make it impossible for any granite to be brought in here, and what we want to do is to make it possible for some to be brought in.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire does not propose anything of the kind, and yet the Senator from New Hampshire will say that it never disturbs him when American artisans are employed and when American manufacturers, who have invested capital, are getting a fair return upon it.

I repeat, there is the keenest possible competition in the production of granite. Some years ago Mr. Batterson, of Hartford, came into my own State and invested a quarter of a million dollars in a plant for the manufacture of granite. Bids were asked for the Congressional Library in Washington. Citizens of the State of Maine wanted the contract; citizens of the State of Vermont wanted it; citizens of the State of Massachusetts wanted it; citizens of the State of New Hampshire wanted it; and Mr. Batterson, desiring to erect that great building of Concord granite, which is certainly as good granite as there is in the world, made a bid which was accepted and which resulted in a loss to him when he constructed that building. When it was decided to build the lower story of the Senate Office Building of granite Mr. Batterson's son, who had succeeded to the business, made a bid for the granite which did not net him a single dollar of profit, to my knowledge. He did it for the reason that citizens of Massachusetts, of Vermont, of Maine, and possibly of other States were competing for that work.

I say to Senators on the other side of the Chamber that this is an exceptional item in this bill. There is 80 per cent of labor in every cubic yard of granite that goes into a building or into a monument. It is not fair offhand to reduce this duty 50 per cent. It will undoubtedly result in tremendous foreign importations; it will undoubtedly result in placing the granite manufacturers of this country in an attitude where they will either have to curtail their production or reduce the wages of their operatives, which will be very difficult to do, because the labor unions absolutely control the wages in that great industry.

Mr. President, I now offer an amendment that proposes to reduce the duty 20 per cent. It is a fair reduction; it is a large reduction; but I am hopeful that the industry can stand that reduction; at least I am quite willing that it shall be tested. I think our Democratic friends ought not to resist this amendment, because it proposes as large a reduction by and large as has been made in the bill which is now under consideration. I shall have to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, because I am indulging the faint hope that it may prevail, and that the Senators on the other side of the Chamber may see that it is a proposition that is fair, and that they ought not to strike what I consider will be practically a deathblow at an industry so important to at least four New England States, and which, in my judgment, will be very seriously affected if the duty proposed in this bill becomes a law.

The proposition is a just one, a fair one, a generous one; and while I know that our Democratic friends hesitate to change any rate that they have reported in the bill, yet there are times when justice and fairness require that we shall yield our opinions and our convictions, when facts are presented such as we have endeavored to present in connection with this item. That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] speaks somewhat flippantly and disparagingly of the action of the House committee and of the Senate committee by saying that they just offhand adopted this rate. I hardly think the Senator is justified in that statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I said that for the reason that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] had stated that the literature on the subject does not show that the matter was gone into by either of the committees thoroughly or carefully. The Senator from Missouri will understand that I did not mean to impute any motive to those who have the bill in charge on the other side that they purposely did the wrong thing. I did not mean that at all; but I meant to imply that they had not gone into this matter with as much care and thoroughness, investigating the difference in the labor cost between this and other countries and the proportion of labor which is found in manufactured granite, as they might have done.

Mr. STONE. I did not understand the Senator as trying to be offensive at all, but rather as indicting the Democratic side, as he has now explained, for lack of proper attention to the details.

Mr. President, I have just a word or two to say in response. One manufacturer at least came before the Senate committee and filed a brief. He was opposed to any reduction of the rate whatever and undertook to show that it would endanger the industry. The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] read from a brief filed before the Ways and Means Committee by, I think he said, 17 men who were engaged in selling for monumental purposes marble and granite of American production and probably of European production, and that they were interested in getting a lower rate of duty so that they might avail themselves in some way of the foreign production in their business. Those 17 men are in a sense the agents of the purchasers.

Mr. SIMMONS. Seventeen firms.

Mr. STONE. Well, the 17 firms are in a sense the agents of the purchasers, because they are the users of the productions of the quarries of New England and elsewhere in the country. These matters, I am sure, were considered by the Ways and Means Committee when they fixed that rate; but here stands the one great insurmountable and indisputable fact, that under the rate of 50 per cent ad valorem, or about that, practically no imports of this commodity have been brought into the country, and the domestic producers have an absolute monopoly of the business. The rates imposed, plus the freight charges, have been prohibitive.

Mr. President, it seems to me that, in the face of these facts and in this situation, the committee was well warranted in saying this industry could not be injured by cutting the duty in two. Of course, no one wishes to injure a great industry in this country, and particularly in New England, but I believe that we ought to deal justly with the people who are purchasing marble, granite, and other kinds of stone, not only to build monuments over their dead, but for purposes of construction and in the industrial employment of the Nation.

I think the amendment ought not to be agreed to and that the House rate should stand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator, Mr. President, if he does not think that a reduction of 20 per cent is likely to produce a sufficient influx of foreign granite? How large a proportion of the domestic production does the Senator want wiped out for the benefit of Scotland or any other country?

Mr. STONE. I do not want to wipe out anything.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, it must necessarily do that if the foreign granites come in here as a matter of inundation under this very low rate.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as to how much will come I do not know, and neither does the Senator from New Hampshire know, nor does any other Senator; but I should think that if a fairly good proportion of the consumption of this country came from abroad it would not destroy our industry.

Mr. GALLINGER. But that will mean that a fairly good proportion of the men who are now employed will be dismissed and will have no employment.

Mr. STONE. I do not believe that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what is the price per cubic foot for granite?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am unable to answer that question, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. Can either of the Vermont Senators answer it?

Mr. PAGE. It is about 50 cents in Vermont.

Mr. STONE. Fifty cents per cubic foot at the quarry.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would seem to me, Mr. President, that the majority members of the Finance Committee ought to be able to answer that, if they have investigated the matter.

Mr. STONE. But the Senator is criticizing what the committee did, and I am asking now upon what basis of information the criticism is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will ask the Senator if it would make any difference what the price per cubic foot is so far as the rate of duty is concerned?

Mr. STONE. Well, what is the foreign price?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know that. What difference does that make, so far as the rate of duty is concerned?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that the unit price per cubic foot is 44 cents.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that the foreign value?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that is the foreign value.

Mr. STONE. Forty-four cents is the foreign price. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] says it is 50 cents in Vermont. There is a very small difference in percentage between 44 cents and 50 cents.

Mr. OWEN. The freight would cover that.

Mr. STONE. As the Senator from Oklahoma says, the freight would cover that, to say nothing of the 25 per cent ad valorem duty.

Mr. GALLINGER. We do not admit that there is any difference in the freight rate. I think it is in favor of the foreigner rather than in favor of the domestic producer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. JAMES. What is the question, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON] to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay." As it is, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], whom I do not see in the Chamber. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber on public business and that he is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN. I inquire if the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THORNTON. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent on account of serious illness in his family.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 41, as follows:

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is a matter of extreme regret to me. I give notice that when the bill is in the Senate I shall offer an amendment to this paragraph, hoping that in the meantime my Democratic friends will look into this matter very carefully and see if they are not really making a reduction altogether too violent in the case of this American product.

Mr. President, I now ask for the yeas and nays on the paragraph itself.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the yeas and nays are taken I should like to say just one word as to the phraseology. I want to call the attention of the Senator who has this portion of the bill in charge to the wording of the paragraph itself. Then I ask him to turn to paragraph 616, the paragraph under the free list.

In paragraph 101 "freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone," and so forth, "unmanufactured, or not dressed, hewn, or polished," are dutiable at 3 cents per cubic foot. Now, if the Senator will turn to paragraph 616 of the bill——

Mr. TOWNSEND. The same bill?

Mr. SMOOT. The same bill—he will find that the words "freestone, granite, and sandstone" are included in that paragraph, and are not included in the present law. They are made free under paragraph 616.

Does not the Senator think there is a conflict there? The bill says "cliff stone," and then it adds "freestone, granite, sandstone," and they are on the free list under that paragraph, whereas under paragraph 101 it says "unmanufactured, * * * 3 cents per cubic foot."

I wish to say that in paragraph 101 the bill refers to "freestone, granite, sandstone * * * suitable for use as monumental or building stone." In the free paragraph it uses the words "not suitable for use as monumental or building stone." I desire to ask the Senator, if it was unmanufactured, under paragraph 616, coming in free, how would it be known whether or not it was suitable for monumental stone?

Mr. STONE. One Senator suggests one thing to me and one another. That the general appearance of the stone would determine the matter is one answer. Another is that the common sense of the appraisers in looking at it would determine whether or not it was fit for such use.

Another thing, Mr. President. I think the criticism is hardly warranted——

Mr. SMOOT. I was asking the Senator for his opinion on that matter. I do not offer it as a criticism. I ask the Senator because it seems to be left in such a position that it would have to be judged as to whether or not the stone was suitable for monumental stone.

Mr. STONE. I think we can very well leave it as it is.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, may I ask what paragraph of the free list that is?

Mr. SMOOT. Six hundred and sixteen.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Senator from New Hampshire to inform the Chair as to the right, in reading the bill in Committee of the Whole, to call for the yeas and nays on an unamended paragraph.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me that if the demand is made a vote should be had on a contested paragraph, and that it is entirely proper to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I think that would not be according to the usual practice; but I suggest that the Senator would accomplish the same purpose by moving to strike out the paragraph. That would result in getting a vote on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am inclined to think the Senator from Georgia is right in the suggestion. I adopt it, and move to strike out the paragraph, on which I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the last vote.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. As I see he is not present, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. As he is not present, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. O'GORMAN's name was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Bradley	Burton	Gallinger	Oliver
Brady	Catron	Lippitt	Penrose
Brandegee	Clark, Wyo.	Lodge	Smoot

So Mr. GALLINGER's motion was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to paragraph 101:

In line 1, page 29, strike out "25" and insert "35"; in line 2, page 29, strike out "3" and insert "6."

Mr. President, as it is now the time for adjournment, I trust that this amendment will go over, to be considered to-morrow. I want Senators to dwell upon this matter and ask themselves seriously the question whether the reduction that I now propose is not a fair reduction.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if he will not permit the remaining two paragraphs of the schedule, which are very short, to be read?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. If there is any objection to them, they will go over. I think there will be no objection to them; they can be read, and we will finish the reading of the schedule to-night.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection, except I wish paragraph 101 to go over with my amendment pending.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

102. Grindstones, finished or unfinished, $1.50 per ton.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to be heard briefly on this paragraph. I prefer to have it go over.

Mr. JAMES. We will take it up to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let it go over. Let the Secretary read the next paragraph, and we will see if there is any objection to that.

The next paragraph was read, as follows:

103. Slates, slate chimney pieces, mantels, slabs for tables, roofing slates, and all other manufactures of slate, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 31, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 30, 1913.

PETITIONS FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in presenting petitions in behalf of the joint resolution designed to result in the amendment of the Constitution with reference to woman suffrage it is not my purpose to detain the Senate any longer than to say a word of encouragement to those who have come here with petitions and those whom they represent throughout the length and breadth of the land.

A few days ago the American Senate witnessed a strange spectacle, a spectacle that a few years ago no man in this body would have believed would ever have been witnessed within these walls within his own lifetime. During my own short service in this body I remember a plea I made for the right of the American people to elect their Senators, and it was met with scorn and derision by Members of this body, and one distinguished Senator could show his contempt for the proposition in no other way than by leaving the Chamber. But a few days ago the people of Georgia having elected a Member of this body that Senator was sworn into office, the first in the history of this Republic elected by a vote of the people themselves. And I want to say to the women who have come to Washington with these petitions, and through them and through this occasion to the women of America, that it took the men of America almost a century and a quarter to get the right to elect an American Senator.

But, Mr. President, there is a law of human nature in free government that is as resistless as the law under which the tide ebbs and flows. That law, briefly stated, is that if you give man the right to participate at all in free government you may throw around him every check which human ingenuity can conceive and it will prove fruitless, for he will burn away those checks and balances and will reduce free government to its last analysis, which is a government by the people. He will sooner or later bring himself directly in touch with the election of every officer connected with the government, and he will at the same time develop those instrumentalities of government which will make those to whom authority is temporarily and for the time being delegated servants and not masters of the people, who create the office and select the representative.

With that law in view and with the experience of the American people in finally effectuating the direct election of American Senators, I want to say to the womanhood of America that whatever the fate of this joint resolution may be, whatever the fate of this present movement may be, by that resistless law which I have referred to the time is not far distant, the time is inevitable, when the American people will confer upon American womanhood the only peaceable weapon known to free government for her own protection, for the protection of her property and the protection of her children, and that is the ballot.

Mr. President, on behalf of the women of Minnesota I take pleasure in presenting these petitions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it was my pleasure and privilege with a number of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives to go to Hyattsville this morning to meet the ladies who are the representatives of the several States with petitions asking for the support of Congress to Senate joint resolution No. 1.

This is one of the progressive movements of the age, Mr. President. I know that in days gone by the man who advocated woman suffrage was looked down upon in the community in which he lived just as the man who advocated the direct election of Senators by the people was looked upon as a man "fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils." But a movement which had for its purpose the direct election of Senators by the people has become a fixity in a law of Congress. So the movement now which has for its purpose the enfranchisement of woman, although in some sections of our country it is bitterly opposed, will eventually become a part of national law just as it has become a part of the law of several of the States.

It is a movement which is absolutely certain of accomplishment, Mr. President, because it is right. There is no reason in the world why the women of this country should not be permitted to exercise the right of suffrage. They are the equals of men in all that goes for the making of a better State, and they are the superiors of men in all that goes to make for a higher and loftier citizenship.

It can be safely said that in every State of the Union where a great moral question is involved and where the women have the right to exercise the privilege of voting, the woman is found also on the right side, because her heart is in the home, her home is her shrine, and she strives rather for those things which will be better for the home life than for those things which may be best for the building up of a political party.

I take great pleasure, Mr. President, in presenting petitions from the people of my State, which has only recently, after a battle of 30 years, enfranchised the women.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to add my tribute to the eulogy that has been pronounced upon the women of the country by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and to state my approval of the position taken by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Early in Kansas there was extended to the women the privilege of voting in the election of school officers and in the control of school affairs. Shortly after I made that State my home I attended a meeting for the election of school officers. I observed the farmers coming in from over the country with their wives to attend the meeting and elect the officers who would control the affairs of the schools for the coming year. It was an election carried on in the most orderly and creditable manner. That was my first observation as to the operation of woman suffrage, and I thought then that such a policy was a very fitting thing.

Later in our State there was extended to the women the privilege of voting in municipal affairs. That movement was resisted with great determination by the evil influences of society, and similar arguments to those that have been made against the present movement for woman's enfranchisement were made against the proposition to give them the right of suffrage in municipal elections. But the right was conferred, and the result has been a better condition in every town in Kansas than that which existed before this right was conferred.

The influence of the women in the municipal elections of Kansas has been for the betterment of moral conditions as well as business conditions in that State. It has made the polling place a more respectable place than it was before it was visited by their refining presence, and it has added to the intellectual as well as the moral uplifting of the municipalities of our State.

After a struggle of 20 years and more, the friends of woman suffrage succeeded last year in conferring the right of suffrage universally in our State, and, judging from the experience of the past, I know that it will have the same beneficial influence in State affairs that it had in our school affairs and in our municipal affairs.

The State that withholds the right from its women of participating in the affairs of its government is doing itself an injustice, because their participation in the affairs of the State will benefit every Commonwealth that enjoys that privilege. It has been my great pleasure to campaign the States where woman suffrage has been extended, and I observed in the audiences larger numbers of women than in the audiences where the right of suffrage had not been extended; and for intelligent understanding of intricate economic questions they are the equals of men. You will find a larger percentage of women in your audiences in a State where suffrage is enjoyed by them who understand and are informed in regard to the political and complex problems that confront our civilization than you will men. I have no patience with the argument that they have not the capacity to deal with questions relating to governmental affairs.

There is no sound argument that can be made against the extension of woman suffrage. Prejudices exist against it, but there is no argument against it. It is with great pleasure that I avail myself of this opportunity to speak a word in behalf of this great movement, and it is my opinion that when suffrage is universally extended, as it soon will be, the elevation of our political affairs to a higher moral plane will follow. The influence of women will place the political institutions of our country upon a higher plane than they have been in the past.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, from the day Utah was granted statehood, more than 17 years ago, the women of that State have enjoyed the privilege of unrestricted suffrage, equal in every respect to that enjoyed by the men. Since that privilege was granted them they have taken an active interest in the precinct primaries and ward, city, county, and State conventions. They have participated in the deliberations of the primaries and conventions. Their advice and counsel have often been sought, received, and acted upon. It is true they have sought political office, and have been elected by the vote of the people to positions of great responsibility; but in no case has a woman become a candidate for an office for which she was not capable of filling or by nature fitted to hold. They have been elected as members of the State senate and house of representatives, and filled the requirements of those important offices with credit to themselves and honor to the State.

Mr. President, the three greatest callings the Master intended womankind to properly and successfully fill in this life are those of daughter, wife, mother. If I thought that the granting of equal suffrage would interfere with these divinely intended spheres of women, I would do all in my power to defeat it; but from the results following the granting of woman suffrage in my own State, I am pleased to say that no evil effects have followed, but, on the contrary, a better condition in public affairs has been the result. The granting of suffrage to woman has made no daughter less beautiful or chaste, no wife less devoted or loving, no mother less inspiring and watchful.

My wife has taken an interest in politics, but it did not rob her of any of her womanly instincts; it did not make her a less capable wife or interfere with her loving devotion to her children. I must admit that I have had fears of the result of woman suffrage in the great cities of this country; but it may be that laws can be passed that will eliminate the evils I have in mind. I have thought that a constitutional amendment was not necessary, because every State in the Union can grant complete suffrage to every woman within its borders if the legislature of the State so decides.

The logic of common sense has been the force that has removed prejudice against admitting women to equal rights with men, and I have no doubt but that it will become universal in this country. When that day arrives the credit for success should not, in my opinion, be given to the modern militant suffragette, but to the womanly woman of to-day interested in the subject, and to such women as J. Ellen Foster, Belva Lockwood, Clara Barton, Miss Anthony, and many women of our Western States. J. Ellen Foster did more for the cause of woman suffrage than a thousand Mrs. Pankhursts; Mrs. Belva Lockwood a thousand times more than the fanatical suicide Miss Davison. I do not believe it possible that the American people will give the credit for success to the great move for the betterment of women to the eleventh hour militant fanatical suffragettes, instead of the patient, honest, pure, and lovable women that are to-day fighting for the cause and those that were in the fight when it was an unpopular cause.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, Senate joint resolution No. 1 has been favorably reported by a standing committee of this body and is now on the calendar awaiting consideration by the Senate. That joint resolution provides for an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women. I have been asked to present to the Senate some petitions in behalf of the passage of the joint resolution. I am glad to present those petitions, because I think their prayer ought to be granted and that the joint resolution ought to pass. This petition from a part of the people of this country who have heretofore not had the right to vote would, if granted, make this Government in truth and in fact a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

I do not propose now to take the time of the Senate to discuss the merits of the proposition. That I shall do when the resolution is up for consideration. I simply want to say that I come from a State where the right of suffrage has been extended to women, and that none of the prophecies of those who were opposed to it have been fulfilled, and that practically all the hopes of those who were in favor of it have been realized. What has come to pass in my State I believe will come to pass in other States.

I hope the Senate will pass the joint resolution. If the Congress should not pass such a joint resolution, I am satisfied that, notwithstanding our failure to do so, the right of suffrage will be extended State by State until the women in every State in the Union will have equal rights to vote with men, and that the same advantages, the same benefits, and the same uplifting influence that have resulted in our State will result in the other States of the Union.

Mr. President, I am glad to present these petitions, and I hope that in the very near future the Senate will have an opportunity to consider and to pass joint resolution No. 1.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Commonwealth which I have the honor in part to represent in this Chamber was a pioneer in the field of woman suffrage. It followed the splendid example set in its Territorial days by the State which borders it upon the north, to the contagion of whose influence in that regard we yielded, and which, tested by the experiences of time, has been most salutary.

As I said in this Chamber a few mornings ago, woman suffrage in Colorado is no longer an experiment. It has been tried, and it has risen in full measure to the expectations of those who were originally its advocates. I think, therefore, I can speak as one with authority when I say that the extension of the franchise to both sexes simply extends the area of that privilege to the limit which is demanded by the principle of universal suffrage.

When I consider that every argument which is made against this right and every objection which is presented to its exercise have been the identical arguments and the identical objections with which every extension of it has been confronted and which have always been overcome, I am constrained to believe that they will be no more effective now than they have been in the past.

Manhood suffrage, Mr. President, has been a plant of somewhat deliberate growth. It has from a restricted condition been extended from time to time, until long ago it embraced all men professing allegiance to the Government of the United States; and, as was said by the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], this has simply been the obedience of progress to the law of evolution, the ultimate growth of which is the extension of the principle to the men and women of every State.

Mr. President, this is not a government of good men. Some contend that the high intelligence and morality of that part of the people, possessing these elements in an extraordinary degree, should alone be invested with the power and authority of government. Others inveigh against the extension and exercise of political power to those who are of low intelligence, who are immoral, who are indifferent, or who are criminal. Some would have the suffrage confined to those in the enjoyment and the possession of property; others think that an educational qualification should be the measure and the standard of the right of suffrage. All these contentions may be correct in the abstract; but each and all of them, Mr. President, seem to ignore the fundamental proposition that this is not a government of good people; it is not a government of indifferent people; it is not a government of wicked people; it is a government of all the people, which includes all sorts and conditions of men; and it could not be the government that it is were conditions otherwise. Men have the right and power of representation as units of that compendious whole which we call the people, composed of the good and the bad, the rich and the poor, the strong and the weak, and these should also include the women as they do the men of this country.

I am not one of those, Mr. President, who predicted at the time, or who has expected since, that the enjoyment of the suffrage by the women of my State would result in that tremendous change for the better which sentimentalists have ascribed as the chief basis of this mighty movement and which must result from its establishment. I have always recognized the fact that men and women are the components of a common race, inspired by the same ambitions, animated by the same passions, involved in the same destiny, and bound together by the indissoluble laws of nature for good and for evil. Each lives under the laws of a common country; each is responsible for their infraction; each should enjoy to the fullest extent their privileges. That being so, it follows logically that both should have a part and parcel in the making, in the administration, and in the enforcement of the laws; and not until this right shall have become coequal with the physical boundaries of the country will this Government be in very truth "a government of, for, and by the people."

Mr. President, it was said many years ago that every civilization has its standard, and that standard is the position of woman in society. That is true. Precisely as she proceeds in an upward progress from the menial position of a slave to the equal of man will be the rise and progress of civilization from its rudiments toward its rounded and perfect end.

I look for no great transformation in morals or in conduct through equal suffrage; I look for no great transformation in ideals in the administration of our affairs in this country; but I do expect, as I have seen, a wondrous improvement in our public conditions, in our public morality, and in our Government by enlisting in the cause, the common cause, the public cause, all those elements of womanhood which man is always ready to acknowledge and which constitute the chief attraction and glory of our wives, our mothers, and our sisters. These are the elements which are needed to round out and make complete that political society which began with the organization of this Government under the Constitution of the United States and which has been in process of development ever since.

Mr. President, this result is coming; nothing can prevent it, because it is the necessary outgrowth of existing conditions. It may be retarded here; obstacles may interfere with its progress yonder; but just as surely as the procession of the equinoxes, State after State, unmindful of what we may do in the Congress of the United States, will join the phalanx of Commonwealths which now recognize the principle of universal suffrage, until every State in the Union shall have granted that boon to womankind, obstacles to the attaining of which, through toil, struggle, and persistency, shall have been overcome, as they have been overcome by the men of the land, who have wrested for themselves this great weapon from the strong hands of wealth and privilege.

I trust, Mr. President, that as soon as the pending important business of this Chamber shall be behind us we will take up, consider, and pass the joint resolution which has been favorably recommended to the consideration of this body by the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I present a number of petitions from citizens of the State of Colorado asking the adoption of Senate joint resolution No. 1, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. President, it was said by an eminent writer that the powers of government are either delegated or assumed; that all powers not delegated are assumed, and all assumed powers are usurpations. When we examine the history of the formation of our Government we inquire where did woman ever delegate to man the power to make laws not only for himself but also for her without her consent or knowledge? We can find no answer to that except that there was no such delegation of power. As the power was not delegated, it was assumed, and hence was an usurpation.

We have recognized in our Declaration of Independence, the charter of our liberties, that the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed. Knowing that woman is an element of society that is governed, logically, under the Declaration of Independence, there must be a consent upon her part in order to make just government. As that consent under our system can only be obtained under the elective franchise, the moral right of woman to vote is clear and conclusive.

Objection is no longer urged upon that ground; it is now made upon the ground that it is inexpedient. It is claimed that we will inject into politics an element that will degrade our elections. Can that be true when we know who are the parties to be given the franchise? Who are they? They are our mothers, our wives, our sisters, and our daughters; and is there a man in high or low position who does not recognize that there can be no contamination from that source, but that it is an elevating influence? No man will admit that his mother, his sister, his wife, or his daughter would be more likely to commit election frauds than himself; and that being the case, where can women be an influence for evil?

But it is said that the good women will not vote and that the bad women will vote. The reverse of that is the true condition, as shown in those States which have adopted equal suffrage. We know that the good women do vote; we know that they vote in almost as large proportion as do the men.

It is said that in my State 80 per cent of the women vote, and it has been tested and shown to be true by a great many of the tabulations of the women's vote in various counties of my State. It is said that 85 per cent of the men vote, and that in the same way has been verified. In that proportion of 80 per cent you can readily see how many of the good women of the State of Colorado vote.

It is said that the bad women will control the elections; but we know that the reverse of that is true because they are so few in number. There is not over 1 per cent or, it has been estimated, one-half of 1 per cent of immoral women in the State of Colorado or in any other State, and it is impossible for that small proportion to have an appreciable influence upon elections.

But in the practical operation of woman suffrage we find that the bad women will not vote unless they are almost forced to do so, and there is a good reason for it. In the first place they do not want their names to be known. Nearly all of them go under assumed names. They do not want to go to the election polls. Generally, the police or the sheriff's office of a county commands them to vote in order to get them to go to the polls at all. Thus the contention that has been made that bad women would control elections, that bad women would be eager to go and vote, is absolutely untrue. They are the ones that want to shirk a vote. They know that they are liable to prosecution. They know that unless they cast their lot with the winning party they may lose out entirely and thus have their avocation stopped.

On the other hand, the good women are as much interested in proper government as men. Their properties are as liable to excessive or wrongful taxation and assessment as those of men. Their personal liberty and rights are as sacred to them as to men. The election polls, except a few in the low parts of the cities, are as respectable places of meeting as dry goods stores. Consequently they readily go to the polls and cast their votes.

Since we have no law of primogeniture in the United States every generation now has property conveyed by will or by descent to men and women in equal parts. Thus, in every generation one-half of the entire property of the United States goes to women. We declared in our colonial days the principle that taxation without representation is tyranny. Is it possible that taxation of women's property, when every generation places in their hands one-half of all the property in the United States, is not subject also to the same criticism that was made in the days of 1776? Should not woman have the right to protect herself against excessive assessments and taxation upon her property?

The influence of woman has always been for good, both in conventions and elections. Let a man of immoral character become a candidate for office in my State and his chances of nomination or election are very slight.

All of us know that to a great extent many feel the obligations of party; and when a man is put forth as the candidate of one's party they often say, "Well, we were not for him, but we will take him and let the judgment of the party stand." Often you hear a man say, "I know that the candidate who received the nomination is a rascal, but I must have my party record consistent." He has a motive in that declaration; he expects to seek political preferment in the future. But woman has no record to keep consistent. She is not a seeker after office. She is an independent element in politics. Therefore, when she casts her vote, she votes for the candidate whom she thinks is best qualified to fill the position.

Consequently, from the standpoint both of right and good government, this joint resolution should be adopted. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions presented by the Senator from Colorado will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have the honor to represent here in part a State that has granted the franchise to its women. I am proud of the women of my State. For intelligence, refinement, and patriotism they have no superiors in any other State or nation. I have always taken pride in the campaign that they waged in my State to secure the franchise. It was a dignified, earnest appeal to the judgment, reason, and conscience of men. There were no parades, no displays, no attempts to appeal to the passions or the prejudices of men. I am proud of the men of my State who were broad minded and far seeing and patriotic enough to grant the franchise to their women.

I am sorry to hear any woman demand the suffrage as a right or claim it as a privilege. I should rather hear her call for it as giving her the opportunity to perform a sacred duty she owes to her country and her State, an opportunity that will enable her to assist in raising the standard of politics, of citizenship, and the purity of our civic life.

It has been claimed that if granted the right, most women would not exercise the suffrage, and that of those who did vote the majority would be women of low degree and immoral women. The contrary has been proved in my State. I have here an account given of an election held in the city of Los Angeles within the last few weeks. That city is one of the most progressive in this country. It was an election for city officers that should have called out the full vote of the city. I have said many times and I should like to impress it upon this presence, that one of the greatest dangers confronting this country to-day is the indifference of the voters, and especially of the so-called good citizens. It is not an unusual thing to find after the polls are closed in a hotly contested campaign that less than 50 per cent of the registered votes have been cast. In this particular instance the votes cast by the men and women of my home city are compared in detail in a tabulated statement, and following that is this statement of the result:

A notable piece of political science work was accomplished recently by a committee of earnest women in the checking up of the 90,000 votes cast at the recent city election to discover what percentage of the vote was cast by their sex. Immediately after the election the statement was made in several newspapers that only 20 per cent of the vote was cast by women. As that would call for only 18,000 feminine votes—and there were 73,000 women registered—it seemed to show a sad lack of interest on the part of the newly made voters.

The election books were thrown open by the city clerk and the names of voters were checked. Where a woman signed as "Mrs." or "Miss" or where the first name was evidently feminine the vote was credited to the woman's column, but in the case of mere initials, like "E. A. Smith," which might have been Emma A. Smith, it was surrendered to the men. Even with this margin against them, the percentage of registered women voting was 50.2 per cent as against the 54.2 per cent by the men. The women's share of the total was 41.3; and on separating the vote by districts the interesting fact appeared that the highest percentages of women's vote appeared in the most prosperous residence districts and the smallest in the poorest districts. This was a valuable bit of investigation.

C. D. W.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up the time of the Senate in reading this statement, but I ask unanimous consent to include it as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and permission is granted.

Mr. WORKS. I am strongly in favor of this amendment.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the California Outlook, Saturday, June 21, 1913.]

THE RECORD WOMEN MADE AT LOS ANGELES ELECTION.

It has been a more or less popular argument with opponents of woman suffrage that, having once attained to the ballot, women would not vote. But a more frequently used declaration was that fashionable and highly cultured women would not visit the polls, leaving that duty of citizenship to their humbler sisters. Both of these arguments seem to have been proven fallacies by the result of the recent municipal election in Los Angeles. At any rate, it was demonstrated that the women established a voting average which compares quite favorably with that of the men, this notwithstanding the fact that voting is new to women, while the men have been schooled to it through generations.

The total registration in Los Angeles, qualified for the municipal election, was 171,025. The number of men registered was 97,186, or 56.9 per cent of the total. The registration of women footed up 73,839, or 43.1 per cent of the total.

The total vote was 89,831—only 52.5 per cent of the registration.
The vote by men was 52,731.
The vote by women was 37,100.
The percentage of registered men voting was 54.2.
The percentage of registered women voting was 50.2.
The percentage of the total vote cast by men was 58.7.
The percentage of the total vote cast by women was 41.3.

From these figures it will be seen that the women did their duty as citizens just about as well as did the men, and perhaps, all things considered, a little better.

For the benefit of those who like to make deductions we present herewith a table, classified into well-defined districts or sections of the city, showing the way the vote was cast and the percentage made by women voters. A study of this table will prove interesting and instructive.

As a key for the guidance of readers not familiar with the city of Los Angeles, it may be stated that Hollywood, Westlake, Wilshire, and West Adams are rated as the so-called "exclusive" sections, while the Highland district is also populated largely by people of the leisure class. In the other sections the population runs largely to people of smaller means and humbler social station.

With this as a basis, you may entertain yourself for an entire evening with the figures in the table.

Here is an interesting comparison, in addition, drawn from precinct returns. In precinct 31, at Macy and Avila Streets, 144 men and 31 women voted. In precinct 32, at Amelia and Jackson Streets, 138 men and 14 women voted. In precinct 33, on North Los Angeles Street, 169 men and 6 women voted. Socially rated, these are among the humblest precincts in the city.

Now take two of the "exclusive" precincts: 451, which includes Chester Place and St. James Park, 61 men and 79 women; 427, at 1627 West Seventh Street, 90 men and 105 women. A conservative precinct like 79, on West Temple Street, showed as follows: 96 men and 112 women. At Wilmington, precinct 280, 55 of the 63 registered women voted.

Table showing how men and women voted.

Location.	Vote cast.	Men vote.	Women vote.	Women, per-centage.
10 precincts in Highland	3,060	1,556	1,504	0.49
11 precincts in Hollywood	2,698	1,348	1,350	.50

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I take pleasure in presenting the petition of the women of California.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I present to the Senate a petition signed by a large number of citizens of the United States urging the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 1, extending the right of suffrage to women, the joint resolution being upon the calendar, accompanied by Report No. 64, and I embrace this opportunity to make the following observations:

"Government is simply a tool in the hands of the people for the fashioning of that people's civilization." Government is strong or weak, capable or deficient, according to the people who control and make up that government. In this Republic the people constitute the Government. They are its creators and its maintenance; they are the Government. That the granting of the elective franchise to women would add to the strength, efficiency, justice, and fairness of government I have not the slightest doubt, and this is especially true in the United States, where all power is reposed in the people, with universal suffrage as the primal basis of its exercise. "The people" includes women, who can not be denied those political rights and responsibilities which men claim and assert for themselves without doing violence to the fundamental principles of our Government.

In this Republic we are in constant warfare against fraud and violence, avarice and cupidity, and in behalf of liberty and justice, whose success will be accelerated by extending the franchise to women, a class of voters which looks to all laws and movements as to how such laws and movements will affect her children; how such laws and conditions will promote morals, human health, and human progress more especially than as to how this or that particular law or polity will develop or serve material or property interests. In other words, as has been said, "Man looks after the affairs of life, but woman looks after life itself."

Woman's sphere, her ideals and her duties, make her the inescapable and essential conservator of human life, charged as she is with the duty of conserving the human race; and it is in harmony with political and natural justice to accord to her the right to say what laws shall assist her in bringing about the betterment of economic conditions.

I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition presented by the Senator from Arizona will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to present sundry petitions signed by women of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in favor of the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting votes to women, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions presented by the Senator from Massachusetts will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I present petitions signed by several hundred men and women of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of Senate joint resolution No. 1, granting the right of suffrage to women. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to present numerous petitions signed by women of Ohio, favoring the adoption of a constitutional amendment extending the right of suffrage to women. I ask that the petitions be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was surprised a moment ago to be summoned to the corridor to meet a delegation of ladies who recently have made a tour of the New England States, conferring with the governors of the several States and securing names to petitions in favor of the constitutional amendment which has been reported to the Senate. I take great pleasure in presenting these petitions, many of the signers being citizens of New Hampshire, and I will say a word regarding my own attitude on the subject.

For almost 50 years I have believed in woman suffrage. Long ago I asked myself the question: "Why should not a woman vote, provided she has the qualifications for suffrage that are required of men?" and I have never received a satisfactory answer to the question. The simple truth is that woman is not allowed to vote simply and solely because man says she shall not be allowed to do so. That is all there is to it as a fundamental proposition.

I have long believed that woman suffrage is inevitable in my own State, throughout the United States, and in the other civilized countries of the world. I hold to that conviction to-day. Forty years ago, in the New Hampshire Legislature, it was my privilege, as chairman of a special committee, to report a bill in favor of granting school suffrage to the women of my State. It became a law, and the women have exercised that right since, to the great advantage of our schools. They are now asking for wider opportunities to participate in public affairs, and, beyond a question, those wider opportunities in due time will be granted to them.

I do not expect, when that time comes, that the political millenium will arrive, or the social millenium, but I have every conviction that it will work for the benefit of society and for the benefit of our political institutions. Holding those views, it is but natural that I should cheerfully respond to the request that has been made of me and present to the Senate of the United States the petitions that lie on my desk, with a further suggestion that when the resolution that has been reported by the Committee on Woman Suffrage comes before the Senate it will give me great pleasure to vote in favor of the proposed constitutional amendment. I ask that the petitions be received and appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not my intention, Mr. President, to detain the Senate with a discussion of the merits of the joint resolution. I can not let the occasion go by, however, without taking advantage of it to publicly express my approval of the resolution and to say in a very few words what I understand to be the basic principles upon which it is founded.

This movement for woman suffrage is a part of the general tendency of the age toward enlarging the participation of the people in the Government. It is also a part of the age-long rise of women from the state of servility and subjection which they formerly occupied in domestic as well as in political affairs.

I should imagine that it would be more difficult, considering this proposition as an original one and from a universal view, for anyone to state a reason why the right to vote should be a question of sex than to state reasons why women who are otherwise qualified should have the right to vote. In other words, it is difficult to conceive of a valid or logical objection to the proposition.

I suppose that the exclusive privilege now given in some States to the male citizens to take part in the elective franchise is based upon superior physical strength. I think we have arrived at a day and age when it is universally conceded that that is not a high nor a just principle upon which to base the privilege of the franchise. If it were, then we should pick out those who are physically the strongest and give them superior rights in the State.

In the case of a man like Jack Johnson, who at one time was the champion prize fighter in the world, if the highest privilege, the highest right, which a citizen can enjoy is to be based upon physical superiority, I suppose he would stand very high in the favors of the State.

I read a document which defaced the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD here a few days ago—and which gives intrinsic evidence that it is the production of a perverted mind——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to state to the Senator from Washington that that matter has been expunged from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that it has been expunged from the RECORD, but I nevertheless may refer to it, because it was printed in the RECORD, and I have it before me now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair made the observation only through fear that the Senator was not present and was not aware of the action the Senate had taken.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is an attack upon the proposition that women should have the franchise, and yet I read in this article directed against equal suffrage this statement:

> In brute force, in all that constitutes the mere animal frame and nature, women are inferior to men; but in purity of mind, in refinement of sentiment, in all that most nearly assimilates our race to the good angels above, they are superior to men.

Yet the writer of the article who entertained those views is of the opinion that those qualities which he compares to the Divine Being's above are not of a sufficiently high order to be a test of the right to vote.

Mr. President, it is objected that the National Government, the Congress of the United States, should not interfere, but that this matter should be left to the action of the States. I find, however, in the Constitution of the United States already a list enumerated of the rights of citizens. They are guaranteed in the Constitution—a privilege which attaches not only to citizens but to every person—protection against unreasonable seizures and searches. They are guaranteed due process of law and protected in the right to own property, given the right of trial by jury, insured the privilege of free speech and of a free press. If those privileges were of sufficient importance, and they undoubtedly were, to be embodied in the Bill of Rights and placed in the Constitution of the United States, that privilege which is of a still higher order, namely, the right to participate in the primary functions of government, is also not only of sufficient importance but is appropriate to be protected in the Constitution itself.

Every woman born or naturalized in the United States, by the terms of this Constitution, is a citizen of the United States. In view of her intellectual attainments, her moral character, her ability to comply in every respect with those tests of fitness for the franchise which are applied to men, a consideration in justice and fairness of her status and duties as a citizen entitle her to the same prerogative.

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution guarantees to every citizen the privileges and immunities of citizenship and enjoins any State from abridging or denying them. The writing of one addtional word into the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution, the addition of a word of one syllable to this Constitution, would accomplish throughout the Nation the great object for which this movement has been instituted and carried on with so much perseverance.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the joint resolution, and I submit certain petitions in its support.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a petition in support of the joint resolution under discussion, handed to me by Miss Laura S. Runyon, a teacher of history in the Warrensburg Normal School, of my State, one of several great institutions of that character of a highly cultivated and most excellent nature.

These petitions favor the adoption of the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, and I take pleasure in presenting them. I ask that the petitions be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I present a petition, very largely signed by women of Virginia, asking for the passage of the joint resolution amending the Constitution of the United States so as to give the right of suffrage to the women of the country. I ask that the petition be referred to the appropriate committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. BACON. I present sundry petitions from women of Georgia on the same subject, which I ask may be likewise referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions presented by the Senator from Georgia will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present a number of petitions signed by citizens of Texas in favor of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SWANSON. In behalf of some ladies and at their request I present petitions signed by sundry citizens of Virginia in favor of the adoption of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to present a petition, signed by numerous ladies of Georgia, in behalf of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I ask that the petition be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to present, in behalf of the women of Kentucky, a petition in favor of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I ask that the petition be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I present a petition on the same subject, signed by citizens of Maine, and in the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] I present in his behalf a like petition. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a similar petition, signed by a large number of women of my State, in favor of the adoption of Senate resolution No. 1. I ask that the petition be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. MYERS. I present a petition signed by a large number of citizens of Montana on the same subject. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the sentiment favorable to woman suffrage is not very strong in Mississippi, but there are some very excellent women in that State and a few men who are very earnestly for the measure. I take pleasure in presenting their petitions to the Senate, and I ask that they be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. At the request of Vermont ladies present this morning I beg leave to present a petition in favor of the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 1.

I ought to say in this connection that, while I have not received from the State a formal petition to be presented upon this occasion, I have had numerous letters from representative people of the State requesting action on my part favorable to this movement. I only say this because had I known that the matter was coming up this morning I would have brought the letters with me and presented them as a part of the representation to the Senate of the United States. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition presented by the Senator from Vermont will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. KENYON. On the same subject I present sundry petitions signed by citizens of the State of Iowa. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. WEEKS. I present resolutions and indorsements upon the same subject. I think I ought to say that the large number of petitions which I hold in my hand has been the result of public meetings held at different towns and cities of Massachusetts. I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I present sundry petitions of a like character with those already presented. I do not content myself with merely the idle presentation on my part of those petitions. They are signed by citizens of the United States. They are not voters of the United States because of certain constitutional limitations. The first line I read in the Federal Charter is—

We, the people of the United States.

The women of this country are not in a governmental sense any part of the "people" of the United States at this time, unless in those States or jurisdictions where by State legislation or by constitutional provision that right has been guaranteed to them.

Mr. President, there are in round numbers about 100,000,000 human beings in this Republic at this time. The potential vote in November, 1912, of its male citizens was 22,000,000. Of that 22,000,000, 15,000,000 saw fit to exercise the right conferred by the laws of their country; 7,000,000 were busy, disabled, sick, or unable to get into the returns for various reasons. One-third of the male lords of creation, now by the laws of the country given the right of self-government, voluntarily absented themselves from the polls last November.

It is said that women will not and do not vote when the right is extended to them. Neither do nor will the men in any larger proportion. Therefore I am moved to say that the appreciation of the responsibilities imposed by the right to vote will be as thoroughly felt by the women of this country as by the men who now have and in part exercise that right.

Mr. President, the law of physical force ought not to be an argument on this joint resolution. We hope that the human race is traveling toward a better age; that the days of armaments on land and sea will cease; that it will no longer be a question of battleships and military force; that it will be a question of right and wrong. I hope that we are rapidly traveling toward that time when justice will sit enthroned in the human heart as the supreme arbiter between nations and between men.

In that age, however far distant it may be, the influence and the vote of womankind will be as powerful as that of men. Men themselves have only been enfranchised as the result of many struggles in the centuries past. Who has forgotten the charter fights in England? Who has forgotten the fights in the earlier history of the older States of this Republic? Only by degrees have the limitations of property qualifications to vote been stricken off year after year. Only here and there we can remember the time when constitutional restrictions, when the limitations upon the right of men to vote, were removed by the great impulsive movements that came from those who felt that the sense of justice no longer permitted those limitations.

So the history of the right for us to vote, my fellow men, has been checkered by the vicissitudes of the slow-moving progress of humanity.

Women now vote in many of the States. In the third largest State in the Union, with a vote cast of more than 1,200,000 last November, a limited right of suffrage has been granted by an act of our general assembly. By that statute women are given the right to vote for candidates for all public offices except those created and existing by virtue of the State constitution. It is a partial advance, but it is no more partial than the advance that has been made in every State and in every country where the English tongue is spoken. Wherever the common law of the mother country has been practiced, wherever the personal and the property rights of women have been subject to the common law, we have seen the gradual advance of womankind from the condition of marital serfdom and economic vassalage until she has advanced to the full panoply of property rights, holding her individual estate or community property according to the laws of the several States granting to her her personal rights.

At one time woman upon entering into the state of matrimony lost her personal identity, and at the same time the possession as well as the title of all her property was vested in her husband. The husband was the absolute proprietary lord of her means. That was the common law of our English ancestors. I do not wonder that sometimes even now man thinks this is an innovation. He is almost like a Mohammedan. The Koran tells us that every reform is an innovation, every innovation is an error, and every error leads to hell-fire. If that is so, we who favor this joint resolution are headed for a warmer country than Washington. [Laughter.] I am going to take a chance on it, Mr. President, because in the very nature of things, if womankind has had some of her limitations removed, and no injury has resulted in years past, we had as well take the other limitations off and make the opening words of the Constitution of this Republic a living, active, dynamic force in the great Republic of the Western Hemisphere.

It is said to me that woman does not want to vote, and that, besides, she is not a soldier. For my part, if I had lived in the days of the Civil War and had worn either a gray uniform or a blue I would rather have carried a Confederate or a Union musket than have been a woman who stayed at home and waited for news from the far line of battle or the hospital's wasting breath.

The bravest of battles that ever was fought,
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not;
It was fought by the mothers of men.

No marshaling troop, no bivouac song,
No banners that gleam and wave;
But, oh, its struggles they last so long,
From babyhood down to the grave.

Somebody has said to me, Mr. President, in private conversation on this question, that womankind will not improve politics. Well, if she does not, if she only keeps it from getting any worse, I am willing to take a chance on it.

If we and others who have, through ourselves or through our ancestors, for many years been engaged in the management of the dear public's affairs have made what we have of it, with investigation heaped upon investigation, with hill on hill and Alp on Alp arising, with which we are endeavoring to issue a certificate of moral character to ourselves—if we have not got any further along than that in some hundreds of years, for the Lord's sake let us give woman a chance and see if she can not get us on a little higher level than we now are.

What good will it do to increase merely the body of the electorate? That is what this is. The mere multiplication of units avails nothing unless the quality of the unit is improved. I believe woman is a better unit than man, though not possibly on the intricacies of the tariff schedules, not possibly in discussing the niceties of peanut oil or the solvency or insolvency of banks or the intricacy of currency bills and regional reserves. She will need a little preliminary drilling on those subjects, and I think some Senators will also have to have a little preliminary drilling before they are ready to vote. So it is an even score when we mark it upon the wall in that way.

Will it do any good? I think it will, Mr. President. Does not a woman protect her babe in the cradle? Is not her maternal instinct stronger than the instinct of the other parent? Does not she use all her efforts for that purpose? Do not her power, her intuition, her diplomacy, her arguments, and her imperial influence with man go to defend her own? They do.

For myself, if nothing else were at stake with me, if the woman has a right to defend with her life her honor, with her life her babe in the cradle, I would put the ballot in her hands in order that when the babe grows to be an adult she still might defend him on land and sea and wherever in the wide world he might be. Woman is infinitely the superior of man on moral questions. We are of coarser fiber; we think in lower terms. But the woman, enlisted in the cause of moral progress, will protect her babe in infancy and she will protect the same babe in the years when he is an adult. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I take great pleasure in presenting a petition from many women who wish the Senate to vote in favor of Senate joint resolution No. 1 in regard to this matter. As a matter of fact, I have always believed in the right of women to vote. I do now believe in it, and I say "now" without equivocation and without any mental reservation.

Women vote in Oregon, and the last city election in Portland was, I am told, decided by the votes of the women. In my family there are four persons—my wife, two daughters, and myself. They and I are registered voters. As a matter of fact, my sympathy is with the women. I have always done all I could to secure to them the right of suffrage, and have labored with others in Oregon until finally we now have the women as full voters in every election.

Several arguments in favor of woman suffrage have been presented here, but there are many things not usually presented in relation to this question which appeal to me. I am by profession not a lawyer; I am a physician; and probably I look naturally upon this question from the standpoint of a physician. As a matter of fact, it is not true that men have greater physical endurance than women. Women can stand and, as a rule, do stand more pain than the bravest and most courageous man is able to endure.

I have never known any reason why women should not vote. They are our full partners in all of the affairs of life. From the hour in which we are born until the day on which we die they accompany us through all our lives in every circumstance. We can not do without them, and we do not wish to. There is no reason on earth why they should not participate with us in all of the joys and privileges of life, as they do now in our sorrows and adversities.

There is no reason for denying, and I can not understand why anyone should deny, women a right to vote, if the women wish to vote. If a woman does not wish to vote, that is a different matter. Under the joint resolution, if enacted into law, if she does not wish to vote, she does not have to do so. As the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] has pointed out, many men decline to vote, and women have a perfect right to decline if they so desire; but those women who do wish to vote should be allowed to do so.

The interest of women in good and bad legislation is as great as is ours. Good legislation and properly conducted government go right into the homes of the families of this country and bear directly upon the happiness, the fate, and the fortunes of the family, including the women. The woman is more interested in her offspring than is the male. Naturally it will be to her interest to have in the country good government, sound government, government which will protect the home and which will protect and promote the health and the happiness of her offspring. It is her desire that her offspring shall be happy; that they shall be prosperous and healthy. Men have not as much interest in the welfare of their offspring. Quite naturally, then, and logically, woman should have a voice and a share in saying what manner of government should be placed upon herself and her children. I do not see how anyone can question the logic of that statement. As I have said before, I have for that reason at all times been in favor of women voting. I have gotten over the idea that women would not vote as intelligently as men. Women may make mistakes if they get the right to vote. We make many of them. If women do not make more mistakes than we do they are going to do very well, indeed. It is not within the realm of possibility that women can make more mistakes than we do, and if they do they have a right to make them and then correct them afterwards, if they care to do so. I hope and trust, Mr. President, that the joint resolution will pass. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I present a number of petitions, numerously signed by some of the best people of the State of Indiana, both men and women, praying for the adoption of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. PENROSE. I present petitions signed by over 10,000 prominent and leading citizens of Pennsylvania in favor of the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. COLT. I present several petitions from women of Rhode Island in favor of the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 1, relating to woman suffrage. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. RANSDELL. I present petitions, signed by a number of male residents of Louisiana, urging the adoption of Senate joint resolution No. 1, giving the right of suffrage to women. I desire to say that I am in favor of the joint resolution, and shall do what I can to secure its adoption. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, at the request and in behalf of certain ladies in the State of Louisiana, I wish to present a petition in favor of the female suffrage amendment now pending before this body. In doing so, I wish to say that I am opposed to the passage of that proposed amendment to the Constitution, because the effect of its passage will be to take away from my State the constitutional right which she now enjoys in that respect. I have not the slightest objection to other States conferring the right of suffrage on women in their States if they so desire; but I am unalterably opposed to other States forcing the State of Louisiana to do so, whether that State wishes to do so or not; and I will do everything I can honorably do to prevent the passage of the proposed amendment. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to inform the Senate that the resolutions handed me by ladies of Illinois I have taken the liberty to leave with the filing clerk of the Senate. I respectfully inform the Senate that I present those resolutions in behalf of the ladies of Illinois and of the delegation that represented them who are here visiting in Washington. I ask that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I desire to present several petitions signed by ladies in my State on the same subject. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I represent in part the State of Wyoming, which 44 years ago, as a Territory, adopted equal suffrage and equal rights and privileges for men and women. That has been the law since, and it has been accepted and supported by all parties. When, some twenty-odd years ago, after having lived under that law for over 20 years, the Territory of Wyoming knocked at the doors of Congress for admittance into the Union she had in her constitution the provision for equal suffrage. In the constitutional convention of the new State, composed of about 80 delegates of all parties, but 3 recorded their votes against the provision.

I do not at this time present any petition, but I simply give the record of that State. The law is universally respected and indorsed, and if I occupied hours of time I could not say too much in its favor.

It is true that a large number of the people in Wyoming believe it is unnecessary to have a constitutional provision or amendment, because each State could settle the matter for itself. I myself have formerly, while a member of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, reported in favor of such an amendment as proposed in these petitions, and personally I should take pleasure in supporting such an amendment, though I find no fault with those who believe otherwise and think each State should settle it for itself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, on behalf of a very few of the good women of the State of Alabama I present a petition favoring the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I shall vote against the passage of the joint resolution. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I take pleasure in presenting a petition, signed by the people of my State, in favor of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I send to the desk a letter received this morning from the governor of our State, and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF MICHIGAN, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Lansing, July 28, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: I am writing an exact duplicate of this letter to Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. I must confess that I am not familiar with just what is pending in relation to the proposed amendment to the National Constitution granting suffrage to women. If such a bill is pending and is due to come up for approval or disapproval, I am quite willing that you should know my feelings in regard to granting suffrage to women. I favor such an amendment, not because the right of suffrage to women would reform the United States in 30 days, but because I believe they are entitled to the right and privilege of suffrage. On that basis I am hoping that you will hold a similar opinion and vote accordingly. After all, I am not writing this letter by way of instruction, but in order to express to you my own wishes. It is not necessary for me to write pages on this subject, because I have stated my reason for supporting the right of suffrage to women in one sentence. With best wishes, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

WOODBRIDGE N. FERRIS, Governor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I voted for the constitutional amendment in the State of Michigan last year. I shall vote for it here when I have an opportunity.

I presume few, if any, Senators here have had the distinguished honor which I have personally enjoyed of accompanying my mother to the polls as a full-fledged voter in the State of California. I did not feel that the dignity of the American people or the strength and perpetuity of the Republic were endangered by that course. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition presented by the Senator from Michigan will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, at the request of one lady I am presenting a petition signed by 13 ladies of the city of Washington, favoring the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, at the request of a lady from my State I am presenting a petition in favor of Senate joint resolution No. 1.

I find that in the petition there is no signature from the State of South Carolina. I am presenting the petition as a matter of courtesy to the lady from my State who handed it to me. I am not in a position to state just what is the sentiment of the people of my State in reference to the joint resolution until I hear from them, as we generally do on subjects in which they are interested.

I think this explanation is necessary to show that there is not on the petition any signature from my State. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition presented by the Senator from South Carolina will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have the honor to present, on behalf of the women of Nevada, petitions in support of the joint resolution.

While I do not intend to make any argument in support of it, as I do not believe it is required, and because there are others who can more ably discuss the matter, I can not refrain from stating that the men of my State believe women should have the right to vote. We realize that the purification of the administration of our Government is the most important question before the people to-day. We believe that the absolute and unrestricted enfranchisement of women will do more to purify our Government than all of the corrupt-practices bills that can be enacted into law.

On two separate occasions the legislature of my State has passed almost unanimously a resolution amending the constitution so as to grant to women the unrestricted and absolute franchise in the State. I feel that I am able to say that at the next election the men of the State will almost unanimously confirm the action of the legislature. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have the honor of presenting petitions in behalf of the proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States.

I do not care at this time to say more than that I am in hearty sympathy with the joint resolution. I have so expressed myself on very many occasions. While there is a great difference of opinion in the State of Michigan as to whether or not women should vote, I here and now protest against the statements which have been given circulation to the effect that only women of the most undesirable classes are favoring woman suffrage. So far as Michigan is concerned, this is grossly incorrect. I know that many of the very best mothers and wives of my State are in hearty sympathy with this movement. Believing, as I do, that woman should have the same political rights as man, I shall cheerfully do what I can to secure such rights for her. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I take pleasure in presenting petitions from numerous intelligent and accomplished ladies of the State of Kansas asking me to support the suffrage amendment; and I take this occasion to say a few words in behalf of the amendment.

Kansas is the infant State in the suffrage movement. While we have had woman suffrage in one form or another in educational and municipal affairs perhaps longer than most of the States, we have had complete woman suffrage, equal suffrage, only since the last general election.

Last year the Kansas women modestly, but earnestly, without flourish of trumpets, asked the men to grant them this right, and we generously responded by a most decisive vote.

No nobler women, no more devoted wives, or more loving mothers, and no better housekeepers can be found anywhere on earth, and we have no fears of their losing these excellent qualities by extending that which of right belongs to them. I congratulate them upon their splendid victory and heartily welcome them into their new field of labor. The temperance question, always alive in my State, and all other moral questions are now perfectly safe and secure in the hands of the voters for the first time in the history of the State.

I have always favored woman suffrage because I believe that under the Constitution of the United States, and under the fundamental laws, woman is justly and legally entitled to it. I look at it as much from a legal standpoint as from any other, although from a moral standpoint it can be urged with even greater force.

In this connection I desire to read a few sections from the Constitution of the United States bearing out this contention.

Section 2 of Article IV provides:

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

The fourteenth amendment provides:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The fifteenth amendment provides:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

It will hardly be argued by anyone that women are not citizens. If they are admitted to be citizens, their legal right to vote is already clearly established by law.

While I believe no constitutional amendment is really necessary to give the right of equal suffrage, yet if it will aid in any way to bring about equal suffrage throughout the United States I am certainly in favor of the proposed amendment. The only reason we have not enjoyed woman suffrage throughout the United States is because the men have originally assumed the right and the power to deprive the women of this legal right of suffrage. In the early days the men in my State, who perhaps were not then as just and chivalrous as they are in this day, met and framed the constitution of the State. In doing so, while under the Constitution of the United States the women were equal citizens with them, they deprived them of their most sacred right of citizenship, that of voting.

I have often wondered what the result would have been had the women assumed this right and met and framed the constitution of Kansas, and deprived the men of the right to vote. I feel that the men judges of the various courts would have held long ago that such action would have been unconstitutional. So if it would have been unconstitutional for the women to have framed the constitution of Kansas and to have deprived the men of the right to vote, I say it is unconstitutional for the men to have met and denied the women of this right and privilege. To use a rather homely, but forcible, familiar expression: "What is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander." If it would have been unconstitutional for the women to have done this, it was also unconstitutional for the men. I believe that under the fundamental law of this land and under the highest authority we have—the Constitution of the United States—they are legally entitled to vote, and should not longer be deprived of that right by the men.

I shall gladly support the constitutional amendment, and hope later to take more time to discuss the question from a moral standpoint, whereby it will secure equal justice, nobler purposes, better government, and the highest and purest citizenship. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, in presenting these petitions of the women of Oklahoma, asking for the adoption of the Senate joint resolution No. 1, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women on the same basis as the suffrage enjoyed by men, I do so in no mere perfunctory way, because personally I strongly favor the proposed extension of the franchise. I believe that it will be better for the Government of the United States, better for State government, better for county government, better for city government, better for the home, better for the safeguarding of the health of the people, better for the safeguarding of the rights, interests, happiness, and general welfare of the children, of the women, and of the men that the women of the Nation should have a right to register their wishes with regard to government upon an equal basis with men.

The reasons for this request on the part of the women in the country are overwhelmingly unanswerable, and the time has come when they must be considered with dignity, with unbiased minds, free from prejudice or passion, in the interest of the welfare of the human race.

What are these reasons? They have been succinctly set forth in the memorial which I had the honor to present (S. Doc. 519, 61st Cong., 2d sess.) and which I had the honor, as a friend of this cause, upon the counsel and advice of the women representing the National American Woman Suffrage Association, to prepare:

First. The women of the United States are citizens of the United States, entitled by nature to an equal right to enjoy the opportunities of life.

Second. They perform half the work of the United States.

Third. They bear all the children of the United States.

Fourth. They educate these children.

Fifth. They inculcate in these children lessons of morality, of religion, of industry, of civic righteousness, and of civic duty.

Sixth. They deserve to be honored by the children of the country as equal to men in dignity and honor.

Seventh. They pay half the taxes of the United States.

Eighth. They possess half of the property of the United States, or, at least, they are entitled to possess half of the property of the United States by virtue of labor performed and duty well done.

Their property and their right to liberty and to life are subject to law. The law controls the property as well as the rights of the women to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and therefore women should have the right to a voice in the election of Representatives to write the statutes and to execute them.

Mr. President, I do not understand how a man, loving and honoring women, believing in their intelligence and integrity of mind, believing in their moral and ethical sense, believing in their upright character, believing in their right as human beings, can deny these overwhelming reasons justifying suffrage or offer them a Barmecide feast of empty gallantry while denying them the solid food of actual power.

I do not understand how any man, in the presence of God, can deny the validity of these reasons. If you attempt to answer these sound reasons with a sensitive conscience, it seems to me you are compelled to yield to the righteous demand of the women of America.

You well know, as students of history and as students of statecraft, that the right to the ballot is the right protective of every other right, and, knowing this, how will you thus deny women equal opportunity to earn equal wages for equal labor and to protect their own lives and that of their children by the ballot?

Will you suggest that good women will not vote and bad women will vote? This most untrue and unkind suggestion has been emphatically and finally answered by history, which demonstrates that the same percentage of women vote as men, and that the vote of undesirable women is an utterly negligible quantity; that women are not to be regarded as bringing to suffrage a preponderance of evil, but that their vote has brought to the State an important influence in the interest and well-being of children, new and stronger laws for the protection and advancement of the interests of mothers and of girls, new and better laws for the preservation of the public health, new and better laws for decency in administering and beautifying cities, and more worthy candidates by all parties are offered where women vote.

The right of suffrage is justified by every natural right; can not be denied by conscientious, thoughtful, studious men who desire to deal justly with all human beings alike. I greatly desire to see these rights established in order to raise in dignity and power the mothers of this Nation.

No nation ever rises higher than the motherhood of the nation; and the welfare of the Nation is not promoted by denying to the mothers of the Nation the elementary right of suffrage which is essential not only to protect their own rights of life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness, but especially to enable them better to protect their children, the children of the Nation—the boys and girls—who must have charge in a few years of this great Republic. The children of the Nation are taught by women their manners, their morals, and their standards of life, their ambitions, their industry; their good qualities are stimulated by women far more than by men. Women should have the right to protect their children "from the treacherous pitfalls which lie in the pathway of life"; to protect their children against disease and insanitary conditions; to protect their children against the liquor traffic; to protect their children against the brothel; and in protecting their children they will protect as well the men of the Nation and establish in their hearts higher and better standards.

The whole world is beginning to realize the enormous importance of giving greater power to women. Many of our own States have given full suffrage to women within the last few years, including Oregon, Arizona, Kansas, California, Alaska, Washington; and Wyoming, Idaho, Colorado, and Utah have long given women full suffrage with beneficial results to the school system, and to the charities of the State, to better conditions protecting the lives of the women and children of those States, and no just objection has been found against it where it has been exercised. Full suffrage has been given by many other great self-governing, highly civilized communities, as South Australia, Western Australia, Australia itself, New South Wales, Tasmania, Queensland, New Zealand, and Finland. Illinois has recently extended suffrage on a large scale, and I want to register my earnest hope that the Senate of the United States will recognize its great obligation to the human race in extending this measure of justice to the women of America, so that this great Republic may reach the highest ideals of Christian civilization.

I will not appeal to men from a party standpoint or call their attention to the effect which may be expected to follow if either one of the great parties should go so far as to offend the nearly 4,000,000 women who now have the full suffrage in America by contemptuously denying a right so obviously just and so obviously necessary to the welfare, to the progress, and to the happiness of the people of America, but I will remind you that many great groups of men, such as the Farmers' Union, the National Grange, the American Federation of Labor, the Labor Party, the Socialist Party, the last with over 648,000 votes, have declared for this progressive movement; and I remind you also that a great party, with high ideals, casting over 4,000,000 votes last year, has declared for woman suffrage, and that this question can no longer be ignored.

I congratulate the Senate and the country that 22 Senators have to-day publicly expressed their favorable opinion of this reform.

During the delivery of Mr. OWEN's speech,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Oklahoma has concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Oklahoma will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. OWEN's speech,

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from North Carolina will yield, I think an explanation is due relative to the petition handed in by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who stated that the petition was not signed by residents or women of his own State.

These petitions were brought here this morning, and the petitioners were met at Hyattsville. In the short time it was impossible to place all the petitions in the hands of the Senators from the particular States. An effort was made there as far as possible to give to each Senator the petitions of his own State, but in the hurry and confusion it was impossible to make the distribution complete.

I have no doubt the Senator will find upon examining the petitions filed with the Senate that there are petitions signed by women of his own State.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from North Carolina will allow the unfinished business to be laid aside until the rest of the petitions have been presented.

Mr. SIMMONS. I assume that very little more time will be required upon this matter, and trusting that Senators will recognize the fact that two Senators have given notice that they will speak to-day on the unfinished business and will abridge their comments as much as possible I now ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside until all the petitions are presented.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I present several petitions of constituents of mine in the State of Connecticut in behalf of Senate joint resolution No. 1, and ask that they be properly referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I present petitions signed by many estimable ladies from the State of Delaware in favor of the woman-suffrage joint resolution which I ask may be properly referred. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. STONE. I presented some petitions from women in favor of the amendment relating to suffrage this morning. I have now in my hand some petitions sent to my colleague [Mr. REED], who is not present in the Chamber, being absent on official business. In his behalf I present the petitions. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I send to the desk certain petitions which have been received from women of Arkansas on the same general subject. I ask that they take the usual course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. WARREN. I send to the desk six several petitions favoring the adoption of the constitutional amendment. They are variously signed by citizens of different localities. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions presented by the Senator from Wyoming will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. CHILTON. On behalf of some citizens of West Virginia, I present a petition favoring the adoption of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire also to present in behalf of my colleague [Mr. GOFF], who is necessarily absent, certain petitions on the same subject. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SHIELDS. I present a petition signed by many splendid women of Tennessee in support of Senate joint resolution No. 1. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition of the Senator from Tennessee will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have the privilege of presenting some petitions signed by some of the splendid women and men of Ohio in support of the proposed amendment to the Constitution. In doing this I desire to say that at the last constitutional election in the State of Ohio I voted in favor of the amendment granting the right of suffrage to women. It failed by a very substantial vote. If the opportunity presents itself to vote for an amendment to the Ohio constitution on this subject, granting the right of suffrage to women, I shall vote for it again.

I have never had any sympathy with the stock arguments which are used in opposition to woman suffrage, but at the same time, while on my feet, I desire very briefly to present my views upon this subject.

Many people when they discuss the subject refer to suffrage as a privilege, and in one sense of the word it is a privilege. Others speak of it as a right, and in one sense of the word it is a right when it is bestowed. But I have never looked upon the right of suffrage so much as a privilege or a right as I look upon it as a solemn duty. When we speak of the right of suffrage as enjoyed by men, I prefer to look upon it as a duty which American manhood owes to our country, and instead of granting the privilege to vote, if it were in my power, to any class of our citizens who are given the right, I would make it a duty, and I would penalize those who did not perform the duty.

That leads me to this suggestion, and I suggest it rather in the interest of woman suffrage than against it: In the State of Ohio, for instance, it has not yet appeared that the majority of the women there want to vote. I wish they did want to vote; and, if I may be pardoned the suggestion, it seems to me that the very minute the majority of the women of any State show to the men of that State that they want the right to vote they will speedily be given the right to vote.

And that leads to this thought: It has not yet appeared that the women of Ohio or the majority of them want to vote. In some of the Western States it appears that they do want to vote; and in some of the States, as has been suggested by several Senators on the floor to-day, there is no general sentiment in favor of woman suffrage. The question therefore is, Shall the men and women of a State who want to vote have the right to confer upon the women of a State who do not want to vote that privilege or duty, whichever we may call it? And, on the other hand, if the women of a State do not want to vote, should they have the right to prevent the women of another State from voting if they want to vote?

With this thought in mind, and with the hope that the women of the country may some time in the near future have the right to vote if they want to vote, permit me to suggest that the first step in this campaign should be to teach the women to want to vote, and after they have been taught to want to vote the right will be given. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I present petitions favoring woman suffrage signed by many of the most estimable women of my State and home town. Whatever may be my personal view on this matter, I would be a veritable coward did I not present the petitions. I believe in the right and privilege of petition. Personally, I am frank to say, with admiration and love for woman not surpassed by any man in this Chamber or elsewhere on God's footstool, I believe it would not tend to enhance or advance the well-being of women, nor do I believe it would accrue to the well-being of this beloved land of ours.

I present these petitions, and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, these petitions, also from my Commonwealth, were handed to me by citizens of my State asking that they might be given to my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] to present. They said that in the event he was not here in time to present them they wished that I would present them. So at their request and in the name of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] I present them. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SIMMONS. In behalf of a number of most excellent women of the State of North Carolina I present a petition in favor of woman suffrage. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition presented by the Senator from North Carolina will be received and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. McLEAN. I present sundry petitions signed by a large number of women in the State which I have the honor in part to represent. I ask for their proper reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I present petitions, numerously signed by citizens of Wisconsin, in favor of the joint resolution for a constitutional amendment extending suffrage to women, and on behalf of my colleague [Mr. STEPHENSON], who is unavoidably absent, like petitions addressed to him for presentation on this occasion.

At this time, Mr. President, with the business of legislation immediately in hand pressing upon us, I shall not take the time of the Senate for more than a word. But I believe that it will be helpful for the passage of the joint resolution when it comes up regularly for consideration in this body for Senators now to declare their position upon this question.

I can not remember a time, Mr. President, when I was not in favor of extending the suffrage to women. I have always believed in cosuffrage, as I have always believed in coeducation, equality of property rights, and, in short, sir, equality of opportunity for men and women alike; that civilization is best and most advanced where men and women cooperate and mutually respect each other; that democracy is safest where its entire citizenship is most enlightened, most interested, most alert. If the ballot educates men in citizenship and is a source of power and protection to them, surely it is of equal value to women.

Government is organized, Mr. President, for the good of society; and the very basis and foundation of all organized society is the home. Every act of government reacts for good or evil upon the home. The tariff now under consideration, the laws regulating trusts, the statutes for the control and regulation of banking and currency, the laws regulating interstate transportation, and all legislation of like character strikes directly at the home life, because it bears directly upon the cost of living and the ability to maintain the home. The women of this country are as directly interested in everything pertaining to the economies of government and of the home as are the men. They understand it as well as do the men, and their potential influence, even when handicapped by the denial of the right of suffrage, has been felt in the Halls of Congress. The long struggle to write upon the statute books legislation protecting the home and the life of the family against the adulteration of food products would have been going on to this hour except for the organized effort the women of the country put back of that great reform movement.

And, so, Mr. President, just as it is essential that we should have the cooperation of the women of the country in the development of the home life, so we should have the cooperation of the women of the country in the legislation which underlies the home life and is foundational to all our social relations.

At another time, when it will more directly bear upon the passage of the joint resolution extending suffrage to women, I shall address the Senate in support of that resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. GRONNA. I present petitions numerously signed by citizens of North Dakota praying for the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 1.

Mr. President, in my State the privilege of universal suffrage has not been extended, but I believe I may be permitted to say that the potential influence of women has been felt in that State to a degree or more so than it has in any other State. Ultimately this question will be settled by the States. I have confidence that the people of my State will, when that question is presented to them, settle it with the same courage and patriotism that other questions of reform and progress have been settled.

When the question comes up for a vote in the Senate, I will give to it the same consideration that I give to other questions. I am here as a servant of the people of my State. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I also present, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is necessarily absent, due to illness in his family, another petition. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate with any extended remarks.

I will say that on two former occasions the people of my State voted upon the question of granting suffrage to women. The proposition was defeated both times, but the sentiment in its favor has continued to grow steadily with the years, and it is now for the third time submitted in the form of a proposal to amend our constitution, and will be voted upon at the next general election.

I am satisfied that the measure will now carry. I am satisfied that the demand for it has grown so steadily and spread so widely throughout the State that many men upon reflection who were formerly opposed to it are now fully convinced that the principle of universal suffrage is right.

I have always voted for it. I have never believed that it would bring the millennium or work any great revolution, but I have always voted for it because I have felt that, as a principle of absolute justice, it is unfair to withhold it from intelligent women who ask for such a right upon the ground that it is a protective one, helpful to them. I shall support it again in my State, and I have no hesitation in frankly saying that I shall vote for it here.

I present a petition, not a large one, from a number of intelligent men and women of my State asking for the adoption of the joint resolution. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. PERKINS presented petitions signed by a large number of citizens of California, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented petitions of 40,000 members of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, of 75 members of the Socialist Party of Ogden, Utah, and of sundry citizens of the State of Utah, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. BRYAN presented petitions signed by a large number of women of the State of Florida, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. FLETCHER presented petitions signed by a large number of citizens of the State of Florida, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. OWEN (for Mr. GORE) presented petitions of sundry citizens of Oklahoma, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SHIVELY presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Indiana, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. THOMAS (for Mr. O'GORMAN) presented petitions signed by a large number of citizens of the State of New York, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. LODGE (for Mr. ROOT) presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition signed by Gelson Gardner, V. L. Stoddard, and a large number of citizens of the United States, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which was referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition signed by Daniel A. Hastings, Fred Larsen, and John W. Benson, of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying that certain members of the Organized Militia of the State of Washington and certain sailors of the United States Navy who participated in the recent so-called riot in the city of Seattle be dishonorably discharged from the service, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Anacortes, Wash., praying that an appropriation be made for dredging and improving Edison Slough, Skagit County, in the State of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WEEKS presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 2784) granting an increase of pension to Sidney Williams, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 2810) for the relief of the heirs of Joshua Nicholls, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented memorials of sundry citizens of Takoma Park, Md., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

Mr. STONE. From the Committee on Indian Affairs, I report back favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute the bill (S. 2711) to provide for the acquiring of station grounds by the Great Northern Railway Co. in the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and I submit a report (No. 92) thereon.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, subject to and upon compliance by the company with all the provisions of the act of March 2, 1899, entitled "An act to provide for the acquiring of rights of way by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, Indian allotments, and for other purposes," and the acts amendatory thereto of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 330), and June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 859), and the regulations issued by the Secretary of the Interior thereunder, additional station grounds adjoining the right of way of the said railway company in the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, adjacent to the village of Okanogan, in the county of Okanogan, in the said State, and at the said railway company's station known as Chilliwist, located in lots 4 and 6, section 1, township 32 north, range 25 east, Willamette meridian, in the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the extent of not to exceed 200 feet in width by a length of 3,000 feet for each of said station grounds: Provided, That if any of the lands to be acquired by the railway company under the provisions of this act shall have been tentatively selected by Indians as a part of their allotments they shall be entitled to receive, upon the approval of their allotments, the compensation for damages to said lands and improvements thereon paid by the said railway company: And provided further, That such station grounds are granted subject to the right of the United States to cross the same and the works constructed thereon with canals or water conduits of any kind, or with roadways, or with transmission lines for telephone, telegraph, or electric power, or with any other public improvements which may now or in the future be built by or under authority of the United States across such grounds; and the said company shall build and maintain at its own expense all structures that may be required at such crossing, and in accepting this grant shall release the United States from all damages which may result from the construction and use of such crossings, canals, conduits, transmission lines, and other improvements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 2860) providing a temporary method of conducting the nomination and election of United States Senators; to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

A bill (S. 2861) authorizing mineral entries on lands of the Spokane Indian Reservation, State of Washington, classified and reserved as timberlands; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 2862) for the condemnation of land in the interior of square No. 159, District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 2863) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 2864) granting an honorable discharge to William G. Lang;

A bill (S. 2865) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of David Houk; and

A bill (S. 2866) to correct the military record of William G. Lang (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2867) granting a pension to Martin Malone; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 2868) granting an increase of pension to Lucy P. Wheeler (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 2869) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Arnold (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

ELIZABETH T. BUTLER.

Mr. KERN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 145), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Elizabeth T. Butler, widow of Maj. George Butler, late a member of the Capitol police of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ROCK CREEK BRIDGE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution that will not result in any debate and for which I ask present consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not make any objection to the resolution, but after this I shall ask for the regular order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The resolution (S. Res. 144) submitted by Mr. GALLINGER was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to communicate to the Senate at the earliest practicable day all information concerning the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at Q Street NW., for which an appropriation was made in the act approved March 2, 1911, which appropriation proved to be inadequate under the plan that was submitted for bids, stating whether or not it is desirable to have a new plan made upon which fresh bids shall be invited, or whether it is feasible, without destroying the symmetry and beauty of the structure, to modify the existing plan so as to bring it within the appropriation.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). The Senator from North Carolina demands the regular order and it will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 1, strike out "25" and insert "35," and in line 2, strike out "3" and insert "6," so as to make the paragraph read:

101. Freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone, lava, and all other stone suitable for use as monumental or building stone, except marble, breccia, and onyx, not specially provided for in this section, hewn, dressed, or polished, or otherwise manufactured, 35 per cent ad valorem; unmanufactured, or not dressed, hewn, or polished, 6 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] gave notice that he would address the Senate this morning.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I desire to preface the remarks that I am now about to make on the tariff bill by the statement that the preparation of those remarks was, so far as my part of it was concerned, completed last Monday before the session of the Senate of that day. I make this statement because those who heard or may have read the address of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] on that Monday afternoon and who now hear or may hereafter read my own address may notice that there is a striking similarity of thought and expression in those two addresses on a certain question discussed by each of us.

I wish to preface my remarks by the further statement that I request my brother Senators that I be not interrupted during the presentation of my argument for any cause whatever, as I should like to have my address appear in connected form. In making this statement I am asking no more of others than I have always done for others, for during my term of service here I have only twice interrupted Senators in debate, and then each time because I knew they would like to be interrupted by me, and in each case they have afterwards thanked me for it. In my opinion the liberty of interruption in debate in this body is very greatly abused.

Mr. President, it is well known that I notified the Senate Democratic caucus that I could not vote for the Underwood tariff bill while it contained the free-sugar provision placed in it by the House and retained by the Senate Finance Committee and approved by the caucus and presented to the Senate as a Democratic Party measure.

It is also known to my brother Democrats that I expressly reserved in the caucus the right to offer amendments in the Senate, or vote for amendments offered there by others, having reference more particularly to agricultural products, while expressly stating at the same time that if such amendments were voted down I would subordinate my judgment in such matters to the party judgment, as nothing but the sugar provision of the bill would, in my opinion, justify me in refusing to vote for it as a whole, not only on account of party ties, but because I am in accord with by far the greater part of its provisions.

My reasons for refusing to vote for it without amendment of the sugar clause were given to my brother Democrats in the caucus and fully understood by them, but in justice to myself I wish these reasons to be known to the Senate as a body and to the country at large.

I hold, in the first place, that in my position as a Senator of the State of Louisiana my primary allegiance is due to that State and that I would not be justified in allowing my action to be controlled by the party caucus on any matter that concerned the vital interest of Louisiana when such acquiescence would have the effect of having me vote adversely to that vital interest.

These are the views I hold with reference to my duty to my State and to my party respectively, and by them I must abide as long as I have the honor of holding in this body the commission of the State of Louisiana.

I criticize no Senator for holding a different view as to his own duty, or even for thinking that I hold an erroneous view as to my own, but if any such there be, I ask them to remember that it is to my own State I am responsible and that I, not they, must bear the burden of that responsibility and the judgment that will be meted out to me by the people of Louisiana for my official actions here as their representative.

I hold, in the second place, that the promises I made to my people on any given question before they so highly honored me by selecting me for this position are binding on me in conscience and in honor when that question comes before me here for consideration.

I hold, in the third place, that when the people of my State have signified in an unmistakable manner their wishes on any public matter coming up for action before the body to which they have accredited me it is my bounden duty to carry out their wishes, so far as I can, and that irrespective of my own.

Having submitted these three propositions embodying my views as to the general principles which should govern my official action as a Senator of the State of Louisiana, I will now attempt to show their application to the special case under consideration.

It is hardly necessary to attempt to prove that, under my view of my duty to Louisiana, as defined by me under the first proposition, I am justified in opposing by all honorable means in my power the enactment of this bill, for I think there is no contention against the conclusion that the sugar clause of it affects the vital interest of my State most unfavorably.

It has been admitted on the floor of the House of Representatives both by Mr. HARDWICK, chairman of the Subcommittee on Ways and Means that took the first testimony on the subject, and by Mr. UNDERWOOD, the chairman of the full committee that took the last, that free sugar would destroy the Louisiana sugar industry, though both feel justified in their course on sugar because they think the general welfare will be subserved by it.

It was in recognition of this fact that President Wilson requested and obtained the three years of grace that have been accorded us, in order that those in Louisiana who have been and are still dependent on the cultivation of cane as their means of livelihood might have this time in which to try to make arrangements for their livelihood in other ways.

I appreciate this consideration on the part of the President and thank him for it in the name of the people of Louisiana principally interested, even while deeply regretting that he considered it his duty to insist on ultimate free sugar, that being legislation which in their opinion, and in my own, is neither sanctioned by the principles of necessity nor the general welfare nor justice.

On the second proposition, the proper regard for pledges made to my constituents, I wish to say that just previous to my election by the General Assembly of Louisiana in the beginning of December, 1910, that body passed a resolution inviting all candidates for the Senatorship to appear before it and give an expression of their views on national questions, with special reference to the tariff question, and the four candidates for the office appeared before the legislature and gave an expression of their views, and I now make the following quotation from my address, which was published in the Louisiana papers immediately afterwards:

> The statement published in a New Orleans paper that on last Thursday night, at a conference of my friends, I had recanted my statement of Wednesday and said I would yield in my tariff views on sugar, rice, and lumber, if necessary, to be in line with the action of a Democratic caucus, is false. Those gentlemen from every part of the State who attended that large conference know how false is the statement that I had recanted. They know that my answer to the question as to whether I was a Democrat and would abide by the action of a Democratic caucus on these matters was, that while I was a Democrat, I would never abide by the action of any caucus that might force me to strike a blow at any of the great industries of my State. This has been my unwavering position from the beginning.
> I do not feel that this is or ought to be made a test of fealty to the National Democratic Party. I hope and I believe that I will never be placed in the position where my duty to my national party will come in conflict with my duty to my people. But, if ever the time does come, those who have placed their faith in my plighted word will find that their faith was not misplaced.
> If my mother is to be stabbed, some other hand than mine must be found to wield the knife.

I will now quote an extract from my speech of acceptance after my election, which was also at once published in the Louisiana papers:

> But tariff duties must be levied. Agriculture is the great basic foundation of the prosperity of Louisiana, and it will continue to be so. Because the agriculturists of the United States generally raise more than our own people consume we are exporters of such products, and thus they do not receive the benefit of a protective tariff, while bearing so many of its unjust burdens. So, if a tariff can be levied that will help, or protect, if you please, those who follow agriculture as a livelihood, I think it should be done. In Louisiana at least two of our great soil productions can be helped or protected by a tariff duty; those two are sugar and rice.
> And so I can certainly justify myself in doing what I can in the Congress of the United States to help these great agricultural products of Louisiana. This accords with my sense of right to those producers, with my sense of duty to my State, and with my individual sentiments as well, for I am descended from a long line of agriculturists, am a son of the soil, and racy of it.
> I do not see why party fealty should prevent me from standing by these great industries of Louisiana, but, as I have said, if it does, national fealty must yield to State fealty, as it did in the time of the Civil War.

These were some of the words spoken by me to the members of the General Assembly of Louisiana, including three who honored me by their votes then who have since been themselves honored by being elected to the Congress of the United States, and who further honored me by coming from their Chamber to-day to listen to these remarks.

It will be noted that in my preelection address I unequivocally declared that I would not only stand for a duty on sugar, but would not abide by the action of any Democratic caucus that sought to restrain me on this question.

It will be further noted that in my postelection address I reiterated this statement, thus doubly binding myself.

It seems to me that every member of this body should readily recognize the fact that under these circumstances I can not vote for the passage of the present bill while it carries the free-sugar provision without personal dishonor and the attendant loss of my own self-respect, as well as the respect of the people of my State and of my brother Senators, all of whom now understand my situation.

On the third proposition, the voice of the people of Louisiana expressing their views on the subject, I will say that in the first days of June, 1912, a convention of the Democratic Party of the State of Louisiana, composed of delegates from every part of the State, met in its capital city of Baton Rouge to select delegates to the approaching National Democratic convention at Baltimore and to adopt a platform setting forth the principles of the State Democracy of Louisiana.

That convention overwhelmingly refused to adopt a minority report of the committee on resolutions, signed by one member thereof, declaring for a "tariff for revenue only" and overwhelmingly adopted the following resolution:

We are in favor of a revision of the tariff which will meet the revenue requirements of the National Treasury and will abate the protective system with the least possible abatement of our business fabric.

We hold that the tariff is a tax paid by the consumer, but in reducing it to a purely revenue basis we would not sanction the injustice of crudely remodeling the tariff schedules in such a way as to force any one industry, previously dependent on the tariff, to sell in a free-trade market and buy in a protected one; nor would we contemplate the turning of the American market over to manipulation of foreign tariffs and export bounties, where the results would be the wiping out of an American industry by a temporary lowering of prices and a subsequent raising of prices under foreign control for foreign enrichment.

We espouse these principles not solely because they would forbid the heavy and cruel blow proposed against Louisiana, but because they are applicable to any industry in any State and because they are the necessary guides to all just men striving for a tariff reform which will destroy evils for the consumer without creating them for the producer.

It is evident that this platform resolution of the Democratic Party of Louisiana is an unmistakable expression of hostility to the free-sugar provision of the present tariff bill, the resolution specially referring to the free-sugar bill that had passed the House and was then pending in the Senate.

And so I feel that under each and all of the three propositions laid down by me in the beginning as a guide for my action in this matter, I am forbidden to vote for this tariff measure unless amended by striking out the provision removing all duties from sugar at the end of three years.

Aside from these special reasons which would prevent me as a representative of the State of Louisiana from favoring this new-fangled Democratic doctrine of free sugar, I can say with perfect sincerity that I would feel most hostile to the abolition of the sugar duty, not only because of my well-known and often-expressed views in favor of legislation that would advance the agricultural interests of any part of my country, but because of the tariff policy of the Democratic Party, with which I have been identified since I was old enough to cast my first vote.

To me it seems almost incredible that the great political party which has always stood so steadfastly for the doctrine of a revenue tariff should now appear willing to abandon its settled and unassailable doctrine on the question of a duty on sugar.

The saying that sugar is an ideal article for a revenue tax is trite and has never been disputed, and no Democrat, not even a free-sugar Democrat, can be found hardy enough to deny it, even at this time.

This is due to the admitted facts of the case, viz, the universal consumption of the article, the consequent fairness of the distribution of the tax among all classes of the people, the ease and certainty of its collection by the Government, and the fact that three-fourths of the duty goes into the Government Treasury for the benefit of all the people, while only one-fourth inures to the protection of the sugar producer.

For these reasons sugar has always been held in the past by the Democratic Party to be a subject most eminently fitted for the imposition of a revenue tax, and it is just as much fitted for it in the present and for the future as it has been in the past.

I have briefly condensed above the reasons why the Democratic Party has in the past so steadfastly upheld the justice of a tax on sugar, but they are given far better in the language of the minority members of the Finance Committee in their report submitted to the Senate on July 27, 1912, on the Underwood free-sugar bill, which had passed the House, the said minority report advocating a reduction of 33⅓ per cent from the existing rate in the Payne-Aldrich bill and abolishing the refiners' differential and Dutch standard, while the Republican majority report advocated the retention of the present duty, and also abolished the refiners' differential and Dutch standard, which operates solely in the interest of the cane-sugar refiners, giving neither protection to the producers nor revenue to the Government.

I quote herewith such part of the minority report as is applicable to the point:

The tariff on sugar is peculiarly a revenue tariff. Very much the major part of the tax levied upon the consumer of sugars and sweets goes actually into the United States Treasury for the use and behoof and benefit of the American people. A minor part of the tax goes into the pockets of the producers. Upon numberless articles in the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill the duties are either prohibitive or very nearly prohibitive, or highly exploitive, and in all these cases very much the major part of the tax levied upon the consumer goes into the pockets of the American producers, a special and favored class, and very scantily and sometimes not at all reaches the Treasury. In the next place, the majority of the tariff schedules which have been adopted by the House and sent over to the Senate during this Congress make a reduction of about one-third. In the face of its record in connection with other bills, the House reduced the duties upon sugars and the products of cane and sugar beets 100 per cent; in other words, entirely canceled the existing duties. It seemed to us that this was not in keeping with the promises of Democratic platforms to reduce present protective duties "gradually" toward and finally to a revenue basis. We have seen no reason why sugar should have been excepted from the general policy advocated by the Democratic Party and believed by us to be right.

Again, in levying an import duty upon sugar for revenue purposes, we are imitating the time-honored and time-justified precedents.

This report was signed by such stalwart tariff-for-revenue Democrats as Joseph W. Bailey, F. M. SIMMONS, W. J. STONE, JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, JOHN W. KERN, and CHARLES F. JOHNSON, all of whom, with the exception of the first named, are still members of the Senate.

In this report they enunciated the soundest Democratic doctrine and imitated, as they correctly said, "the time-honored and time-justified precedents" of the Democratic Party.

No Democrat in this body dreamed of denying the absolute correctness of this statement considered as an exposition of Democratic doctrine.

It was true then, and it is as true now as it was then.

If it is not correct Democratic doctrine, I wish some Democratic Senator to rise in his seat after I have concluded, or at later thereafter as he sees fit, and show wherein it is incorrect.

These words were quoted by my colleague from Louisiana in his great and unanswerable argument on this question addressed to the Senate on June 2 last, but I choose to repeat them in this address, for they can not be repeated too often in these times of dangerous Democratic departure from Democratic doctrine, and they should be burned into the brains and hearts and consciences of Democratic Senators.

Small wonder is it that in the debate on the sugar bill on that same 27th of July, 1912, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], than whom no member of this body is better posted on the history of the Democratic Party, including necessarily its tariff policy, should have said:

There is not the slightest anticipation in the mind of any intelligent man that it will be placed on the free list, not even if a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House and a Democratic President come into power.

His thorough knowledge of Democratic principles in regard to the tariff fully justified the Senator from Mississippi in making this statement, but we now see verified the truth of the saying: "It is the unexpected that happens."

I am not false to the principles of the Democratic Party in refusing to follow it along the strange and devious pathway it is now pursuing with regard to the tariff on sugar.

I am true to those principles, and it is the Democratic Party itself that is seeking to depart from them.

I am no traitor to the Democratic Party because loyalty to my State forbids me to vote for this bill in its present form.

Not since the time I cast my first vote in 1868 for the National Democratic Party have I ever faltered in my allegiance to its nominees.

More than once in the dark days of Louisiana politics, days that have happily passed forever, I have taken my life in my hands at the polls in the effort to aid their election, and twice during that stormy time I was arrested by United States marshals and carried to the city of New Orleans, 250 miles from my home, charged with alleged violations of the Civil Rights Bill, though my experience in these matters was the experience of hundreds of other Democrats in my State and probably in her sister Southern States.

Not in all that time have I failed to vote in any election, and never have I scratched a Democratic ticket—national, congressional, State, district, parochial, or municipal.

There have been times when my judgment was strongly opposed to certain policies of the National Democratic Party, notably in 1896 on the free-silver question.

But while to the knowledge of all in my community I was a Gold Democrat, it never entered into my mind to think of leaving the regular Democratic Party to train with those Democrats who followed another standard, although its followers embraced many of the ablest and best men of my State.

On the contrary, I presided over the parish ratification meeting held in my city and told them there was only one National Democratic Party in the country and its nominees were Bryan and Sewall and not Palmer and Buckner.

And I did my best to steady my people against the tide of opposition that was running high among the business interests of my State, and when the election came, against the remonstrance of my family and friends, I rose from a bed of severe illness of many days' duration and was driven to the polls in order to deposit my ballot, accompanied by my family physician, with his hand on my pulse and assisting my tottering steps, in the discharge of what I considered a political duty, and hoping to set a good example to others.

And since I have been a Member of this body I have attended every Democratic caucus held and have never failed to vote in every respect in accordance with the expressed wish of those caucuses, except in the solitary instance of the sugar tariff bill of last year, when I refused to vote for a reduction of 33⅓ per cent, under which the sugar industry of my State could not survive.

I have the right to say that in so far as concerns the performance of duty to my party at all times in the past my conscience is void of offense.

And the people of Louisiana have at all times retained their allegiance to the National Democratic Party in spite of the fact that the economic policies of that party were not as favorable to the development of their great material resources and industries as were the economic policies of the Republican Party.

Yet I have no hesitation in saying that the National Democratic Party owes more to the State of Louisiana than the State of Louisiana owes to the National Democratic Party.

Louisiana received no aid from the National Democratic Party when she overthrew carpetbag and negro rule and established the right of the intelligence and virtue of the State to control it instead of its ignorance and corruption.

Through the courage and determination of her white people she established white supremacy in the face of national Republican domination and with Federal bayonets at the polls, stationed there in the attempt to coerce her people, and she maintained it under successive national Republican administrations, and she will maintain it forever, no matter what party may be in power at Washington.

Happily for Louisiana and for the country at large, the time has long passed when the Republican Party had either the ability or the inclination to coerce the States of the South, and the time will never come again in the history of this country.

The great majority of the present generation in Louisiana have grown up since the dark days of reconstruction and know nothing of it save by tradition.

And the only difference they have seen in the State, arising from changes of national administrations, is the difference of a few Federal officeholders.

They have seen the hand of the General Government under Republican administrations always stretched out to afford them relief in their times of distress due to pestilence and floods, and they know that the National Democratic Party, if it had been in power, could have done no more for them in this regard.

They know nothing of what their fathers endured in the 10 years that followed the Civil War, and their thoughts are of the present material conditions of their State and not of the animosities of the past.

But we, the fathers, remember, and we have constantly striven to steady the impulses of the sons in favor of the National Democratic Party and keep them true to the faith.

And now they are to be slain by the party in which they have placed their trust and for which the people of Louisiana have given of their time, labor, money, and even their blood in the earlier days, and of their time, labor, and money in the later days to establish in power; and when the fair form of Louisiana has been pierced by this poisoned shaft, like the stricken eagle of which the poet tells, she can view in her body, while writhing in agony, the fatal arrow tipped with a feather from her own wing.

It is hard; very, very hard.

But the Democratic House has decreed free sugar and the Democratic Finance Committee and Democratic Senate caucus have ratified the action of the House, and the blow will probably fall on Louisiana, unless the consciences of some Senators are quickened sufficiently to make them stay their hand before the final act of the tragedy is concluded.

Some alleviation of the blow is given in consequence of the three years of grace granted at the instance of President Wilson, and in allowing the present duty to remain until March, 1914, a concession urgently requested by both the eastern cane-sugar refiners and the Louisiana cane-sugar and western beet-sugar producers; and for this much we are thankful.

In this connection I wish in behalf of the people of Louisiana to thank the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] for having vainly tried in both the majority subcommittee and full committee to keep a duty on sugar, and while we regret that he would not vote for the retention of the duty in the Democratic Senate caucus, we appreciate his having done as much for us as he did, he being the only Senator, so far as I am advised, who so voted in either the sub or full committee.

And I wish to give in the name of the State of Louisiana special thanks to my honored and respected friend, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who was the only southern Senator, and, indeed, the only Senator from any State not interested in the sugar industry, who voted to the last in the caucus against free sugar and only yielded to its dictate when further resistance to its evident will was unavailing, he being moved in his action not only by sympathy for his fellow Democrats of Louisiana, but by his knowledge that this step was not only a departure from the true principles of the Democratic Party but was in his judgment a grave economic error as well.

I wish to assure him now that while he has long commanded in the past the respect of my people on account of the great force as well as the sterling integrity of his character, in the future that respect will be combined with gratitude and affection.

No attempt has been made and none probably will be made on this floor to show that this act of the Democratic Party is not a most radical departure from its "time-honored and time-justified precedents."

The reports of both the House and Senate majority committees on the reasons for this change are singularly meager, the first body contenting itself with saying:

> The action of the committee with regard to sugar shows an appreciation of the commercial conditions involved and the committee's desire to respond to the public demands for free sugar, while the latter gave no reasons at all.

Considering that they were all Democrats it is not surprising that they preferred to give as little discussion as possible to the subject.

An effort has been made, however, on this floor, to prove that the Baltimore platform of the Democratic Party calls for free sugar, and to justify this legislation on that ground. This is a very far-fetched conclusion, but some justification must be sought for this sudden departure from "the time-honored and time-justified precedents" of the Democratic Party, and this is a case of "any port in a storm."

I not only deny that the Democratic platform calls, even by inference, for free sugar, but claim that, on the contrary, its spirit, if not its letter, clearly forbids such legislation, though I admit that under its letter, though not its spirit, a material reduction of the duty on sugar is justifiable.

The statement therein that "material reductions be speedily made upon the necessaries of life" would in its letter apply to the duty on sugar, assuming it to be a necessary of life and admitting it to be such for the purpose of argument; but we must consider that the spirit of these words was intended to apply to such necessaries of life as have greatly advanced in price during the last 10 years, and therefore are conducive to the present high cost of living; but this can not apply to sugar, because it is the one necessary of life that has steadily lowered in price during that time while all others have increased.

But at the utmost it could not be claimed that this clause provided for more than a material reduction in the duty on sugar.

The positive inhibition against free sugar is found in the clause:

> We recognize that our system of tariff taxation is intimately connected with the business of the country, and we favor the ultimate attainment of the principles we advocate by legislation that will not injure or destroy legitimate industry.

If the Louisiana cane and Western beet-sugar industry of this country that has been built up under "our system of tariff taxation," and which represents over $100,000,000 of capital invested in factories alone, to say nothing of land, teams, and implements, and which in cultivation and harvesting alone gives employment to more than 200,000 laborers, and directly or indirectly contributes to the support of 2,000,000 people of the United States, is not a legitimate industry, I should like to know what is.

My colleague, in his address already referred to, has pointed out the immense importance of the industry in those dependencies of the United States—Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, the representatives of the first two named insisting that their prosperity is entirely dependent on the production of sugar and that the abolition of the duty thereon would bankrupt them through the consequent destruction of the industry, while the representatives of the last named insist that they can not continue the industry, which is a large and growing one with them, without the aid of a duty; and I shall not dwell further on that phase of the question.

I repeat that the Democratic platform never demanded expressly or inferentially the total abolition of the duty on sugar.

The platform committee of the Baltimore convention was composed of a representative from each State, and that committee appointed from its ranks a subcommittee of 11 to draft the platform for submission to the full committee, which in turn submitted it to the convention for ratification.

That subcommittee consisted, among others, of Senators KERN, O'GORMAN, WALSH, MARTIN of Virginia, POMERENE, and CLARKE of Arkansas, all of whom are still Members of this body.

It is fairly safe to assume that these gentlemen knew what they meant by the language they used and certainly safe to assume that they understood what they meant better than do those who were not members of the committee and had nothing to do with framing the resolutions.

If any of these Senators considered at the time they framed this platform that it demanded the total abolition of the duty on sugar, I would like to have them say so at the conclusion of my remarks or at any time thereafter that may suit their convenience.

I appprehend that none of them will so state, believing that the most liberal construction of the language by any of them would be that it left the matter open for the future consideration of the Democratic Party.

We know from what has previously been said on this floor that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], who acted as a member of the full committee, considered that the language committed the party against free sugar, and he preached that interpretation of it throughout the campaign.

We know that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who was a member of the subcommittee, held and proclaimed the same view in his campaign, and, as was very properly stated on this floor by the Senator from Mississsippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on the 15th of May last: "There sits before me the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who made several campaigns in the West in the bravest possible manner for the Democratic Party, and he was faced by his opponent in one of those campaigns, who said: 'If the Democrats came into power they would put sugar upon the free list.' The Senator denied it, and he had every right to deny it."

Through the address of my colleague on May 15 last, previously referred to, we have the statement of Congressman BROUSSARD of Louisiana, who will succeed me in this body in 1915, and who was himself a member of that subcommittee of 11 selected to draft the platform.

Mr. BROUSSARD, who was particularly interested in the formation of a platform that would not indicate a spirit of hostility to the great sugar industry of his State, and who I feel morally sure was placed on that subcommittee because of the fact that he represented the greatest sugar-producing district of Louisiana (though I have no warrant from him to make this statement), and who had exceptional opportunities for knowing the mind of the committee on that question, not only most emphatically denied in that statement that the language of the platform was intended to convey the idea that the Democratic Party advocated free sugar, but asserts positively that, on the contrary, the committee refused to consider the telegrams with which it was being bombarded at the time by Frank C. Lowry, agent and representative of the Federal Sugar Refining Co., asking the committee to include in the platform a plank for free sugar.

Mr. BROUSSARD says further that the ardent plea of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] for free sugar made before the drafting of the platform met with no response from either the subcommittee that drafted the platform or from the full committee.

It is absolutely certain that Mr. BROUSSARD was convinced of the truth of this statement.

He was a Wilson delegate at the Baltimore convention, and was very largely instrumental in influencing the Democratic Party of Louisiana to select a number of Wilson delegates.

He returned to Louisiana and assured the people of that State that in the event of the election of Gov. Wilson through the success of the Democratic Party the great sugar industry of Louisiana would neither be destroyed nor materially injured, and dwelt on the platform declaration of the Baltimore convention as an evidence of the correctness of his statement.

Col. Robert Ewing, national committeeman from Louisiana, like Mr. BROUSSARD, a strong Wilson man, and, like him, powerfully instrumental in securing the selection of Wilson delegates and who went to the convention as a Wilson delegate himself, and who had great opportunities of knowing what might be called "the secret history" of the Baltimore convention, was also fully satisfied that under the platform of the party the sugar industry of his State would be safe and he, too, preached that doctrine to her people, never believing that anything more than a reduction of the present duty would be possible under a Democratic administration.

Some of the largest sugar planters of Louisiana went to the Baltimore convention as Wilson delegates and they returned home entirely satisfied that their industry was safe.

The press of Louisiana, that discussed the situation, fully agreed with this view and throughout the length and breadth of the State not a single newspaper expressed a contrary view.

The people of Louisiana relied on the representations of their delegates to the Baltimore convention and on the statements of the press and on the assurance given them by the language of the platform.

The speech of acceptance of the Democratic nominee further fortified their minds on this question and no public word that fell from his lips during the campaign was calculated to remove the impression they had received.

In this connection I wish to say that I feel morally sure the presidential nominee of the Democratic Party did not expect at the time of his nomination or during his campaign to become an advocate of free sugar. I feel morally sure that his determination on this point was reached at some period after his election.

I have no warrant from him or anyone speaking for him for this conclusion of mine, but I must believe it to be a correct conclusion unless he states it is an erroneous one.

I know of no clearer exposition of this question, considered with reference to the meaning of the Democratic platform in relation to sugar and the position of the people of Louisiana on the sugar question than that given by Col. Robert Ewing, national committeeman from Louisiana, heretofore alluded to, in an editorial written by him in one of his newspapers, the New Orleans Daily States, on 24th March last and which is reproduced in its entirety below:

SUGAR AND THE PARTY PLATFORM.

Our excellent contemporary, the Mobile Register, ridicules the Picayune's suggestion that a "free-sugar" bill in the House involves any conspiracy against the sugar industry.

"It is well to remember," says the Register, "that the party platform was written plainly and put before the people, and the people knew what they were doing when they elected the party to full control of the Government."

That is quite true, but our Mobile contemporary will find nothing in the platform or the speeches of the Democratic nominee that either imposes on the party an obligation to put sugar on the free list or would justify it in action certain to be destructive to the industry.

The inner history of the Baltimore convention has never been written; but the official records show that, although Senator JAMES, the permanent chairman, declared for free sugar, the convention in its platform eliminated sugar by name and put therein no language which even by implication could be construed into a pledge or promise to strike it from the dutiable list.

What the convention said in substance at Denver was that all industries should stand on the same relative level and that no reduction should be made that would paralyze or destroy any industry. At Baltimore it reaffirmed that doctrine.

President Wilson in his speeches followed literally the language and the spirit of the platform. He declared unequivocally for a revision downward of the tariff duties. But nowhere did he assert a duty ought to be removed or so radically cut as to carry with it extinction of any industry.

Louisiana is making no demand for a violation of the party pledges. It is not seeking to stand in the way of a vindication of party pledges. It could not afford to do so without inviting inevitable disaster. It is only asking that its industry shall not be singled out, discriminated against and destroyed, when that industry produces an article which the Democratic Party from its birth has considered an ideal article on which to levy tribute to meet the expenses of the Government, and when in the latest expression of the party and its candidate we find the solemn pledge that revision shall be gradual and fair, so as not to bring about commercial, industrial, or financial cataclysms.

Louisiana opposition to free sugar involves no sacrifice or surrender of Democratic principle. It is in perfect harmony with party tradition and contemporaneous party expression.

Louisiana does not expect to see sugar picked out for special favor by the retention of the duty now imposed on the foreign product. It expects to see sugar cut. But it is appealing for fair play, for equal treatment with the industries of other States, for a lowering of the rate that will still leave the planter a margin of profit, at least until there is opportunity for a readjustment of agricultural conditions.

Our Mobile contemporary is not within the record when it suggests, inferentially, that free sugar is a party pledge. The "party platform was written plainly." Louisiana is perfectly willing to abide the result if the platform is carried out in its letter and spirit.

I quote an extract from another editorial in the same paper headed "Louisiana and the Tariff" appearing in its issue of June 2, 1913:

LOUISIANA AND THE TARIFF.

What Louisiana Democrats ask, therefore, is not a concession of protection for the sugar industry, but a mere abiding by the pledges of the party in the last campaign and the carrying out of a time-honored Democratic policy of preserving sugar as a revenue producer.

The language of National Committeeman Robert Ewing correctly represents the attitude of the people of Louisiana on the question of a tariff on sugar.

They understood the possibility or even probability of a reduction of the duty and they were prepared to accept it, assuming it to be a reasonable reduction that would permit the industry to survive.

They did not expect it to be specially favored over other industries, but they certainly did not expect it to be specially singled out for destruction by the Democratic Party as is now sought to be done.

They would submit to the present reduction, and strive bravely and intelligently to make a living under it, if only the duty would be permitted to continue.

And the deductions and conclusions of Col. Ewing as to the meaning of the tariff plank of the Democratic platform are such as would be most naturally drawn by any unbiased person of ordinary intelligence who had no personal or political interest in seeking to twist the meaning to coincide with his own wishes.

My people hold, and their Senators hold with them, that the destruction of their industry through a removal of the duty is not only a cruel injustice to them but a violation both of the party platform and of the settled tariff policy of the party, and many thousands of voters in the country will claim and believe that their votes for the Democratic Party were obtained under false pretenses.

The circumstances attending this complete reversal of the policy of the Democratic Party on the question of a tariff on sugar make it all the harder for those who must suffer on account of that reversal, for it is well known to all who have posted themselves on the subject, though all of them may not be willing to admit it, that the agitation for free sugar which has culminated in the present action of the Democratic Party was begun and carried forward to successful completion by the group of eastern cane-sugar refiners that I call the American Sugar Trust, composed of the American Sugar Refining Co., the Federal Sugar Refining Co., the Arbuckle people, and two or three other corporations, none of whom cultivate either sugar cane or sugar beets in this country.

I know that the name of "Sugar Trust" was appplied originally to the American Sugar Refining Co., the most powerful of these concerns, and that some of the others, and also some Democrats, would be unwilling to admit that the others are a part of the "trust," but I claim that for all practical purposes they have been in a combination for years.

It is also well known to all who have read the testimony before the various committees, though all of them may not be willing to admit it, that these cane-sugar refiners are united in their demand for either free sugar or a large reduction in the present duty. The American Sugar Refining Co., on account of its large sugar holdings in Cuba, does not wish perhaps for absolute free sugar because it would then cease to receive the benefit of the 20 per cent Cuban preferential it now enjoys, and would be content with a heavy cut, but even that company would prefer free sugar to a retention of the present rate.

It is also well known to all who have read the testimony, though all of them may not be willing to admit it, that the reason why this group of refiners desires either free sugar or a great reduction in the rate of duty is because of the tremendous and ever-increasing development of the beet-sugar industry of the Western States, that has been competing with them in the sale of sugar and forced their prices down.

They were forced to admit this on the witness stand, and yet some Democrats seem willing to believe that these people were actuated by the desire to reduce the price of sugar to the consuming public.

Four years ago, when this agitation for free sugar was begun by these refiners, there was no complaint by the American consumers on account of the price of sugar. They knew the price was low, knew that the price had fallen while the price of other necessaries of life had steadily risen, and they were not complaining at paying 5 cents per pound for the finest white refined sugar.

The refiners did not care about the Louisiana product, for they used that themselves, it being principally what is technically called "raw sugar."

But the beet-sugar industry of the West turned out ready for consumption the same grade of refined sugar as they did, and was constantly increasing its output until it was encroaching on what these eastern refiners were pleased to designate in their testimony as "our territory," meaning the territory east of the Mississippi River.

It became necessary to check this strong competition, which, as they admit, was reducing their profits too greatly.

And so this agitation was started, being conducted by the Federal Sugar Refining Co., of which Mr. C. A. Spreckels was the head, under the supervision of its sales agent, Mr. Lowry, fraudulently pretending to be the "Committee of Wholesale Grocers" of the United States, which fraud was finally exposed through the testimony given before the Hardwick committee.

And by representations to the people that they would get sugar from 1½ to 2 cents per pound cheaper under free sugar they succeeded in working up the sentiment in its favor that the Democratic Party thinks it would be good political policy at the present time to defer to, even at the cost of the subversion of party principle.

The testimony on these points has been detailed by my colleague and by other Senators who have preceded me in debate, and I will not repeat it here.

And what will be the result of this action of the Democratic Party, so ardently desired by this Cane Sugar Trust? Certainly the admitted destruction of the Louisiana industry and also of the western industry if its representatives are to be believed; but if not entirely destroyed, at least partially so, and its further development permanently checked, so that it will no longer be a successful competitor of this Eastern Cane Sugar Trust that I have alluded to, forcing it to lower its prices to the American consumers.

And then what will result? By every law of business that governs in such cases and by the experience of the past this Cane Sugar Trust will raise its prices when the competition against it is removed.

It will no longer fear that the advent of the beet-sugar crop on the scene of action in a time of scarcity will cause it to lower its prices from 1½ to 2 cents per pound, as it did in 1911. It will be in supreme control of the market, its only competitor having been killed by the action of the Democratic Party, and the consuming public will be at its mercy.

But it seems to be the policy of the Democratic Party at this time to pay far more regard to the interests of the eastern cane-sugar refiners than to the interests of the American cane and beet sugar producers, and to defer entirely to the opinion of the refiners as to the effect of free sugar that they were demanding, ignoring entirely the opinion of the producers.

Thus in the report of the majority on the House free-sugar bill of last year the opinion of Mr. Claus Spreckels alone as to the desirability of free sugar is quoted, he arguing for it, of course.

Likewise, in the same report he is quoted to prove that the price to the American consumer would be reduced by the full amount of the duty.

The report is very unfair in attempting to prove the same thing by Mr. Willett, the sugar expert, by quoting a fragmentary statement of his testimony.

Mr. Willett can only be fairly judged by his last expression on the subject, which was that the abolition of the duty might reduce the price here at times, and at other times it would not, but that if the domestic production was destroyed the American price would necessarily be set by the world price, which was often higher that here; and that the only certain way to make a permanent reduction of price here was to increase the domestic production, the increase of the domestic production being more to the interest of the American consumer than the abolition of the duty.

This statement was fully set forth by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in his recent address to the Senate, and I will not quote it here.

The report says "the industrial position of refining requires primary consideration."

Certainly, in so far as the position of the eastern cane-sugar refiners is concerned, they received "primary consideration" in the last sugar-tariff bill and in the present one. They have been given all they asked, and they could not well expect more.

This is the same Mr. Claus Spreckels who contributed $5,000 to the Democratic campaign fund last year, just 50 times what I felt able to contribute, and then compelled to give it in two monthly installments; but he had a great special interest to be subserved by the success of the Democratic Party, while I had only the general interest of a citizen.

Moreover, he naturally felt sore against the Republican Party, it being through that party he had been sued to return to the Government $119,000 of the sum it claimed his company had defrauded it out of through false sugar weights, as has been shown by my colleague, and besides he knew he could not expect free sugar from the Republican Party. How much more was subscribed by the Sugar Trust under various names I do not know.

It can safely be assumed that these eastern refiners will contribute heavily to the next national Democratic campaign fund, for if gratitude does not compel them to do so, self-interest certainly will.

The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee very plainly showed that his sympathies were with the eastern refiners and against the great and growing beet-sugar interests of this country by his remarks in the House last May when he said the beet-sugar people were after taxing the American people in order to finally bring their sugar to the Atlantic seaboard and drive out all competition.

But suppose they did drive the eastern sugar trust out of business, which is the very danger the refiners fear from the expanding beet-sugar industry?

They can only do it by underselling them; that is, by giving the consumers cheaper sugar than the trust could give them, and I thought cheaper sugar was the party slogan.

The sugar-beet people, operating 500 or 1,000 factories by that time in at least 20 States, could not form a trust as these half dozen cane-sugar refiners have done and can always do.

But if it was possible for the beet-sugar people operating over so great an area to form a trust and put up the price of sugar they could at any time be curbed by abolishing the duty; but if the domestic industry is destroyed it can not be renewed readily and the eastern refiners could not be restrained in their extortion because sugar would be free already.

And if any interest is to be destroyed, which is best to destroy—the business of the eastern refiners, who, as my colleague told you, produce nothing and employ only 10,000 men, or the great sugar-beet industry, producing all its product in field and factory and giving employment to hundreds of thousands of people in farm and factory work?

Think of the possible result to this country if this great necessary of life, the production of which all other countries so sedulously foster, should be no longer produced here and we should have a war with a strong foreign power! All our sugar would have to be brought from over seas and a stronger naval power than ourselves could prevent its transportation. Owing, I am very sorry to say, to the action of the Democratic Party during the last two years, we are falling so far behind in naval preparation that at the present rate we will become a fifth-rate power in four years, inferior even to Japan. Is not this food for thought?

Mr. Willett is undoubtedly right in claiming that the increase of production will bring about the decrease of price to the American consumer; and I deny the assertion that the people of Louisiana are enriching themselves at the expense of the remainder of the people.

I claim that on the contrary they are assisting in keeping down the price of sugar in this country through their production of it, a production which would greatly expand in Louisiana if there was some stability in the sugar-tariff question.

Can it be supposed that the price of an article in a country will decrease on account of the decrease of its production in that country?

Yet that is the theory on which the free-sugar advocates in the Democratic Party seem to be working.

I am not fighting free sugar solely because it is a Louisiana product and because the destruction of the industry there will inflict incalculable damage on my State—damage from which it will take her long years to recover and from which she will not recover in my lifetime.

I am not a sectionalist. I wish for the prosperity of all parts of my country, and I am unwilling to see any part of it suffer.

I stood on this floor in 1911 fighting against the Canadian reciprocity treaty because it was unjust to the farming interests of some parts of the country, though not injuring any agricultural product of Louisiana, and said that I stood for the agricultural interests of every section of this country—North, South, East, and West—and that the interests of the wheat and oat and barley growers of the Northwestern border States and of the Middle West, and of the dairy producers of New York and Vermont would receive from me the same consideration that I would extend to the agricultural interests of Louisiana or any Southern State.

And even if Louisiana should be injured, I would wish other States to be uninjured.

After seeking unavailingly in the Senate Democratic caucus to have the free-sugar provision of the bill stricken out, so that the duty could permanently remain at 1 cent per pound, I voted for the resolution of another Senator fixing the permanent duty at one-half cent per pound after May, 1916, saying to the caucus that I knew the Louisiana industry could not live under that rate of duty, but even if the cane-sugar industry had to die I wished the beet-sugar industry to live if possible, not only because it was a great agricultural interest of the West, but because in its survival lay the only hope of salvation of the American public from the domination of the American Sugar Trust, composed of the group of eastern cane-sugar refiners.

No; I wish to contribute as well as I can to the prosperity of the agricultural interests of every part of my country as well as that of my own State, and where they can be helped by the imposition of a duty on foreign products that compete with their own I am always ready to give it to them.

And therefore I am glad that the citrus-fruit growers of Florida have been given protection by this bill, even though the Senators from that State are willing to see the Louisiana sugar industry destroyed.

And I do not stop at agricultural interests, although they appeal to me more closely than do manufacturing interests, for, as I said in that same Canadian reciprocity speech that I have previously alluded to, I did not wish to see destroyed a single industry of my country that was assisting in her development and giving employment to her citizens, and therefore I am glad that the cotton manufacturers of Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia also have been given protection by this bill, even though the Senators from those States are willing to see the Louisiana sugar industry destroyed.

And as no warrant has been given by the platform of the Democratic Party to pass a free-sugar bill, so has no warrant been given it to do so by the vote of the American people at the last national election, nor for that matter was any indorsement given by that vote to the Democratic theory of a tariff for revenue only.

The Democrats did not win on the tariff issue, though in certain localities that issue contributed to their success.

I hear Senators occasionally say on this floor that the verdict of the people last year was against protection and the doctrine has been repudiated by the country. In the face of the vote I marvel how such statements can be made.

The returns show that the combined Republican and Progressive vote outnumbered the Democratic vote by more than 1,250,000, and we know that not less than three-quarters of a million regular Republicans voted the Democratic ticket just in order to defeat Col. Roosevelt in States where it was not possible for the Republicans to win, and the Democratic presidential ticket received a majority vote over all other candidates in only 11 out of the 48 States of the Union, all of them being Southern States.

President Wilson could most correctly say at Newark, N. J., on May 1:

> I want everybody to realize that I have not been taken in by the results of the last national election. The country did not go Democratic in November. It was impossible for it to go Republican, because it could not tell what kind of Republican to go.

And likewise Speaker CHAMP CLARK spoke correctly when, in a speech delivered in Washington on June 2, he said, speaking of the Democratic Party:

> We are in power by a 2,000,000 minority.

I have heard remarks on this floor to the effect that the Democrats in their tariff policy are embodying the views of the Progressive Party also, and quoting its platform declaration of condemnation of the Payne-Aldrich bill; but they seem not to be familiar with or ignore that part of the Progressive platform which unequivocally indorses the principle of a tariff for protection in these words:

> We believe in a protective tariff which shall equalize conditions of competition between the United States and foreign countries both for the farmer and the manufacturer and which shall maintain for labor an adequate standard of living, and also unequivocally denounced the tariff policy of the Democratic Party in these words:

> The Democratic Party is committed to the destruction of the protective system through a tariff for revenue only, a policy which would inevitably produce widespread industrial and commercial disaster.

It was not the belief of the American people in the tariff policy of the Democratic Party that elected its candidate, but the split in the Republican Party that gave him a plurality election.

Whether the Democratic Party will succeed next time depends on two facts—the practical working of the new tariff law and the ability of the Republicans to get together again.

If the new law works well, the Democrats may succeed even if the Republican breach is healed. If it is not healed, the Democrats will certainly win; but if it is healed and the law works injuriously to the interests of the country, then the Democrats will surely lose.

I, however, now venture the prediction that in the event of Democratic defeat in the next national election that party will never again declare for a tariff for revenue only, but will sacrifice its tariff policy on that subject then just as it is sacrificing it now on sugar, and for the same reason, the hope of profiting politically thereby.

There are many shades of belief in this country on the question of the tariff, ranging from high tariff to free trade, though the latter is not practicable now; but certainly those who believe in a tariff for revenue only are necessarily obliged to be free traders if they could find a way to pay the expenses of the Government without the imposition of import duties.

In my younger days I was taught that the difference between the tariff policies of the Republican and Democratic Parties was that the former believed in a tariff for protection with incl-dental revenue, while the latter believed in a tariff for revenue with incidental protection.

That was the accepted definition of the tariff views of the opposing parties then.

Of course every tariff levied for revenue purposes solely gives just as much protection to the home article to the extent of the duty imposed on the foreign article as if it had been levied for protective purposes.

Personally I believe in a tariff for revenue but not in a tariff for revenue only, because if I believed in a tariff for revenue only, I must dismiss from my mind any consideration whatever for the help of citizens of my own country against those of foreign countries, in so far as the application of the tariff policy is concerned, and that I can not bring my mind to consent to.

I believe in imposing a moderate duty on all articles of foreign manufacture that come in competition with articles of home manufacture, a duty just high enough to enable the American producer to make a reasonable profit through the exercise of diligent and intelligent application to his business, but not high enough to permit extortion or create monopoly by destroying competition.

I do not wish to see foreigners given an advantage over Americans, and, if necessary, I do not object to giving a little more for an American than for a foreign-made article, for I do not feel that I am losing anything by helping American people to live, whether they be farmers, manufacturers, or factory workers.

Of course this doctrine should not apply where conditions of production in this country are such that the duty would lay too heavy a burden on the people of this country.

The rule of reason should prevail, but such arguments against protection per se as "raising bananas in hothouses" and "raising bananas or lemons in Maine" have no application.

I do not know whether the doctrine I have just enunciated makes me liable to the charge of being a protectionist, but if being willing to see tariff duties levied on foreign articles that will help Americans and particularly American workingmen to live decently and respectably makes me a protectionist, then I can say that I am neither ashamed nor afraid to wear the name.

Under the principles I have enunciated, sugar is one of the proper articles on which to levy a revenue duty which will also permit it to succeed in this country in competition with the foreign product, under the moderate protection thus given, and, indeed, if no sugar at all was produced in this country it would still be a proper article to tax under the Democratic theory of taxation.

I insert here an editorial from Henry Watterson's paper, the Louisville Courier-Journal, of 11th April, entitled "Tariff on sugar, true Democratic usage":

> Sugar is conceded the world over to be the ideal revenue producer. In all countries and everywhere it is both a necessity and a luxury. There is not a man, woman, or child in America that does not consume sugar in some form, whether in necessaries, such as tea, coffee, drugs, medicines, and canned foods, or in luxuries, such as cakes, desserts, pastries, confectionery, cordials, chewing gum, and the like. Sugar is consumed in greater quantities by the well-to-do than by the poor. A tax on sugar is therefore the fairest, squarest, most equitable, and just tax that can be levied. Its effects are felt least by the poor, and its burdens, if any, are borne by the rich.

These are the very considerations that induced the English Parliament to reject this year, by a decisive vote, after full debate, a proposition to remove the duty from sugar, the friends of the proposition urging the abolition of the duty on the same grounds urged here—that it was a necessary of life and would reduce the cost of living.

We all know that Col. Watterson is one of the ablest and most consistent advocates of the Democratic theory on the tariff, and no smell of protection has ever adhered to his garments.

No Democrat will dispute the correctness of the statement.

Then, why will the Democratic Party depart now from its true prineiples, for the hope of gaining a temporary political success? It may receive present benefit, but I believe it will receive permanent injury by its depature from political principle, and in this case from political morality as well.

Why should the Democratic Party, with its revenue tariff record, sacrifice the great revenue from sugar while obtaining a less revenue through protection of other articles not nearly so legitimate a source of revenue as sugar, and which are also necessaries of life, as clothing, for example?

For this bill does give protection to some manufacturers, and it is not denied.

I find no fault with that, for I wish them to live, and the Democratic platform promised that revision should be gradual.

What I protest against is the observance of the platform promise with respect to some articles and a violation of it with regard to this great industry of Louisiana.

No other State has been so discriminated against.

Coal is the principal production of West Virginia, but free coal will not close a single mine in that State; and coal was put on the free list last year on the motion of a West Virginia Senator, himself one of the largest coal operators of the State.

Zinc is a very large and very important mineral industry of Missouri, but free zinc or free lead will not begin to injure Missouri as free sugar will Louisiana.

Sugar is the most important agricultural interest of Colorado at the present time, but the destruction of it in Colorado will not disastrously injure one-third of the people that it will in Louisiana, where the people of one-half of the State directly or indirectly are dependent on its prosperity for their own, and where the other half will feel the bad results for years, due to diminished revenues to support the State expenses, resulting from decrease of values.

I have no hesitation in declaring that as an economic proposition the people of Louisiana can far better afford to live under the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill than have the sugar industry of the State destroyed.

There is not a Senator in this body who, if his State was as disastrously affected by this bill as Louisiana is, would vote for it.

He may say now he would and he may think now he would, but if he was put to the test he would shrink back and refuse to do it. If he did not, in my opinion at least, he would not be worthy to represent his State.

The destruction of the sugar industry of this country would not only greatly injure Louisiana for a long time, but the results would be seriously felt in other States.

I doubt if any one industry in this country has greater ramifications throughout its length and breadth or sets in operation more wheels of commerce in more States of the Union than does the sugar industry of Louisiana.

I have with me a statement, which I will show to any Senator desiring to see it, of the list of supplies purchased and used in the erection of a sugar factory on Georgia plantation, at Mathews, in the parish of Lafourche, La., and where they were manufactured.

I will not encumber the RECORD by giving a list of these articles, but 14 States contributed to their manufacture, viz, Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee.

And what is true of the cane-sugar factories of Louisiana in this respect is also true of the beet-sugar factories of the West.

I also have a statement, which I will show to any Senator desirous of seeing it, giving the list of supplies used in the cultivation of Georgia plantation, which I will not enumerate here, but will state they were furnished by 18 States, viz, Alabama, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin; the mules, I may add, being furnished exclusively by the free-sugar State of Missouri and the half free-sugar State of Kentucky.

And, of course, the water and rail transportation of the country are utilized in bringing to the factory site from those various States all the supplies needed for its erection and maintenance and bringing to the plantation all the supplies necessary for its cultivation and carrying from it all of its yearly produce.

Can any other industry be found which contributes more generally to the prosperity of other States of the Union? And this is the industry which has been fostered by the tariff policy of the Democratic Party from its birth and which the same party now seeks to destroy from the face of the earth.

This factory of which I have spoken cost about $400,000 to bring to its present state of efficiency, and three years from now, after it shall have manufactured its last crop of cane, its value will have been practically destroyed, for its complicated and costly machinery can not be used for other purposes and will bring only the price for which it will sell as old junk.

And what is true of this particular sugar factory in Louisiana in this respect is true of the 200 other factories in that State, aggregating some $40,000,000 in value, for it is true, as was said by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on the floor of this Chamber on the 15th day of last May, speaking of the effect of free sugar on Louisiana:

> I am perfectly willing to admit that free sugar will dismantle every sugar house in Louisiana. I know it as well as my name is John Williams.

And this confiscation of property and the resultant bankruptcy of so many, which will be its effect, is wrought by the Democratic Party, while the people of my stricken State look despairingly on while they are being slaughtered in the house of those who should be their friends.

Oh! the pity of it; oh! the shame of it!

I do not say the people of Louisiana who are directly or indirectly dependent on the sugar industry for their livelihood will never recover from this cruel and needless blow, for such is not my belief.

But they must tread the paths of adversity for long years to come while struggling to adapt themselves to the new situation, and many who have lived in comfort will die in poverty.

But in all this land there are no more courageous or resourceful men, no more devoted or self-sacrificing women, than those of my own dear native State of Louisiana.

They have proved these traits of their character time and again in the past, through the direful stress of war and pestilence and flood, and they will continue to prove them in the future.

They may be stricken to the earth for a time by this blow dealt in utter disregard of their rights, but they will rise again through the inherent virtues of their proud and self-reliant natures.

I owe to these people of my State a far higher measure of devotion than I owe to the Democratic Party.

They sent me here, relying on my plighted word given before my election, that in such an extremity as that with which I am now confronted my duty to my State would outweigh my duty to my party.

I told them after my election that they who had placed their trust in my word would never be able to say that their trust had been misplaced.

Honor and duty alike demand that I vote against this bill while it embodies the provision denounced by the State Democratic convention of Louisiana that met in June of 1912 as "a heavy and cruel blow against Louisiana."

And I repeat here and now what I said to the Legislature of Louisiana on the 5th day of December, 1910: "If my mother must be stabbed, some other hand than mine must be found to wield the knife." God helping me, I will stand by my word and by my people to the end.

Mr. GRONNA obtained the floor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is going to discuss this bill largely from the standpoint of the vast agricultural interests of the country, I think we should have more Senators here than are now present; and so I raise the question of the lack of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Bacon	Hitchcock	Page	Smoot
Bankhead	Hollis	Penrose	Sterling
Brady	James	Poindexter	Stone
Bandegee	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Sutherland
Bristow	Jones	Ransdell	Thomas
Bryan	Kenyon	Robinson	Thompson
Burton	Kern	Saulsbury	Thornton
Catron	La Follette	Shafroth	Tillman
Chamberlain	Lane	Sheppard	Townsend
Chilton	Lea	Sherman	Vardaman
Clapp	Lewis	Shields	Warren
Colt	Martin, Va.	Shively	Weeks
Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Williams
Cummins	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Gallinger	Oliver	Smith, Md.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. CATRON. Just a moment, if the Senator please. I wish to give notice that on to-morrow, after the close of morning business, I shall address the Senate on the tariff question.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, it is with some hesitation that I proceed at this time to a general discussion of the tariff bill. Were it not for the fact that the chief industry of the State which in part I have the honor to represent is most vitally and, as I believe, injuriously affected, I would at this time forego the privilege of addressing the Senate; but I desire to call attention to the fact, which I believe I can demonstrate, that the United States, the greatest commercial nation of the earth, will be among the few nations capable within their own borders of producing a sufficient amount of foodstuff to supply their own needs to discriminate against the agricultural industry. So, I say at the outset that I shall try to show that, with the exception of one or two important nations and two smaller nations, the United States will be the only great commercial nation which discriminates against this legitimate industry.

Mr. President, the tariff bill now under consideration has been framed by the members of a party which has proclaimed its belief that protection as a policy is unjustifiable and that the imposition of tariff duties in order to encourage domestic industries is an unconstitutional exercise of power by Congress. At the same time the spokesmen of that party have not followed their line of reasoning to its logical conclusion and declared for free trade, either now or in the future, but have insisted that they favor a tariff for revenue. Whether they are able to see a difference between a tariff when it is levied by a party believing in protection as a policy and that same tariff when levied by a party which denies a belief in that policy, or whether the denial that they favor free trade has been made because they feared the possible political consequences, I shall not undertake to say. To be consistent the party should, in repudiating protection, have declared for free trade, either immediately or by a gradual scaling down of duties, because a tariff system similar to that of England is the only one which will not be protective to a greater or less extent, depending on the rates of duty imposed. Merely calling a tariff a revenue tariff or a protective tariff does not change its nature. Whether it is the one or the other depends on what articles the duties are levied on. If a duty is levied on any article which is produced in this country, it gives the producer of that article an advantage in the markets of this country over the producers of other countries, and to the extent of this advantage it is a protective tariff, and it is protective to the same extent whether found in an avowed protective-tariff measure or in one alleged to be for revenue only.

It has been stated that this tariff bill is a competitive-tariff bill as distinct from a protective-tariff bill; that these rates are competitive instead of protective. I have not noticed, however, that anyone has undertaken to explain just what a competitive-tariff rate is as used in this bill. If it is meant that these rates will permit more or less competition on the part of foreign manufacturers and producers with domestic manufacturers and producers—in other words, that these rates are not prohibitive—then there is no reason why these rates should be called competitive rates any more than the rates of other bills, because while some of the rates in former tariff bills may have been prohibitive, most of them have not, as our imports evidence. If, on the other hand, it is meant to imply that the rates in this bill are such as will permit foreign and domestic producers to compete in our markets on equal terms, then, so far as the principle is concerned, this bill is as much a protective-tariff bill as any which has preceded it. The principle would be the same, namely, that because of different conditions abroad the domestic producer needs a certain amount of protection in order to place him on equal terms with his foreign competitor; and the lower rates in this bill would not be due to its being framed on a different principle but to the fact that its framers considered less protection necessary than the framers of former bills did. There may be those who will explain that competitive rates are such as will invite competition from abroad whenever the domestic producers attempt to raise the prices too high. The fact is, however, that any rates which are not prohibitive will invite competition from abroad whenever domestic prices are high enough so that it will be a profitable venture for foreign producers to ship their goods to this country. If a competitive-tariff rate is such a rate that when a foreign producer imports an article to this country and sells it for the same price as the domestic producer, and his profit, after paying the tariff duty, is exactly equal to that of the domestic producer, then a competitive-tariff rate is merely a protective-tariff rate under a different name, because all that the domestic producer is entitled to under the principle of protection is a rate which will measure the difference of the cost of producing the same article to him and his foreign competitor.

I believe it has also been stated that this is solely a revenue measure, drafted with a view to raising revenue for the Government and with no regard to whether or not it will afford protection to any industry. If this is true, if the sole purpose of this bill is to raise revenue, if no advantage is to be given to any producer or set of producers because of tariff duties levied by this bill, then, to be consistent, on every article produced in this country and protected by a tariff duty, whether that tariff is called a revenue duty or something else, there should be placed an internal-revenue duty equal in amount to the benefit derived by the producer of that article from the tariff on it. And if the Democratic position is correct, if no encouragement should be given to industries by means of tariff duties, and, further, if tariff duties result in increasing the price in this country to the full amount of the duty, and if the higher rate of wages in this country is not in any way dependent on the tariff duties, and if, as is contended, the profits from a protective tariff go wholly into the pockets of the producers, then it would be the duty of the framers of this measure to place an internal-revenue tax on such articles. If the Democrats are correct in assuming that the American producer can produce his products just as cheaply as the foreign producer, then there is no excuse for a Democratic Congress, if it finds it necessary in order to raise revenue to place tariff duties on articles produced in this country, for failing to place an internal-revenue tax on the articles produced here in order that the producer of them may not, because of the necessity of raising revenue for the Government, enjoy an advantage which other producers do not. If the Democratic position is the correct one, you can not either explain or excuse the imposition of the high rates on silk manufactures on the ground that they are necessary in order to raise revenue and that such manufactures are luxuries bought by such as can afford to pay the enhanced prices. If those articles can be manufactured as cheaply here as abroad, and if the imposition of the tariff duties results in increasing the prices of those articles, then you are simply putting that much more money into the pocket of the producers of those articles, and the mere fact that most of these products are bought by rich persons who can afford to pay these prices does not change the principle; the only just thing to do would be to place an internal-revenue tax on the manufactures of silk equal in amount to the tariff duty, thereby increasing the revenue to the Government and collecting such increase from those who can afford to pay it. As raw silk is admitted free there would be no need of a compensatory duty.

I have no wish, however, to be unfair to the framers of this bill. The rates contained therein are for the most part very much lower than those in the present law, although it appears to me that the reductions have been very unevenly made. I apprehend that in framing the bill consideration was had of what reductions in duties could be made without injuring the industries benefited by the present duties. I can understand how an irreconcilable free trader in drafting a tariff bill for a country that had enjoyed a protective tariff for a number of years would be careful in reducing the various rates in order that the different industries might adjust themselves to the changed duties with as little inconvenience as possible and in order that there might be no industrial depression because of such tariff revision, even if he considered protective tariff duties on principle indefensible. Indeed, unless the last campaign was carried on by the Democrats on a pretense, I do not see how the members of the majority in this Congress can avoid taking these facts into consideration. It was stated authoritatively in the campaign last fall that the Democratic tariff revision would be undertaken in such a way that no "legitimate" industry would be injured. If the question of whether the reduction of duties will or will not injure any industry has not been considered in the framing of this measure, then the Democrats are as guilty of breaking campaign pledges as they would have been if they had failed to revise the tariff at all. It appears to me that it is just as necessary and just as proper to discuss this bill in the light of its probable effect on our industries as if it had been frankly a protective tariff measure, and that if it is found that certain rates, or the reduction of rates, injures an industry, or gives those engaged in one industry an undue advantage over those engaged in others, it is no defense to say that the bill is framed as a revenue measure merely.

Aside from the character of this bill, I can not say that I can indorse the way in which this measure has been drafted and the way in which it is being passed. It is my belief, and has been for a long time, that in the enacting of tariff legislation the services of some kind of tariff commission are necessary. We should have a commission or body which would not only conduct hearings the way committees of Congress do, but which would actually examine the books of the industries which claim they are in need of protection, and thus determine, or at least aid in determining, what industries will survive a reduction or removal of tariff duties, and in cases where it is found that tariff duties are necessary, if the industry is to prosper, what rate of duty is necessary. With such facts before us we could then proceed to consider the bill with a clear view of its consequences, and instead of trying to determine with inadequate means what the probable effect of the proposed changes will be we could accept the conclusions of the tariff commission as to the effect of reducing the rates to a certain point, or removing them entirely, and consider the other question of whether or not the policy as applied to the different industries was a wise one, whether a certain industry which it was found could not subsist without a certain rate of duty was of such importance and the carrying on of it of such benefit that this would more than outweigh the increased cost of its product which might result from the retention of that duty. Balancing the advantage of having the industry operate in this country against the disadvantage of a possible higher cost to the consumer, each Member of the Senate and of the House could then cast his vote accordingly as he believed that one outweighed the other. At present, with a mass of testimony and statements all of which no Senator or Member can take time to read, and as to which he has no means of knowing to what extent they may be prejudiced and biased, with authoritative statements lacking as to conditions both at home and abroad, with limited time, the individual Members of the Senate and of the House can no more than scratch the surface of the vast subject, and tariff bills are framed on what is little better than guesswork.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator one or two questions, if it will not interrupt him or interfere with his argument.

Mr. GRONNA. It will not. I shall be glad to answer them if I can.

Mr. CLAPP. Is there any question at all but that under the conditions existing to-day there should be some protection upon wheat, for instance?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I think it was clearly shown in the Senate and before the Committee on Finance during the time the reciprocity treaty was pending that the tariff had benefited the farmer to the extent of an average of about 11 cents a bushel since 1905.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, I will ask the Senator if, in his judgment, any commission could make that fact any plainer than it is to-day?

Mr. GRONNA. Speaking of a commission, I favor that, as a general proposition, to handle all tariff matters.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; so do I. What I want to get at, however, is this: I am in favor of a commission; but even if we had a commission, and the system were still maintained of three or four men in a party committee getting a majority of that committee in accord with them and then making their bill a party measure, whipping a party into line, and absolutely standing against the most reasonable amendment on earth that might be suggested, we would still have no remedy. Is not the evil in the system by which tariff bills are framed and whipped through Congress through committee, caucus, and appeals to party loyalty?

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator on that point.

Mr. CLAPP. That is what I wanted to make plain.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. While I agree with the statement of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], yet I think it is only fair to say that the report made by the Tariff Board, which was legislated out of existence last year, furnished very valuable information in relation to the market price of wheat, the value of the lands in different parts of Canada, and the cost of labor in different parts of Canada, as compared with the cost of labor in the several States of the Union. It was also very valuable in the way of throwing light upon the difference in the situation in the production of barley, in the production of wheat, in the production of flax, and the products made from these cereals, as between Winnipeg and Minneapolis and as between the Maritime Provinces and the Eastern States.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. If the Senator from North Dakota will pardon me for a moment longer—I want no misunderstanding as to my attitude—I believe there should be a tariff commission; but the report that was then made by the tariff commission was absolutely ignored under the force of the party lash, and the bill went through; and notwithstanding the existence of that report, to suggest an amendment in consonance with the report was to be charged with having the purpose of assassinating the pending bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. CLAPP. You may have tariff commissions, and I believe in them, and as long as I am in the Senate I am going to fight to get a tariff commission, but that will not remedy the situation if there is maintained the system which permits of two or three men getting a majority of the majority side of a committee, and then pronouncing their verdict as a test of party loyalty and whipping a bill through under that sort of inspiration, permitting no change, no matter how plain the necessity for the amendment may be.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is correct in his statement that the Tariff Commission made such a report. I intend to quote verbatim from part of that report relating to the cost of various products in the United States and in Canada.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask if the Senator also believes, in the event that wheat is placed on the dutiable list, that flour ought to carry some compensatory or corresponding duty?

Mr. GRONNA. I believe it should. I am frank to say that I do not believe the producer of wheat would get the benefit of the duty on wheat unless a compensatory duty were put on flour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that in view of the fact that the Senator comes from a large wheat-producing area of the United States, much larger than the part of the country I come from; but we have very large milling interests that take a very great volume of your wheat, and a large part of it is not used for domestic consumption, but is for the export trade.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe that is correct.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, as I know he wants to finish to-day.

Mr. GRONNA. I gladly yield to the Senator from Iowa, Mr. President.

Mr. KENYON. In answer to the question of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], the Senator suggested a proposition that is interesting to me, and I want to ask him about it, because I know he has superior knowledge on matters pertaining to agriculture.

Does the Senator believe the tariff on wheat increases the amount per bushel that the producers of wheat receive?

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator ask me that question, or the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KENYON. I understood the Senator from North Dakota, in answer to the Senator from Minnesota, to say that it did.

Mr. GRONNA. I made the statement, Mr. President, that I believed it was shown to the Committee on Finance and to the Senate, at the time the reciprocity treaty was pending, that unquestionably the tariff on wheat benefited the farmer to a certain extent; but I will say that so far as wheat is concerned, I do not believe it has ever benefited the farmer to the full extent of the duty.

Mr. KENYON. But has the Senator preached the doctrine in his State to the farmer who raises wheat that a tariff on farm products increases the price to the producer to the extent of the tariff? Has it not always been said, rather, that the tariff on farm products, or, rather, the general tariff system, benefited the farmer only in the incidental benefit that came from the general prosperity of the country?

I have never, except in recent years, heard it preached that the tariff on oats or corn or wheat increased the price to the producer.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as I understand, whenever there is a surplus of a commodity, especially an agricultural product which no monopoly can control, it must be obvious to anyone that the price of that product, to a certain extent, will be based upon the world's price. But I do say, and I make the statement without fear of successful contradiction by anybody, that for the last six or seven years the farmers of the United States have profited to a considerable extent by the duties on farm products.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota again yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will ask the Senator with reference to two cereals that are largely produced in his State and also in the State which I, in part, represent, and in the great Northwest generally, whether or not it is a fact that instead of exporting a surplus of those cereals we consume all we produce and import largely of them? I refer to barley, which supplies the great breweries in the United States, and to flaxseed, the oils from which are an important farm product, or the result of the farm product. Is not the question of the world's market price excluded in that case, and is it not a fact that the price is affected by the tariff because we consume our whole supply in this country and import instead of exporting it?

Mr. GRONNA. We consume more and more the products of the farm; and it seems to me such a plain and simple proposition that it must be easily understood by everybody.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is not that particularly true of flax and barley, two staple products of the farm?

Mr. GRONNA. I believe it is; but before I go into that subject I want to answer the question of the Senator from Iowa, which deserves considerable attention.

Take the case of corn, a product which is produced very largely in the State of Iowa. No one will contend, I suppose, that those who produce corn have benefited to the amount of the duty of 15 cents per bushel on corn; but if we look up the statistics we find that practically no corn is exported. It is fed to the live animals of this country, and in this very bill it is proposed to take off all the duty on those animals. While the farmer does not receive a direct benefit from the duty on corn, as the Senator from Iowa has said, I believe he does get the benefit from the tariff on the animals to which the corn may be fed.

Mr. KENYON. Not under this bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Not under this bill; no. There is no tariff on those things in this bill, as I am going to show later on.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

Mr. GRONNA. I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska in a minute.

In response to the question asked me by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], I invite the Senator's attention to the price of flax during the fall of 1910 and the following winter and summer. During that time there were more than 10,000,000 bushels of flax imported into this country, paying the full duty. There was a shortage in the production of flax, and consequently flax went to the enormous price of more than $2 a bushel. I know that no Senator will deny that at that time and on that particular product the farmers did receive the full benefit of the duty of 25 cents a bushel on flax.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I understood the Senator to say a moment ago that it was conclusively shown, when the reciprocity bill was up, that the tariff upon wheat benefited the farmer to the extent of about 11 cents per bushel.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I believe it was.

Mr. JONES. That was a direct benefit to the farmer from the tariff?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I believe so. That is my belief.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator from North Dakota believe that if the tariff on wheat were a direct benefit to the producer to the extent of the tariff, thereby increasing the cost of bread to the consumers of the country, any such tariff duty would stand?

Mr. GRONNA. I believe not.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator believes not?

Mr. GRONNA. I believe not; but I think I did show—and I know other Senators showed, and proved conclusively—that the price of wheat was not the cause of the high price of bread. I do not believe anyone will contend that a loaf of bread will be sold any cheaper whether wheat is worth 50 cents a bushel or 75 cents a bushel or a dollar a bushel. In the nineties wheat was sold for less than 50 cents a bushel, and yet the same price was paid for a loaf of bread.

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I did not want the Senator to leave the subject of wheat, to which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] had called his attention, without explicitly stating the benefit that would come to the producer of wheat on account of the tariff on wheat, although I think probably the Senator has fully answered it. I wanted to suggest, however, that as we approached the time when we consumed all the wheat we produced, the benefit received by the farmer who raised wheat continued to increase. While the Senator says, and says correctly, that although the tariff on wheat was 25 cents a bushel the farmer did not get the full benefit of it, the reason was, as illustrated by the tariff on barley and flax, that we were not consuming all of the wheat we produced.

I believe it is conceded that if we did not consume any wheat the tariff would not do any good; but if we consumed all the wheat we produced, the benefit received by the producer would be measured by the tariff itself. Those are the two extremes.

It has been demonstrated over and over again from statistics—and the Senator from Iowa can easily look it up and demonstrate for himself—that on an average, taking the price of wheat on one side of the line in the United States and the price of wheat on the other side of the line, in some instances just across the street—for instance, in the case of Portal—there has been a difference of more than 11 cents most of the time, going up as high as 15 cents, where it was shipped on the same railroad, to the same market, perhaps in the same car, or at least in the same train. There has been that difference in the price when there was no difference in freight rates—all the conditions being the same—the wheat being raised in the one case on the Canadian side and in the other case on the Dakota side of the line. I think it has been demonstrated, whatever the theories may be, that that is the fact. It was also demonstrated here the other day by the Senator from North Dakota that the same thing held true in regard to the price of wheat in Minneapolis and in Liverpool, for instance.

But I am reminded that I am taking up too much of the time of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree that the facts are as stated by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GRONNA. Just a moment and then I will yield. I want to be perfectly fair, and I do not intend to make any misstatements. Of course, I am now expressing only my own belief.

During the year 1912 the United States produced 750,000,000 bushels of wheat. That is more wheat than we can consume. As a natural consequence the price of wheat went down. Unlike the manufacturer, the farmer does not control the price of his product. The farmer brings his product to the so-called elevators, and the price is fixed by the buyers. When there is an overproduction of wheat it is but natural that the price to the farmer will be fixed to a certain extent by the world's price. But it has been demonstrated over and over again that when consumption equals or very nearly equals production, the farmer receives the benefit of the tariff on his products as well as the manufacturer receives the benefit of the tariff on his products.

I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, in order to complete the assertion and demonstration which the Senator from North Dakota has made about the price of a loaf of bread, I wish to ask him if the size of a loaf is the same now as it was in the nineties, the time to which he refers?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in my home we practice economy, and we always bake our own bread. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would put some other witness on the stand to answer his question. I am hardly a competent witness.

Mr. WEEKS. I did not know but that the Senator had looked up the matter and had found that the loaf of bread which is usually sold by bakers to-day is the same size that it was 10 or 15 years ago. I think it is. I did not know but that the Senator could answer that question.

Mr. GRONNA. No; I do not know as to that. I believe the Senator from Massachusetts knows more about it than I do.

I desire to finish my speech to-day, and for that reason I should like to proceed. I shall say some things about the Democrats this afternoon, but it is with charity and in the hope that they will profit by what I may say.

Further, I do not believe in legislating by means of a caucus. We are elected to come to the Capital and legislate according to our own views of what will be for the benefit of the people of this country, and no one has a right to surrender his views, either to a secret caucus or to any individual, however prominent. If a person votes for or against a measure contrary to his own convictions, I do not see how the fact that a party caucus had passed on that measure can change circumstances or can relieve that Member from his responsibility, and I do not believe the people of this country will consider that it does relieve him of the responsibility. Moreover, the debates in caucus are behind closed doors, the deliberations are secret. The people are given no information as to what reasons are advanced for or against any proposal, or what considerations governed in the enactment of a certain measure. The people have a right to know not only what their representatives do, but also why they do it. This is the reason why it is a fundamental principle of our Government that debates of legislative bodies shall be open to the public, and it appears to me that legislating in secret conclave is just as much fraught with danger when done by the majority party of the Senate as it would be if done by the two parties jointly.

While there may be a question, however, as to on just what principle this bill has been based, there is one feature that is immediately noticeable, and that is its discrimination against the farmer. Why it should be necessary to cut the duties which may benefit him lower than those that benefit the manufacturer has not been made plain by those responsible for this bill; why it should be necessary to remove the duties on his products while retaining the duties on manufactures has not been explained. Agriculture is fundamentally the most important of our industries. It is absolutely necessary to have food, while we can at a pinch do without the products of many other industries. It does not appear to me to be farsighted statesmanship to discriminate against such an industry. Almost without exception the other nations attempt to give the farmer the same benefits from their tariffs that they give the manufacturer and to place no burdens on him not also placed on others.

We have in former years followed the same course, and while the farmer may not have profited as much from the protective policy as those engaged in other industries, that was because of the conditions of the industry; because of the fact that in former years the prices of our farm products were not fixed in our home markets to the same extent as at present. Now, however, certain classes are apparently becoming afraid that the farmer will benefit from protection to a greater extent than formerly, and it is therefore proposed to make him sell his products entirely in a competitive market while still making him buy what he consumes in a protected market. The Democrats have very generally maintained, especially when campaigning in the agricultural sections, that the farmer derives no benefit from the duties on his products; but from the reasons that have been advanced for the placing of his products on the free list it is evident that there is a belief that the duties on those products will serve to enhance their prices. If that is not the reason, then why the talk of a "free market basket"? And why the statement that it is the policy of the Democrats to remove the tariff on food products, which are a basic necessity? If removing the tariff on these products is not going to lower their price, then why the pretense of that being the purpose of the reduction? And if it is going to lower the price, how can it be maintained that the producer of those products is not benefited by the tariff on them? Our Democratic friends appear to have got into this difficulty by having two sets of reasons why the tariff should be removed from farm products inconsistent with each other, using the one or the other as the occasion might seem to demand, and now attempting to use both at the same time. If the removal of the tariff on farm products is going to give the consumer cheaper foods, then the tariff on those products gives the producer a better market, and the producer is benefited by it. On the other hand, if, as has been contended, the tariff on farm products is of no benefit to the producer of them, it can only be because the tariff does not increase the price of those products; and if it does not increase the price, then where is there any excuse for stating that the removal of the tariff is going to benefit the consumer and give him cheaper food?

But, while it must be true that if the consumer is to get his food cheaper by the removal of the duties on farm products the tariff on those products must be of some benefit to the producer of them, the converse is not necessarily true, and it does not follow that because the tariff on his products is of benefit to the farmer that the removal of that tariff will give the consumer his food cheaper or benefit him in any way. Because of the many hands through which the farmer's product passes before it reaches the ultimate consumer, it is more than probable that in most cases the consumer will not profit from the lower price which the farmer will receive for his product. For instance, I do not suppose that anyone will contend that the price of a loaf of bread will be reduced by the removal of the duty on wheat.

In discriminating against the farmer in the levying of tariff duties, the Democrats are adopting a policy which is not pursued by any other nation which is capable of producing enough food within its own borders for its people. Even England, which has for a long time been dependent on other countries for its food supplies, does not discriminate against its agriculturists. It is true that they have to sell their products in competition with the entire world, but they also have the privilege of making their purchases in a competitive market. If it has been the intent of the Democrats to approach as nearly as possible the tariff system of England, they have overlooked this fact: While England has the benefit of a protective policy to a certain extent, it does not give this benefit to one class of producers by discriminating against another class. They receive this benefit because of the preferential tariff duties of the English colonies. Canada has three rates of duty on most articles—the general tariff, the intermediate tariff, and the British preferential tariff. The general is the highest rate, the intermediate the next lower, and the British preferential the lowest. Imports from the United States pay the general rate. By special trade agreements countries may get the benefit of the intermediate rate.

With few exceptions, the British preferential rate is only from 50 to 75 per cent of the general rate, thus giving the British producer a protection equal to from 25 to 50 per cent of that enjoyed by their own producers. In many cases articles dutiable when imported from other countries are admitted free from England, thus giving the British producer of these articles the same protection as the Canadian producer. In the same way, on articles imported into Australia the British producer is given a lower rate, the rate being in most cases from 50 to 80 per cent of the rates assessed against the same goods imported from other countries. New Zealand has a similar system, charging a surtax in some cases as high as a hundred per cent on articles imported from other foreign countries over that charged on the same articles imported from British dominions. In most cases this surtax is from 20 to 50 per cent. In other words, a producer in this country, for instance, exporting an article to New Zealand has to pay a duty from 20 to 50 per cent higher than the British producer exporting the same article. While the English manufacturers thus have the benefits of protection given them by the English colonies, it is to be noted that there is no burden falling on the English farmer because of this protection. He can still purchase whatever he needs in a competitive market. The Democrats, however, propose to make the farmer in this country sell his products in a competitive market and make his purchases in a protected market; they aim to give him no better market for his products than the British producer has, and by retaining a tariff on the products of other industries compel him to make his purchases in a higher market than the English farmer.

The report of the Finance Committee gives the average rate of duty in the agricultural schedule of this bill as 15.21 per cent, while the average rate of the entire bill is 26.67 per cent. This method of comparison, however, does not disclose the real nature of the bill, since it does not show the number or importance of the products placed on the free list. As a matter of fact, it is misleading. The Senate bill carries a number of agricultural products on the free list on which the bill as it passed the House imposed a duty, and yet the comparison just referred to gives the average rate of duty of the agricultural schedule on the Senate bill as higher than in the House bill. The comparison simply gives the average duty of the schedule, and really shows little as to the real character of the bill. Products which the farmer has to sell which are on the free list in the pending bill and on which there formerly was a tariff are as follows:

Broom corn: The Payne Tariff Act provided for a duty of $3 per ton.

Buckwheat and buckwheat flour: On buckwheat the Payne and Dingley rates were 15 cents per bushel; the Wilson Act provided for a tariff of 20 per cent ad valorem. On buckwheat flour the rate in the Payne Act is 25 per cent ad valorem; in the Dingley and Wilson Acts it was 20 per cent.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but I want to get one point clear at this stage of his remarks. Does he consider buckwheat flour and corn meal as manufactured products?

Mr. GRONNA. I will ask the Senator from Texas if he has been here during the time I have made my remarks on this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have been; but I understood the Senator to be enumerating farm products that were put on the free list, and I wanted to understand if buckwheat flour is a manufactured product. I simply want the information; that is all.

Mr. GRONNA. I have just stated it. I am sorry the Senator did not hear my statement. I said on buckwheat the Payne and Dingley rates were 15 cents a bushel, and the Wilson Act provided for a tariff of 20 per cent ad valorem; and that on buckwheat flour the rate in the Payne Act was 25 per cent ad valorem and in the Dingley and Wilson Acts 20 per cent. I am simply reading a list of articles that are placed on the free list in this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thought the Senator was reading a list of farm products placed on the free list.

Mr. GRONNA. All these are farm products.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is not flour a manufactured product?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly, it is a manufactured product. I agree with the Senator on that. I think we all agree on that point. If we would have no more difficulty in disposing of this bill than that, I think it would be so changed before its passage that even the agricultural classes would get some benefit from it.

Corn: The duty under the Payne and Dingley Acts was 15 cents per bushel; under the Wilson Act 20 per cent ad valorem. On corn meal the Payne rate is 40 cents per 100 pounds; the Dingley rate was 20 cents per bushel; and the Wilson rate was 20 per cent ad valorem.

Eggs: The present rate is 5 cents per dozen; the Dingley rate was 5 cents; the Wilson rate 3 cents.

Flax straw: A duty of $5 per ton under the Payne and Dingley Acts; free under the Wilson Act.

Hides: These were placed on the free list by the Payne bill and are retained there by the pending bill. The Dingley Act had a tariff of 15 per cent ad valorem on hides.

Milk: Rate under the Payne and Dingley Acts, 2 cents per gallon; under the Wilson Act, free.

Cream: Rate under the Payne Act, 5 cents per gallon; under the Wilson Act, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Potatoes: Rate under the Payne and Dingley Acts, 25 cents per bushel; under the Wilson Act, 15 cents per bushel.

Rye: Rate under the Payne and Dingley Acts, 10 cents per bushel; under the Wilson Act, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Swine: Rate under the Payne and Dingley Acts, $1.50 per head; under the Wilson Act, 20 per cent ad valorem. Twenty per cent ad valorem was really a higher rate than the rate of the present law.

Cattle: Payne and Dingley rates, less than 1 year old, $2 per head; others valued at less than $14 per head, $3.75 each; if valued at more than $14 per head, 27½ per cent ad valorem. Wilson rate, 20 per cent.

Sheep: Payne and Dingley rates, less than 1 year old, 75 cents per head; 1 year old or over, $1.50 per head. Wilson rate, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Wheat: Under the Payne and Dingley Acts 25 cents per bushel; under the Wilson Act 20 per cent ad valorem.

Wool: Payne and Dingley rates, on wool of the first class, 11 cents per pound; on wool of the second class, 12 cents per pound; on wool of the third class, if valued at 12 cents per pound or less, 4 cents per pound; if valued at more than 12 cents, 7 cents per pound. Under the Wilson Act wool was free.

It is true that agricultural implements have been placed on the free list, but that does not alter the fact that this bill discriminates against the farmer, because the farmer purchases other things besides agricultural machinery. He is a consumer of the products of the other industries in this country, similarly as the producers of those other products are consumers of his products, and when you place a duty on those articles that he has to buy and place his products on the free list you are forcing him to sell his products in a free market in competition with the entire world, while compelling him to make his purchases in a protected market. While this bill as it stands contains great reductions in the duties on manufactures, it is a gross discrimination against the farmers, especially of the North and West.

This bill provides for a countervailing duty on wheat and wheat flour as against countries imposing duties on those products. I wish I could have the attention of those who have the countervailing duty in charge. I believe I am in a position to enlighten that subcommittee on this particular item. What it is expected to accomplish by this provision has not, so far as I have noticed, been explained by its authors. So far as the farmer is concerned, this provision is of no value. If it is pretended that by its means the farmer's market for wheat will be extended, it is a mere pretense and nothing more. The countries which find it to their interest to maintain a duty on wheat or on flour are those countries which have no wheat they want to sell us, which have no flour they want to sell us, and to which it consequently makes no difference whether or not we maintain a duty on wheat and flour. It does not affect them. Why, then, should the fact that we are willing to remove our duties on these products be any incentive to them to remove theirs? On the other hand, countries which have wheat they wish to export in any considerable quantity to this country—and this consideration applies especially to Canada—have no market for our wheat; they will, no doubt, very willingly remove their duties in return for our admission of their wheat free of duty. But will we really receive anything in return? The American farmer, whose market it is proposed to barter away, will receive nothing; Canada has no market for our wheat. It is a matter of supreme indifference to the American farmer whether he can ship wheat to Canada free of duty, because Canada has no market for it; Canada has a market for only a small part of its own production.

It is possible that some of our millers may be in a position to benefit if Canada should remove her duty on flour, but if they do, it will be at the expense of the American farmer; it will mean the sacrifice of the interests of the American farmer for the benefit of the Canadian farmer and the American miller. It also seems to me that it is possible to construe this proviso in such a manner as will permit Canada to ship her wheat to this country free, merely removing her duty on wheat and retaining her duty on flour. I believe under the provisions of this bill that will be possible. In that case no one will benefit from it except the Canadian wheat grower. It is the same old story of the Canadian reciprocity agreement over again in a slightly altered form, surrendering the market of the American farmer to the foreign producers and either getting nothing in return or something of benefit merely to the manufacturer. The aim is apparently to delude the farmer into believing that his interests are to be looked after, and that this countervailing duty is to be used to enlarge his foreign market for wheat by inducing foreign countries to remove their duties on wheat and flour. As a matter of fact, the proviso will do nothing of the kind. It will not make more accessible a single foreign wheat market, but it will in all probability make more accessible the American wheat market to the Canadian farmer and the wheat growers of other countries who may care to avail themselves of the opportunity offered them. We place ourselves in the position of offering the American wheat market to the wheat growers of any country that may care to apply for it, and in return we secure nothing, because such countries as will avail themselves of this do not, nor will they ever expect to, have any market for our wheat. And as to the countries that might offer a market for our wheat, we offer them nothing that would be any inducement to them to open their markets. To those countries that export wheat and are anxious to enter our market we offer that market for nothing. From the countries to which we export wheat and flour and whose markets we are desirous of entering on more favorable terms, we ask that they admit our wheat and flour free, and we offer them nothing in return for the favor. We give favors gratuitously to some countries and then apparently expect that other countries will be equally shortsighted and give us favors, knowing that we will give them nothing in return. If we ask favors from certain countries, we should expect to grant them favors in return of somewhat approximately equal value. And when we grant favors we should take at least a little precaution to see that the assumed favors which we are to receive have a little value.

This provision, I presume, is offered in the nature of reciprocity. Reciprocity seems in recent years to have come to mean the surrender of the market of the American farmer to the farmers of other countries in return either for no benefits at all or else benefits merely to the manufacturers. The manner in which the removal of the duty on wheat would injure the American wheat grower I explained at length at the time when the Canadian reciprocity agreement was under discussion in the Senate two years ago; it has also been discussed by other Senators during the present session. I do not intend to go into it again at this time and will content myself with calling attention to a few facts having to do with the manner in which the free admission of Canadian wheat will affect our farmers. The wheat which is produced by the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota is northwestern hard spring wheat. It is distinct from the softer grades produced farther south either as spring or winter wheat and has superior milling qualities. The yield per acre is not so great as it is of winter wheat. In ordinary years none of this wheat is exported, all of it being consumed by American mills. I have also been told by millers that the flour made from this wheat is not exported, being consumed in this country. The wheat that figures in our export is the softer winter wheat, and also to some extent the wheat known as macaroni or durum wheat. The kind that Canada raises is the northwestern hard spring wheat, and the wheat that the Canadian wheat will compete with directly is that raised by the farmers in the three States above mentioned. The cost of raising a bushel of this wheat is less in Canada because the new lands there will produce larger crops than the older lands on this side of the line and because the land is cheaper than in the United States. The Tariff Board in its report on the Canadian reciprocity agreement made the following statement in regard to the land values in the two countries:

> In the great farming States of Iowa, Indiana, and Illinois the values of farm lands are very much higher than in any of the Canadian Provinces. In Illinois and Iowa they are a little more than twice as high as in Ontario.
> The increase of land values between 1900 and 1910 has been marked in both countries. In certain of the Provinces the rate of increase has been higher than in any of the States. The highest rates of increase in the States are found where the highest land values obtain, namely, in Illinois, Indiana, and Iowa. But, on the other hand, Ontario, while reporting the highest Canadian land value, shows the lowest Canadian rate of increase. It is worth noting that Ontario is feeling the competition of western Canada just as some years ago the eastern part of the United States felt the competition of our western lands.
> It is impossible to make any significant comparative study of land values in western Canada and those in the United States. Western Canada is a virgin region; railroad lands have been sold to settlers at low prices and on liberal terms of payment; the Government has given away millions of acres under a liberal homestead law. In Manitoba the value of land per acre is $29, or $7 less than in Minnesota and Michigan; but owing to the recent settlement of Manitoba, the rate of increase during the last 10 years is much greater than in those States.
> The prices of occupied land in Saskatchewan and Alberta are $22 and $20, respectively.

The board further gave the farm prices for 1910 as follows: Minnesota, 94 cents per bushel; North Dakota, 90 cents; South Dakota, 89 cents; Manitoba, 80 cents; Saskatchewan, 69 cents; Alberta, a little less than 68 cents.

Mr. GALLINGER. That refers to wheat?

Mr. GRONNA. That refers to the price of wheat and is from the report of the Tariff Board. It proves conclusively that we were receiving more for our wheat than they were receiving in Canada.

The farm prices, of course, depend, among other things, on the distance from market, and the above, therefore, is perhaps not a fair comparison of the market prices in the two countries. On comparing the markets at Minneapolis and Winnipeg the board found that in 1910 the price at Minneapolis was from 6½ cents to 12¼ cents above that at Winnipeg. In 1909 it ranged from five-eighths cent to 24½ cents above the Winnipeg price.

The Canadian grain grower has for a number of years looked with hungry eyes at the American grain market, from which he has been barred by our tariff. That the reciprocity agreement did not go into effect was not the fault of the Canadian grain grower, but due to the efforts of other Canadians who do not produce grain and who did not care whether the Canadian grain growers secured entry to the American market. Other issues, which to us appear irrelevant, and fears which to us appear unfounded, were joined with the issue of reciprocity, and the result was its defeat. At this time, however, the privilege of entering the American market on equal terms with the American farmer is handed to them without asking anything in return which they will hesitate in granting. And who will profit from thus surrendering the American market? The millers will undoubtedly profit to the extent of securing cheaper wheat in ordinary years and under ordinary circumstances, and they may also profit by being in a position to compete with the Canadian millers for Canadian markets. The American farmer will not be benefited in any event, and will be damaged to the extent that his wheat market is invaded by Canadian wheat growers.

So far as the European markets or markets of Asia are concerned, where we have to ship our surplus of wheat and of wheat flour, the provision will not result in securing admission on more favorable terms to a single market, as none of the countries to the markets of which we would desire admission expect to ship us either wheat or wheat flour, and our retention of a countervailing duty on wheat and wheat flour is therefore a matter of indifference to them. Does anyone imagine that France, for instance, will remove her duties of 37 cents per bushel on wheat, or $2.75 per barrel on flour, in return for our removing the duties on wheat and flour imported from France? As France does not expect to sell us either wheat or flour it is immaterial to her whether or not we have a duty on these products. Or can anyone see why our free admission of wheat and flour should be any inducement to Germany to remove her duties of 49 and 36 cents per bushel on wheat, or $2.02 and $1.10 per hundred pounds on flour? In quoting the two rates of duty I refer to the general duty and the conventional duty. Germany does not expect to sell us either wheat or flour and does not care in the slightest whether we have a duty on either or both. Or take the case of Japan. Can anyone conceive why our removal of the duties on wheat and flour as against Japan should be any incentive for that country to remove her duties of 29 cents per bushel on wheat and 70 cents per 100 pounds on flour? Is it not evident to everybody that the only countries that will take advantage of our willingness to admit wheat and wheat flour free of duty will be those countries that have wheat and flour which they wish to sell us—as, for instance, Canada—and that the countries where we find now, and would expect to find, a market for our wheat and wheat flour will be given no incentive to remove their duties? Are we not giving something for nothing in the one instance, with the apparent hope of receiving something for nothing in the other? And does anyone believe that any of those countries whose markets we are seeking will grant us any favors unless we grant them something in return?

If anyone expects that, I fear he is doomed to disappointment. In foreign countries the tariffs seem to be constructed with the idea of encouraging domestic industries, and the agricultural industry is well taken care of in most of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from North Dakota if Germany, France, and Japan have for many years in the past had those extremely high rates of duty on wheat?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; they have had them for a number of years, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. And those high rates are fixed so as to encourage the domestic production and keep out the wheat of other countries which may have a surplus?

Mr. GRONNA. Absolutely, because both France and Germany produce a sufficient amount of wheat to supply food for their own people.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that what they are doing in those countries is along the same line on which we have been operating when we have had a duty on American wheat?

Mr. GRONNA. Exactly; only their rates have been higher than our rates.

It apparently has never occurred to them what a great blessing it would be to their farmers to surrender their markets to such of their foreign competitors as care to indicate their willingness to accept them. If we wish to extend our market for wheat and flour in those countries by securing more favorable tariff rates, it would seem reasonable to believe that we would be more likely to obtain this by offering to reduce or remove the duties on some of the articles which those countries produce and export to this country. If we wish to secure the removal of the duties on wheat and flour imposed by Germany and Belgium, for instance, would it not be more effective to offer to remove the duties on zinc, which those countries export and the rates on which I note have been increased over the House rates, rather than to offer to remove our duties on wheat and flour? If we wish to secure better rates from France, why would it not be better to offer to remove the duties on silks or other goods that France is exporting rather than the duties which are of no earthly interest to her? If we really wish to extend our markets abroad by securing more favorable tariff rates, why not make offers meaning something to countries which can give us a market for our products, rather than throw our own markets open to countries which will give us nothing in return?

Mr. President, this is so absolutely contrary to the policy advocated by that great statesman, James G. Blaine, that I do not want anyone to believe or think that he can delude the American farmer and make him believe that this is reciprocity such as was advocated by that great statesman. It does not take a very wise man, it seems to me, to know that a nation, as an individual, if it wants to extend commerce or trade relations, must give something in return for what it expects to get. This countervailing duty is all a farce, and you will not be able, I say, to delude the American farmer and make him believe, because you have a provision in this bill for a countervailing duty, that you are treating him fairly. You are not; you know that. You are aware of it as much as I am, and if any of you are aware of it you are doing an injustice to the people engaged in a great legitimate industry.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean by that to say that he thinks the Democrats are consciously and intentionally doing the farmers an injustice?

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, I am going to say a little later on that I do not really entertain the opinon that they consciously want to do the farmer an injustice.

Mr. STONE. But that is what the Senator says.

Mr. GRONNA. But I am also going to say, and I say now, that there are men in the Senate who know as much and more about the great American industry of agriculture than does President Wilson. I am going to say further that I believe there are Senators on this floor who know as much about the existing condition of the American farmer as does the majority of the Senate Committee on Finance. If I am mistaken in that, Mr. President, then the majority has knowingly done the farmer an injustice.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean to say that if he is mistaken in supposing that the President and the majority members of the Finance Committee know less about the farming industry than the Senator himself or some of his colleagues, therefore they are doing a willful injustice?

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, if they knew as much about the industry as does your humble servant, who is now addressing the Senate, I do not believe they would place the farmer's products on the free list; and if they do know as much about it as does your humble servant, then it would appear to me they have not given the subject the consideration to which that great industry is entitled.

Mr. STONE. We give the farmer, so far as taxation goes, pretty much everything the farmer buys free of duty. We put practically everything the farmer uses in his industry on the free list. The things which he buys to eat and wear, the comforts and necessaries, have been put on the free list or they have been very radically reduced. Does the Senator think that the farmer gets no compensation in that?

Mr. GRONNA. I mean in the course of my remarks to give the Democratic Party credit for having taken the duty off of farm machinery. I intend in my speech to give them credit for whatever they have done. I also intend to refer to the fact that in this bill the duties have been very substantially reduced on many articles.

Mr. STONE. Is not that good for the farmer?

Mr. GRONNA. I want to be fair, and I am trying to be fair with the Democratic Party. I can not give the Senator a categorical answer. I am going to try to explain it, if the Senator will only honor me by his presence.

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator, then——

Mr. GRONNA. I shall try to enlighten the Senator on the subject.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is himself a farmer, and is largely interested in farming.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, sir; that is true; I am largely interested in farming.

Mr. STONE. I have heard the Senator say that several times.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. STONE. Now, being personally informed with regard to that industry and personally interested in it, I ask would the Senator have the products of his farm put on the protected list and at the same time put the things the farmers, the Senator's constituents, buy, and that he himself as a farmer must buy, plows, mowers, thrashing machines, and many other things, on the free list, and reduce to a low tariff rate other things that he consumes, and still leave what he produces on a high-tax basis? Is that the view of the Senator?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not entertain any such views, nor am I advocating them. I will say, since the Senator has alluded to the fact that personally I am a farmer, that I do not believe the Senator alludes to that with any motive whatever. I know he does not. If farming were an industry that could be a monopoly, I might refrain, as Senators sometimes do, from even voting on this schedule. But there are nearly 10,000,000 farmers engaged in the industry, and no man will contend that farming can ever be made a trust or a monopoly. I feel that I am only doing my duty, as the Senator is doing his duty to his constituents and to the people of the United States, when I call attention to what I believe is a great injustice to the farmer. I intend to show that with the exception of Russia there is no other country than the United States which produces within its borders a sufficient amount of food products for its own consumption which does not protect the industry of farming as well as the industry of manufacturing.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. An observation just made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] interests me very much. I repeat it in order to be sure that I understood him correctly.

Does the Senator from Missouri mean to say that he and his associates realize that by taking off the duty upon agricultural products they have caused a great loss to the American farmer, and in order to compensate him for that loss they have put on the free list certain things which the farmer uses, and have very greatly reduced the duties upon certain other things which the farmer uses? Is that practically the statement just made by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STONE. No, Mr. President. I think the farmers of the country have been treated with especial consideration in this bill. A number of agricultural products have been put on the free list—some absolutely, and some under what is called the countervailing duty.

I never have believed—and I would have to hear something more than I have yet heard to convince me—that a duty on farm products is a real benefit to the farmer, even under a protective tariff. I do not believe that is the case; but that is an argument which has been made and gone over very often, and this is not the occasion to enter upon it.

I do say, however, and I did say, and I meant to be understood as saying, that the farmers will receive a very great benefit under this bill if it becomes a law, as I think it will, by having their implements of industry practically all—as far as I recall now, I think I may say all—put on the free list; and not only the implements of their industry, but by having many things which they purchase for other uses put on the free list, and practically everything that they consume put at a very much lower rate of duty, thereby taking off of them the burden of taxation. I think these things are for the benefit of the farmer, and, taken as a whole, the farmer gets far more consideration than almost any other class of our people, so far as this bill goes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter upon an argument as to whether a duty upon agricultural products raises the price of those products or not. I shall not interrupt the admirable address of the Senator from North Dakota to enter upon a discussion of that subject. But I understood the Senator from Missouri to say, and I have heard it said a good many times here, that something especial had been done for the farmer, and that it had been done because the duties had been taken from the farmer's products. I thought the Senator from Missouri stated that proposition so clearly that it ought to be emphasized, for I understood him to say: "It is true that we have taken the duties from the farmer's products; but we have made up the loss, and more than the loss, by taking off the duties upon something else which he uses."

Mr. STONE. Evidently the Senator did not mean to say just what he did say—that I have contended, or that anyone on this side has contended, that the farmer was benefited by taking off the duty on his products. I have not said that. I do not think he is injured by the removal of the duties, but I do not think it is a benefit to him. A thing may not hurt one, may not injure one, and yet at the same time may not be of any immediate or especial benefit.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was quite sure that when the Senator from Missouri was reminded of what he had said, as I heard it, he would at once retire to the old position which I fancy all of our friends upon the other side——

Mr. STONE. But I never said anything of that kind. I never said anything of that kind, and the Senator will not say I did.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood the Senator as saying so, and therefore I asked the question. Of course, I can do nothing more than appeal to the RECORD when it shall have been printed; and if it there appears that I totally misconceived the Senator, he will be vindicated. But I believe when he reads what he said he will find it bears the interpretation I have put upon it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I dislike very much to interrupt further the address of the Senator from North Dakota, but before the Senator from Iowa takes his seat I should like to have him be a little more specific. I understood him to say that it had been repeatedly declared on this side of the Chamber that the farmer, having been subjected to certain losses by reason of the removal of the duties on his products, an effort had been made to compensate him for such losses by the removal of the duties upon agricultural implements and otherwise. Can the Senator be a little more specific in respect to individual and time?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, Mr. President, I do not think I am called upon to name Senators and name dates. I have heard this question debated now for four years or more. What I said with regard to that was my recollection and my interpretation of what I have heard a great many times. I heard it repeatedly stated during the time we were considering what was known as the farmers' free list last year. That, however, is a mere matter for appeal to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire of the Senator, then, whether that took the duties off the farmer's products so that it could possibly be said that the other changes were in compensation therefor?

Mr. CUMMINS. It did not take the duties off the farmer's products as a whole.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the purpose of the removal of the duties on wheat and flour is not to extend our markets, but to reduce the cost of flour to the consumer, then the insertion of this provision is inexcusable. In that case the lower cost of flour, which is presumably what would be aimed at, would depend on the willingness of a foreign country to remove her own duties. If some of our duties have the effect of increasing the cost of living to such an extent that they should be removed, then the logical way would be to remove them without waiting, as is proposed, until other countries shall give their sanction to such action. If the cost of wheat and flour is so great in this country that it is necessary to place those commodities on the free list in order to bring relief to the consumer, then why is it necessary to wait until Canada gives her sanction, or some other country gives her sanction, before removing the duties? The proposal is as inexcusable, if the purpose is to reduce the cost of flour, as it is useless if its purpose is to extend our foreign markets for wheat and flour.

In examining the tariffs of other countries which expect to produce enough agricultural products for their consumption, or nearly so, I find that in the framing of their tariff laws attention is given to the welfare and prosperity of the farmer as well as of the manufacturer. Of course, in the case of England, that country frankly confessed years ago that it could not produce enough agricultural products for its own consumption, and it has no tariff on such products any more than on manufactures.

On cattle the present law provides for a tariff of $2 per head if less than 1 year old, $3.75 per head if more than 1 year old and valued at less than $14 per head, and 27½ per cent if valued at more than $14. The Senate bill proposes to place them on the free list. Now let us consider the tariffs of other countries. England admits cattle free. France has a general duty of $2.63 per 100 pounds, live weight, and a minimum duty of $1.75 per 100 pounds. The general rate applies to imports from the United States. Germany has a general duty of $1.94 per 100 pounds and a conventional duty of 86 cents per 100 pounds. The conventional rate applies to imports from the United States. Austria-Hungary has a rate of $3.65 per head for young cattle, $6.09 per head for cows, and $12.18 per head for oxen. In the case of oxen there is a conventional rate of 87 cents per 100 pounds, live weight, which applies to imports from the United States. Belgium has a tariff of from 26 cents to 44 cents per 100 pounds, live weight, on cattle. The Netherlands admits cattle free. The general rates and conventional rates of Italy both range from $1.54 to $7.33 per head, with an additional tax, called a statistical tax, of 2 cents per head. The conventional rate applies to imports from this country. Spain assesses duties ranging from $8.59 to $15.44 per head on cattle, with lower duties ranging from $6.76 to $15.44 per head on imports from more favored nations. Russia admits cattle free. Our neighbor on the north—Canada—imposes an ad valorem tariff of 25 per cent as a general rate, with an intermediate rate of 22½ per cent.

The general rate applies to imports from this country and most other countries. Our nearest neighbor on the south, Mexico, admits cattle free. Cuba imposes a duty of $1.33 per 100 pounds, live weight, on cattle, with a special duty of 79 cents per 100 pounds on imports from the United States. Brazil imposes a duty of $14.23 per head on cattle. I will say at this point that the given Brazilian duty is higher, but as 65 per cent of the duty is payable in depreciated paper currency and only 35 per cent is payable in gold—unless there has been a change made recently—this has the effect of reducing the duty actually paid to the figures given above. The same observation holds true as to the other Brazilian rates which I shall cite. In computing these duties they have been computed on a basis of 65 per cent being payable in paper and 35 per cent in gold. Argentina admits cattle free. Japan levies an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent. Australia protects her stock growers by a duty of $2.44 per head of cattle. New Zealand also levies a tariff of $2.44 per head.

Now, let us see what the commercial nations of the world do with regard to the rate on horses.

Horses are protected by the Payne Act by a duty of $30 per head if valued at $150 or less, and an ad valorem duty of 25 per cent if valued at more than $150. The Senate bill reduces this to 10 per cent ad valorem on all horses. England, of course, admits horses free. The general duties in France range from $28.95 to $43.42 per head, and the minimum duties from $19.30 to $28.95 per head. The German general duties range from $21.42 to $83.68 per head, and the conventional duties from $17.40 to $83.68 per head. Austria-Hungary has a general rate of $20.30 per head if more than 2 years old, and $10.15 if less than 2 years old, with a conventional rate of $12.18 if more than 2 years old, and $6.09 if less than 2 years. Belgium has no tariff on horses. The Netherlands admits them free. Italy has a tariff of $7.72 per head. Spain levies duties ranging from $18.72 to $28.95 per head. Russia admits them free. Canada has a rate of $12.50, if valued at less than $50, and a general rate of 25 per cent ad valorem, an intermediate rate of 22½ per cent on horses valued at more than $50. Mexico has a duty of $24.85 per head on geldings, others free. Cuba has a general rate of $18.75 per head, with a special rate of $15 on horses imported from the United States. Brazil has a duty of $27.38 per head. Argentina admits horses free. Japan has a duty of 5 per cent ad valorem. New Zealand has a duty of $4.87 per head. Australia assesses a duty of $2.40 per head.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has been speaking almost two hours. The day is excessively hot and some of us have been sitting here every moment for six consecutive hours. It has been understood that we would adjourn about 6 o'clock, and I will ask the Senator from Missouri if he does not think we might well take an adjournment now?

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota about how much additional time he thinks he will occupy in concluding his remarks?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say that I had very much hoped that I would be able to finish to-day. I do not object to interruptions, but I have been interrupted so much that I am not quite half through with my speech.

Mr. STONE. Not quite half through?

Mr. GRONNA. Personally I feel very much like going on and finishing, because I remember that two years ago when I took up the time of the Senate for the better part of two days I was criticized for taking so much time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the distinguished Senator from North Dakota? Having heard him state that he has not finished more than half of his very well prepared, studious oration upon this subject, I should like to ask the Senator if it would comport with his convenience that he resume to-morrow, and that we at this time, at 6 o'clock, turn to some other business, perchance an executive session on the motion of the Senator from Georgia, and that the Senator from North Dakota resume to-morrow, if he is at a stopping point in his speech now?

Mr. GRONNA. I, of course, will gladly yield to the wishes of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator, but I think it might consult the convenience and the physical relief of the Senator to pause at this time.

Mr. GRONNA. So far as I am concerned it is convenient for me to go on at any time. To-morrow will do, of course, just as well as to-day; but I want it understood that it was not especially my desire, nor is it my desire, I will say with all candor, to delay the Senate in considering the bill paragraph by paragraph. I realize as much as those who are, perhaps, more directly responsible for this legislation than I am that they want to get through with the bill, and so far as I am personally concerned I shall be very glad to go on to-day with my speech.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator could go on for about an hour——

Mr. BACON. We have some matters of importance to consider in executive session.

Mr. PENROSE. I take it for granted that the Senator from North Dakota will have the floor in the morning to continue his remarks. That will follow as a matter of course.

Mr. LEWIS. Any other course than that would be discourteous. No one on this side of the Chamber contemplates any other course.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course the Senator would go on with his speech to-morrow if we go into executive session now.

Mr. PENROSE. And then we can either adjourn or have an executive session.

Mr. BACON. We have some matters of importance to consider in executive session.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think probably we had better have an executive session.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senate that if it is expected to hold an executive session I will gladly yield at any time for that purpose.

Mr. PENROSE. Or for adjournment.

Mr. GRONNA. Or for adjournment, with the understanding, of course, that I will be permitted to finish the few observations that I have to make to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course.

Mr. PENROSE. That goes without saying. That is the Senator's right.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I think possibly the public business may be expedited by having a short executive session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 6 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 1, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE SHARPLES SEPARATOR CO.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not wish to correct the Record, but I do desire to correct a mistake of fact which the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] unwittingly fell into on Wednesday, when the Senator from Pennsylvania, joining in the wailing chorus of jeremiads sweeping over the Senate, among other things called attention to numerous cases of industrial depression and suspension of industrial enterprises. Among others was the Sharples Separator Co. I desire to read what the Senator said on that occasion with respect to the Sharples Separator Co. The Senator from Pennsylvania said:

One final case, and I am done—that of the Sharples cream separator concern, located about 30 miles from Philadelphia, in the city of West Chester. The Sharples cream separator is an invention of Mr. Sharples, on which he has built up a plant there employing many men and women and children. His goods, the cream separators, are shipped not only all over the United States but all over the world, to China and to the Orient. Within a week that concern has completed the absolute transfer of its plant to Hamburg, and no longer is there a vestige of it left in the State of Pennsylvania.

This morning I clipped from the Philadelphia Inquirer——

Mr. PENROSE. I saw it.

Mr. STONE. A communication from the Sharples Separator Co., by L. P. Sharples, one of its officials, and I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SHARPLES SEPARATOR TO REMAIN.

To the Editor of the Inquirer:

Owing to the state of the weather everybody in our home office and main factory at West Chester woke up this morning wishing we were anywhere except on the job.

In consequence it was like kicking a man when he was down to find that your paper this morning quoted Senator PENROSE as having said on the floor of the Senate that we are bag and baggage in Germany. If it were not for the necessity of filling orders, the personnel of our organization would like to be.

We would appreciate being set straight in this regard, as there is no question but what Senator PENROSE has been misinformed.

The following states our position and may be used as your editorial sense dictates:

The information on which Senator PENROSE based his assertion in Congress, Wednesday, was absolutely incorrect. The Sharples Separator Co. has no intention of transferring any part of its American works to its Germany factory.

Regardless of the passage of a tariff bill, adverse to their interests, the Sharples works, their sales and service organizations will remain in full force in the United States. Sharples has been too long on American soil that it can move to any other and prepare to call it home.

Very truly, yours, THE SHARPLES SEPARATOR CO.,
L. P. SHARPLES.

WEST CHESTER, PA., July 31.

Mr. STONE. The other corporation referred to by the Senator has not yet been heard from; we have had no returns. I simply put in this one now.

Mr. PENROSE. I expected this to be brought up this morning, Mr. President, and I will have by Monday the full facts in connection with the Sharples Cream Separator Co. to submit to the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, it does seem cruel that this should be perpetrated on the Senator from Pennsylvania at this particular time. But I do want to say, just in addition to the little I said regarding the Sharples separators, if the Sharples Co. are not only, according to the Senator's statement, furnishing separators for milk in the United States, but are shipping them all over the earth, to China and the Orient, my God, what more can they want in a tariff bill? Do they want to supply Mars and all the other planets? It seems to me they are pretty thoroughly established and work very nicely under the present régime, and they are perfectly satisfied.

Mr. PENROSE. As I said, Mr. President, I will have the precise facts in this case to submit to the Senate on Monday.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to say, in response to what the Senator said, that I think it would be very wise if all Senators on the other side would have the precise facts at hand before they put statements of that kind in the RECORD.

Mr. PENROSE. I only made a general statement, and if the Senator from Missouri wants details I shall be ready to furnish them to him next week, when I get them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Missouri is so broad as to include every reference to cases of this nature. I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that the day the tariff bill came over here I made the statement that the Hoe Printing Press Co. were getting their London office and factory in shape to manufacture presses there after the passage of this bill. I give as my authority for the statement the word of the president of the company, who told me so at his office in New York before I made the statement.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, would the Senator from Missouri object to modifying his suggestion so as to apply to all Members of the Senate, that they shall be certain that they have the facts before they proceed to state them? His suggestion was limited to one side. I see no objection, if the Senator sees none, to enlarging it to take in the entire Senate.

Mr. OLIVER. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Petitions and memorials are in order.

TARIFF DUTY ON IVORY TUSKS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I present three petitions from workmen in ivory piano key factories, asking that ivory tusks be left upon the free list. They are from Pratt & Read & Co., 413 men; Comstock & Cheny & Co., 545 men; and the Piano & Organ Supply Co., 339 men; the total being 1,297 laborers in these factories.

I suppose, Mr. President, that ivory tusks, which have always been upon the free list, have been placed upon the dutiable list with a duty of 20 per cent on the theory that they are a luxury. I am informed that of the 375,000 pianos annually manufactured in the United States, 90 per cent of them go into the homes of mechanics and people of small means, and that this percentage is sold on the installment plan with average payments of less than $5 a month. Later on amendments will be presented to restore that product to the free list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. While I am on my feet, Mr. President, I desire to say in connection with the petition which I presented the other day that I have received a letter from the Hockanum Mills Co., of Rockville, Conn., a part of which I will ask the Secretary to read, and then I will make a few remarks upon it.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

THE HOCKANUM MILLS CO.,
Rockville, Conn., July 30, 1913.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am much pleased to see in the paper this morning that you have moved to have a date set for the going into effect of the free wool and the woolen goods duties.

We are now offering for sale goods for next summer and we are greatly embarrassed, because we do not know when we will get free wool nor when the goods duties go into effect.

We should have five or six months between free wool and the new goods duties, and that has been the custom in all former tariff legislation, I believe.

Our light-weight goods season for next summer begins, as I said, now, and deliveries of those goods should end next February or March.

All of the mills of the country, with very few exceptions, are running on less than 25 per cent production, as stated in Mr. Hill's letter to you, and if we can not get some positive dates fixed the mills are apt to be less employed than 25 per cent.

As I said before, we are all very much pleased that you have taken up this matter in such a positive way, and are in hopes that the powers that be can get together and enact some positive date so that the woolen mills can either do a little business or get out of business.

I am yours, sincerely,

F. T. MAXWELL, President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In connection with the same matter I have a statement from the Trans-Atlantic Import Co., made by Mr. Harry Rosenbaum, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

TRANS-ATLANTIC IMPORT CO.,
New York, July 30, 1913.

Senator BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Have read with a great deal of pleasure in to-day's paper your suggestion of the passage of a joint resolution setting forth when the new rates on textiles would become effective.

I congratulate you on having grasped the situation and personally thank you, and you have the thanks of a great many other people engaged in the textile business to-day.

I inclose you herein copy of an interview published on the 19th of April, more than three months ago, setting forth your views exactly. If the Senate to-day were to appoint a committee to visit the cutting-up markets of New York, Cleveland, and Chicago and see the state of the textile industry, they would be simply amazed at the chaotic condition in which it exists.

Merchants as a rule have anticipated the tariff bill to be passed as early as July or August, and where the House states explicitly the bill to be effective immediately upon its passage, and the Senate report of the Finance Committee making Schedule K effective on January 1, 1914, has caused such an uncertainty in the trade that business in textiles of all descriptions is at an absolute standstill, and business conditions to-day, one thing reflecting upon another, are in a worse condition than they have ever been in any panic times we have had in this country for 20 years.

The credit of the cutter up of merchandise has been impaired owing to the uncertainty. The cutter up of merchandise will not accept his deliveries. The retail merchant and department-store buyer has been instructed not to buy, expecting a revision at some time or other, prior to the sale season or before there will be any consumption. Manufacturers of textiles in this country have all curtailed their output. Importers of textiles have canceled the better part of their European contracts, and should the tariff bill take effect in the immediate future, the consumer will not be benefited in any way whatsoever, because there will be a scarcity, and the demand will come the moment the consumption starts and then it will be a question of supply and demand.

If, as you suggest, a joint resolution were passed, stating the date, it would allay this panicky feeling, settle the uncertainty, people would go to work and make the best of the situation, and would anticipate the future.

The country has been reconciled, ever since Wilson's election, that we were to have a tariff revision. This has been discounted. We believe it to be inevitable, but if a date were set, you will pardon my English, "both the Senate and the House can chew the rag indefinitely," and people would go about their business.

Were I selfishly inclined, the tariff bill could not take effect too soon, but considering the best interests of the country as a whole, any date is better than the uncertainty.

I hope sincerely that your suggestion will be presented and that it will pass, and assure you in advance that you would receive the congratulations of many thousands of textile men throughout the United States.

Pardon this long discourse, and awaiting your reply, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

H. ROSENBAUM.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read an interview published in the Commercial and Financial World of April 19, 1913, on this same question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Commercial and Financial World of Apr. 19, 1913.]

A matter in regard to which there is the greatest criticism is the fact that no date has been set for the taking effect of the new bill. A few months earlier or later will make all the difference in the world to importers and domestic manufacturers, and it is no more than right and fair that they should know just what they have to face.

Mr. Harry Rosenbaum, of the Trans-Atlantic Import Co., of 105 Fifth Avenue, has pointed out this feature of the situation in a very clear and convincing fashion. He says:

"Unless importers and domestic manufacturers are advised promptly when this bill is to go into effect, business will be stagnant until we receive this vitally important information. Were I obsessed of selfishness I would say the sooner the bill became operative the better for ourselves. But considering the best interests of the country as a whole, we favor January 1 next, which will give merchants ample time to adjust themselves to the new state of affairs. Enactment without plenty of time for preparation would be ruinous to many small merchants."

And it is not only the importers who need to know the date as to when the bill is to become law. Manufacturers of domestic goods say that millions of dollars' worth of orders and raw material of great value stand in danger of being greatly injured unless definite time is fixed.

It is proposed to call the attention of Congress to this omission through trade associations and other commercial bodies. It is stated by handlers of domestic and foreign goods that heavy losses will have to be taken in the shape of a smaller business and the liquidation of stocks in the hands of all distributors unless a date is fixed at once.

Buyers are requesting that no goods be shipped until something definite is known regarding when the new rates are to go into effect, and this was one of the primary reasons why factors who cater to the cutting-up trade began to bestir themselves. Another phase of the business was that many purchasers advised mill agents they would make commitments for immediate requirements only and that they were beginning already to adjust themselves to the conditions they anticipated would arise in the near future.

Mr. Rosenbaum also calls attention to the fact that the duty on pile fabrics in the new tariff will be 50 per cent ad valorem, while the duty on the same fabrics made into garments on the other side and imported as finished garments will be only 35 per cent, which is not sufficient duty to protect the large American cloak industry.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a few days ago, when I brought this matter to the attention of the Senate, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the chairman of the Finance Committee, was kind enough to say that he would confer with members of the Ways and Means Committee of the other House and see if some date could be fixed upon by them, with a view of notifying the interests concerned as to when the new tariff duties would go into effect. I noted in one of the morning newspapers that some such conferences had been held, but that they had "borne no fruit," in the language of the newspaper. I now ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance if he is ready to make any statement to the Senate as to the result of his interviews or conferences upon this subject?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, what the manufacturers of wool seem to desire is that before we pass a tariff bill we shall make provision outside of the bill for the wool industry. I have stated that I recognized some embarrassment would come to that industry from the conflict between the provisions of the House and the Senate bill with reference to the time when this schedule should go into effect and was willing to do what I could toward ascertaining whether that difference could be reasonably adjusted in advance of a meeting of the conference. I have conferred with the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, and I find that he does not feel authorized, in advance of the conference, to recede from the position of the other House, and I do not feel authorized, in advance of the meeting of the conference, to recede from the position taken by the Finance Committee in the amendment proposed to the Senate. Of course, if the Senator from Connecticut desires to introduce any resolution on the subject, he is at liberty to do so, and it can take its course between the two Houses. It does not seem to me, however, Mr. President, speaking frankly about it, that there is any remedy for this situation except the speedy passage of the bill, and I hope we may have that.

I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut, Does he prefer the House provision to the Senate provision with reference to the time when this schedule shall go into effect?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have no fixed idea of my own about it, not being familiar with the technicalities of the woolen business. I can, however, see the force of the position of those who are interested in it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will understand, if he will pardon me for a moment, that this postponement of the date was in the nature of a concession, which we thought was proper under the circumstances. Of course, if the concession brings about difficulties of more consequence than the advantages, the committee will be glad to have the views of Senators on the other side about that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he thinks the House conferees will agree to the Senate amendment as to the time the rates take effect.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am utterly unable to answer the Senator with respect to that; I am not authorized to say whether they would or would not. I think probably the chairman of that committee feels the same delicacy in speaking in advance for the conferees of the House that I would feel in speaking in advance for the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I will frankly say to the Senator that I believe both the growers and the manufacturers of wool would prefer the provision reported by the Committee on Finance of the Senate to the House provision, but what they do want, if possible, is to know when the rates are to take effect. The lightweight season of the woolen-goods business is on; people have to place their orders——

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. And it is for that reason that some definite understanding, if it be possible, should be had. I do not say, however, that it is possible.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator see the difficulties about that?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President; I do see the difficulties, and I am not complaining at all. I simply wanted to know if the Senator had any idea whether the House committee would agree to the Senate amendment, because, if they would, I think that at least an intimation could then be given to the purchasers of woolen goods that that would be the case.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can only say to the Senator that I have seen and heard of no disposition upon the part of the House to yield its position upon that question.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator from North Carolina asked the Senator from Connecticut which of the two provisions, the Senate or the House provision, he preferred.

Mr. SIMMONS. I meant, of course, which one the woolen industry preferred. I did not mean to inquire as to the preference of an individual Senator, but I meant the woolen industry.

Mr. LIPPITT. I so understood, and I was simply going to say that, while I am not a woolen manufacturer any more than is the Senator from Connecticut, I do think there is very little doubt that the woolen manufacturers, as a rule, and the entire woolen trade, as a rule, would very much prefer the Senate provision. I also want to say that I think the situation in which the introduction of the Senate amendment has left this whole question is infinitely worse than though the Senate committee had taken no action at all, because I think the trade could take steps to accommodate itself as well as might be to either course if they knew which course was going to be pursued.

Under the present condition two very different courses have been suggested; and the situation is left in the position where there is no man in the woolen trade who knows whether the provisions of this bill affecting wool are to go into effect at one date or the other. While I believe the members of the Finance Committee of the Senate in adopting this amendment did so with a view to helping the woolen manufacturer, it seems to me that it was most unfortunate that in proposing such a change they did not first get some idea as to whether or not their suggestion would meet with favor at the other end of this building.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have yielded to the Senator from Rhode Island, but if I have a right to yield to more than one Senator at the same time I yield cheerfully to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. I merely want to say to the Senator from Rhode Island, in connection with his suggestion that the action of the Senate committee in extending the time when this bill was to take effect would do the woolen industry greater injury than to have readily agreed to the House provision, that many representatives of the woolen industry appeared before our committee and requested this amendment. Certainly they knew that we were merely a coordinate branch of the Government, and that our action was not a finality as to what would be the law; that the House had to be considered; but they very urgently requested the Senate to extend the time as of vital importance to them.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, what the Senator says in regard to the woolen manufacturers knowing the condition in regard to the two Houses agreeing is perfectly true. They ought to have known that; but, as a plain matter of fact, very few of them thoroughly realize that very feature in the passage of a bill. They are not technically informed in that respect. What they came down here to urge—and did urge, I believe, very strenuously—was that there should be a fixed, definite date in advance of the final passage of this bill upon which the duty on wool should go into effect, and another date, subsequent to that date by three or four months, as the case might be, upon which it should go into effect upon the manufactures of wool. They hoped, if such a provision were put into this bill in the form of an amendment, that it would be with the idea that it should be the final policy of those who are responsible for the bill.

If it is simply put in the bill with the strong probability that when the bill actually becomes a law the policy of the House of Representatives will prevail, or even with uncertainty as to which policy is going to prevail, almost anybody, no matter how little technical he is, can readily see the confusion of mind into which every merchant and manufacturer connected with the business is put. I think that is perfectly plain.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, while as an ordinary proposition some of these small manufacturers would not be familiar with the technicalities of legislation, yet I do recall that Mr. Whitman, if I am not very much mistaken, made an argument before our committee in which he cited the Wilson bill as extending the time and as a precedent that we ought to follow. Certainly Mr. Whitman understood, as I have no doubt the Senator will agree, that the Senate committee could only recommend this action to the Senate, and, of course, that would not be binding upon the House.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not want to take too much of the time of the Senator from Connecticut, but I want to say that we all know how legislation is accomplished. We all know that people who are prominent in the councils of a party, as the chairman of the Finance Committee is prominent and as the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House is prominent, can agree on such a thing as this or can have some harmony of view upon it. All that was necessary to have had this matter definitely understood, with a strong probability of the final result, was that before any change in the policy was suggested in this body it should be known that in a general way the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee sympathized with that view. Simply to suggest here a policy opposed to the policy of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee adds no beneficial effect to the situation, but, on the contrary, as I am trying to explain, increases the confusion manyfold.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I trust the Senator understands that in making amendments to this bill the Senate committee did not consider whether or not the House was going to agree to the amendments and desist from making them because it did not know what might be the final attitude of the House with reference to the amendments. We, of course, made the amendments that have been made upon our judgment.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am sure the Senator from North Carolina will not deny that it would have relieved this confusion very greatly if the situation I have tried to describe, of a harmony of opinion between the two branches, had been arrived at before some different policy had been suggested.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, of course the situation we have now was not anticipated; and if it had been anticipated I suppose Senators would have felt a delicacy in going over to the House and inquiring of the House Ways and Means Committee whether they would agree to an amendment if we made it.

I have said all I can say about the matter, and that is that I have seen no disposition on the part of the House committee to indicate any purpose to recede from its action. It might be well for us to consider what course we would pursue in that respect, in view of the fact that Senators state that rather than have this uncertainty it would be better to accept the House proposition. That is a matter about which I can express no opinion, but it is one that might be considered.

I want to say, in addition, before I finish, that there is one thing that might be done, and only one thing that I can see now; and so far as I am concerned I will do what I can to have that course pursued. When the conferees meet, in view of this situation, it can be arranged, I think, to take up this item in conference first, and try to reach some final conclusion about it; and in that way the final settlement of the matter might be advanced.

Mr. LIPPITT. I hope such a course will be pursued.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If I may.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to submit a couple of favorable reports in regard to routine matters from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I am sure the resolutions will pass without any question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection whatever, but I think it is in violation of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I ask unanimous consent to do it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall not raise the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask immediate consideration for the resolutions. I am sure there will be no objection. One of them is to give six months' pay to the widow of a dead employee and the other is to add to the pay of a clerk of one of the committees.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, personally I have no objection whatever to this matter being interpolated at this time. My impression is, however, that the rule provides that a Senator shall not be interrupted to present a matter of this sort, and that it shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce the rule without his attention being called to it. I may be mistaken about that, but I will yield if I can.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am still waiting to get the consent of the Senator from Connecticut. I had no idea of presenting the reports without his consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator from Mississippi had heard me, he would have realized that I had given my consent three times, when once was enough.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then if the Senator——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I now give it for the fourth time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator has given his consent, then I ask immediate consideration for the resolutions. They will take only a minute. They are matters of routine business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Mississippi tell the Chair how the Chair is to get out of enforcing the rule?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose anybody with intelligence can do anything by unanimous consent, Mr. President. I do not know. A man can do it; two men can do it; three men can do it; six men can do it; any organization I have ever heard of can do it. I have asked unanimous consent, and if unanimous consent is granted there is nothing in the way.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. All the Chair has to do is to put to the Senate the request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rules say that the Chair shall not do it. The Chair does not have much intelligence, but the Chair can read the rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this is still the morning hour, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has the floor, and we have not yet reached reports of committees.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will wait until we do, then.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am very sorry the Senator could not get the matter attended to at this time.

The statement of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] that the Senate committee made this change in the date at the request of certain woolen interests seems to me to have no bearing upon this case. Admit that the Senate amendment is better than the House provision——

Mr. JAMES. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not state that we had made it at the instance or request of the woolen interests. I did state that they appeared and urged it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not mean to intimate that the committee was unduly under the influence of the woolen interests. Far from it. What I meant to say was that even if the Senate amendment was proposed by the committee after the woolen interests had suggested that it would be an improvement, it seems to have no relevancy to the present difficulty. The trouble is that the House has proposed one time and the Senate has proposed another.

After this matter has been called to the attention of the Finance Committee, and after everybody admits the embarrassment to this great trade in all its branches all over the country, for the Senator to say that if somebody else wants to introduce a resolution to try to smooth out this trouble there is no rule to prevent his doing so, and to prophesy that while it might be considered it probably would produce no remedy, is hardly the attitude that, it seems to me, the great Finance Committee of the Senate ought to take on this matter.

Here is a situation which imperils the whole woolen industry of this country. Authoritative documents have been put into the RECORD showing that the business is running on 25 per cent of its possibilities of production at the present time, and that there is a panicky feeling all through the business, from the production of the raw material to the sale of the manufactured product. To have the great Finance Committee of the Senate and the great Ways and Means Committee of the House stand here saying that they can not consider the remedy until the disease has proved fatal seems to me to be an admission of impotency that I exceedingly regret to discover in the Congress of the United States. The fact that after the bill gets into conference, at some indefinite date in the future, they may then take up this as one of the first matters to be considered in conference would have no tendency to calm the excited feeling in this trade which now exists. If the matter were taken up in conference as the first item, there is no assurance whatever that it would be reported independently and in advance of the entire conference report, if the conferees shall be able to agree.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am in full sympathy with the desire expressed by the Senator from Connecticut that this time should be extended, certainly as long as provided in the Senate amendment; but I do not quite see, and I ask the Senator from Connecticut if he sees, any way in which the matter can be determined at the present moment. The House has passed the bill. It has been sent to the Senate, and the Senate proposes to amend it. However friendly the Finance Committee or the Senate itself may be to the Senate amendment, does the Senator think there is any method by which we can get assurance from the other body that they will agree to the Senate amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. None except what I suggested the other day, which was that the Finance Committee of the Senate should report a joint resolution fixing the dates and send it over to the House of Representatives, and then let the House of Representatives act upon it, and, if necessary, appoint a conference committee upon the joint resolution if there is disagreeing action. That was the only way I could think of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know whether there are precedents for that or not; but at first blush it strikes me that before a bill has been passed and before it goes to conference it would be rather extraordinary for us to pass a joint resolution of that kind.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It might be extraordinary.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, when the Senator had this matter up before I suggested to him that it would be not only an extraordinary thing but a very difficult thing to draw a resolution of that sort.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not anticipate any difficulty in drawing it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think when the Senator undertakes to do it he will find that there is difficulty.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not sure but that I shall undertake it, notwithstanding the warning of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have full knowledge of the fact that some of my own constituents are extremely solicitous about this matter, and if there is any remedy I hope we shall find it. But, as I look at the parliamentary situation, it seems to me the remedy is not visible to the naked eye, and that we shall find great difficulty in discovering it. That is my impression.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the difficulty which the Senator from Connecticut is seeking to obviate is the fact that the bill as it comes from the House provides that the duties shall go into effect immediately upon the passage of the bill and the Senate amendment provides that they shall go into effect on the 1st of January. As I understand, this change in the time when they shall go into effect is made at the request of the woolgrowers of the West.

Mr. SIMMONS. The woolgrowers of the West asked for it, yes; that is, through their representatives. I do not recall now that any woolgrower himself came, but the representatives of that section of the country asked for it.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Connecticut is not insisting upon a particular date, but upon a date?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; not only a date when the duty upon raw wool shall go into effect, but a date arranged with relation to that, in view of the seasonal nature of the trade, when the duties upon manufactured products of wool shall take effect; and that the two shall be arranged with proper reference to the time between the laying in of the raw material and the time when the manufacturers have to make contracts for the production of the manufactured article.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is not objecting particularly, then, to the fact that the bill provides at this time that it shall go into effect on the 1st of January?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; and of course my idea about which particular dates would be best for the trade is no better than that of any other Senator. In fact, other Senators' ideas are much better than mine, for they know more about the business.

I have said all I care to say about the matter this morning. I think in the near future I shall introduce a joint resolution which I hope will have the consideration of the Finance Committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I venture the suggestion that if the Senator from Connecticut, using his persuasive methods, which we all understand, could induce the Senators on the other side who will be on the conference committee to stand out, not only a week or a month but as long as might be necessary, against the House conferees, and insist that this amendment should be agreed to, we would then have a practical solution of the matter.

If the bill shall be passed as it has come from the committee of the Senate, with this very desirable amendment, I hope the conferees on the part of the Senate will conceive it to be their duty to make a special contest to carry their point; because, laying aside all controversy about the duties on raw wool or manufactures of wool, there is no question that our manufacturing interests, at least—and I speak simply from a general knowledge—are very much disturbed over this particular phase of the proposed legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. I just want to add to what has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire that they may well be disturbed, for the reason that from the time the raw wool is taken into the mill, if its manufacture is immediately started, it is generally four months before it is made into cloth; and the manufacturers ought to have that difference so as to protect themselves in regard to the wool they have on hand.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present resolutions adopted by the Senate of the State of Texas relative to conditions in Mexico. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Senate of the United States is now engaged in debating a resolution offered by a distinguished United States Senator from the West concerning the policy that should be pursued by the Government of the United States in defense of the rights of its citizens in Mexico; and

Whereas American lives have been jeopardized and American property destroyed in Mexico by a persistent refusal of this Government to extend the proper protection to its citizens and their property in that country, when other foreign countries were protecting their citizens and their property rights by a firm attitude; and

Whereas a firm and dignified policy which recognizes and respects the rights of our neighboring Republic and demands in return respect of the rights of our citizens there would tend to preserve peace by promoting mutual respect; and

Whereas the national Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore on July 2, 1912, contains the following declaration of party faith, to wit:

"We pledge ourselves anew to preserve the sacred rights of American citizenship at home and abroad. The constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders and go with them throughout the world, and every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government, both for himself and his property":

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of Texas that the Government of the United States should redeem and give meaning to the foregoing pledge of party faith in vindication of the national honor; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be instructed to forthwith transmit this resolution by mail to the President of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives from Texas.

The above resolution was this day adopted by the Senate of Texas.

W. V. HOWERTON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator from Texas permit me to make an inquiry? I should like to inquire of him whether his resolution was to be read?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I did not ask that it be read. If the Senator would like to hear it, it can be read. It is brief.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What was the reference?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CLAPP presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. OLIVER presented a memorial of the Civil Service Reform Association of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the adoption of Paragraph O, section 2, of the pending tariff bill, relating to the collection of the income tax, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I present sundry petitions signed by many estimable women of Delaware, favoring the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (for Mr. CHAMBERLAIN), from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1673) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant further extensions of time within which to make proof on desert-land entries in the county of Grant, State of Washington, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 94) thereon.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2576) for the relief of John Q. Adams, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 96) thereon.

SALARY OF ASSISTANT COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate Senate resolution 133, submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] July 15. I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 5, before the words "per annum," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,800," and in line 6, before the words "to be paid," to strike out "$560" and insert "$360," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be authorized to employ one of his three assistant clerks, each now drawing a salary of $1,440 per annum under the act of March 4, 1913, at the rate of $1,800 per annum, the difference of $360 to be paid from miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, until otherwise provided by law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SARAH W. PATRICK.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I report back favorably with an amendment from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate Senate resolution 140, submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] July 21. I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, after the name "Sarah," to insert "W.," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Sarah W. Patrick, widow of Lewis S. Patrick, late clerk to the Committee to Investigate Trespassers on Indian Lands, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (H. R. 6383) to amend section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, and I submit a report (No. 93) thereon.

I will state that the bill authorizes the advertisement and sale of the present post-office building and grounds in the city of Newark, N. J. Newark is the largest city in our State, having approximately a population of half a million. We have outgrown the present quarters. The bill proposes to grant authority to sell the present post-office building and grounds for a sum not less than $1,800,000 and then to devote $800,000 for the purchase of a site that shall be fitting and proper according to the department, and it provides further for the use of $1,000,000 for the erection of a building. It is quite essential that the matter be taken in hand at once, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It will cost the Government nothing. There are no amendments to the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not wish to object to its consideration and I will not do so, with the understanding that if it leads to any debate the Senator will withdraw it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I certainly will acquiesce in that. There are no amendments and the bill is reported by the committee unanimously. I can see no reason for debate. If it should lead to debate, I certainly would withdraw it.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. STERLING. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 2419) permitting male minors of the age of 18 years or over to make homestead entry or other entry on the public lands of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 95) thereon. The bill is accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which I ask that the Secretary may read, with a view of asking unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The letter of the Department of the Interior is as follows——

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it necessary to read that letter in connection with the report?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota has asked that the letter be read to show the necessity for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall object to the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes to the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK of Wyoming:

A bill (S. 2870) to provide for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 2871) to amend section 99 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 2872) granting an increase of pension to Patrick J. Conway; and

A bill (S. 2873) granting an increase of pension to David N. Taylor; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 2874) granting a pension to Catherine Kelly (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

DUTIES ON COTTON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. LIPPITT. I submit a proposed amendment which I desire to offer to the tariff bill, and I should like to have it read and lie on the table.

The amendment was read, ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Beginning on page 73, strike out paragraphs 255 to 271, inclusive. In lieu thereof insert the following:

"PAR. 255. From and after the day following the passage of this act, in lieu of the terms and provisions of Schedule I of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1909, the terms and provisions of Schedule I of the act of Congress approved July 24, 1897, shall be substituted: Provided, That the rates of duty shall be the same as those imposed in said Schedule I of the act of July 24, 1897, less 20 per cent thereof."

GOODS IN BOND.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I offer a resolution (S. Res. 146) for which I ask present consideration, and for fear the Secretary may not be able to follow my handwriting I will read it:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to furnish for the use of the Senate the following information:

1. The value of imported commodities now held under bond for warehousing or other purpose which have been entered without payment of duty.

2. The value of such commodities so held at the same time in the year 1912.

3. An estimate of the total amount of the duties payable upon such commodities under existing tariff laws.

4. An estimate of the amount of duties which would be payable under the proposed tariff bill, H. R. 3321, as the same is reported to the Senate by the Finance Committee of the Senate.

I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not object to the request, for the resolution is pertinent to the proposed amendment to the tariff bill submitted by the Senator from Utah on July 18.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

SEGREGATION ORDER IN POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CLAPP (by request) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 147), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Whereas it is reported that there has been a segregation order issued by some unknown source or authority in the Post Office Department; and

Whereas the clerks and employees have worked together peacefully for over 50 years; and

Whereas the said segregation order will cost the Government of the United States over $150,000: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into and to report by what authority the said segregation order was issued and what necessity, if any, exists for such order in the executive department after 50 years of perfect peace among the employees of the department, which order makes it very inconvenient for the clerks.

LIEUT. ROY C. SMITH.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 148), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs or a subcommittee thereof are hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to investigate the charges preferred against Lieut. Roy C. Smith, formerly with the Asiatic Squadron, upon which his resignation was demanded after threatening trial by court-martial.

The said committee or subcommittee are for this purpose authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem desirable or practicable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to conduct hearings, and have reports of same printed for use.

THE TARIFF.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3321.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], at the top of page 29. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, when the Senate took an adjournment yesterday I was about to proceed to discuss the tariff on sheep.

Our present law has a duty on sheep of 75 cents per head if less than 1 year old and $1.50 per head if more than 1 year. The Senate bill places sheep on the free list. France has a general duty of $3.50 per 100 pounds and a minimum duty of $2.19 per 100 pounds. Germany has a general duty of $1.94 per 100 pounds and a conventional duty of 86 cents per 100 pounds. Austria-Hungary has a duty of 51 cents per head; Belgium 39 cents per head. England and the Netherlands admit sheep free. Italy imposes a duty of 58 cents per head plus the statistical tax of 2 cents. Spain has a duty of 77 cents per head, with a lower rate of 58 cents on sheep imported from favored countries. Russia has no duty on sheep. Canada has a general tariff of 25 per cent ad valorem, with an intermediate tariff of 22½ per cent. Mexico admits them free. Brazil has a rate of $2.05 per head. Argentina has no duty on sheep. Japan assesses them $1.49 per head. Australia protects her sheep with a rate of 48 cents per head. New Zealand admits them free.

The present law has a tariff of $1.50 per head on swine. The Senate bill places them on the free list. Other countries have duties on swine as follows: England, free; France, general duty $2.19 per 100 pounds, minimum duty $1.31 per 100 pounds; Germany, general rate $1.94 per 100 pounds, conventional duty 97 cents per 100 pounds; Austria-Hungary, 30 cents each on sucking pigs, $2.44 on others weighing less than 264 pounds, and $4.47 on hogs weighing more than 264 pounds; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, 58 cents each if weighing less than 22 pounds, $1.93 each if weighing more than 22 pounds; Spain, $2.12 each; Russia, free; Canada, general rate 1½ cents per pound, intermediate rate 1¼ cents per pound; Mexico, 50 cents per 100 pounds; Cuba, general rate, $1.25 each, special rate to the United States, $1 each; Brazil, $2.56 per head; Argentina, free; Japan, 20 per cent ad valorem; Australia, $1.20 each; New Zealand, free.

The Senate bill reduces the present rate of 30 cents per bushel on barley to 15 cents. The rates in some other countries are as follows: England, free; France, 13 cents per bushel; Germany, general rate, 36 cents per bushel; conventional rate, 21 cents per bushel; Austria-Hungary, general tariff, 18 cents per bushel; conventional tariff, 12 cents per bushel; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, 17 cents per bushel plus a statistical tax of a little less than one-half cent a bushel; Spain, 17 cents per bushel; Russia, free; Canada, general tariff, 15 cents per bushel; intermediate tariff, 12½ cents per bushel; Mexico, 35 cents per bushel; Cuba, 14 cents per bushel; if for brewing purposes, 11 cents per bushel; Brazil, 39 cents per bushel; Argentina, 16 cents per bushel; Japan, 10 cents per bushel; Australia, 23 cents per bushel; New Zealand, 23 cents per bushel.

On oats our present rate is 15 cents per bushel; the Senate bill reduces this to 6 cents per bushel. In other countries the tariffs are as follows: England, free; France, 8.4 cents per bushel; Germany, general rate, 24 cents per bushel; conventional rate, 17 cents per bushel; Austria-Hungary, general rate, 18½ cents per bushel; conventional rate, 15 cents per bushel; Belgium, 8 cents per bushel; the Netherlands, free; Italy, 11 cents per bushel; Spain, 11 cents per bushel; Russia, free; Canada, general tariff, 10 cents per bushel; intermediate tariff, 9 cents; Mexico, 12 cents per bushel; Cuba, 7½ cents per bushel, with the usual 20 per cent reduction on American imports; Brazil, 29 cents per bushel; Argentina, 21 cents per bushel; Japan, 8 cents per bushel; Australia, 12 cents per bushel; New Zealand, 6 cents per bushel.

On rice the Senate bill reduces the present duty of 2 cents a pound, cleaned, and 1¼ cents, uncleaned, to 1 cent and five-eighths cent a pound, respectively. Other countries have rates as follows: Great Britain, free; France, 70 cents per 100 pounds; Germany, pearled rice, general rate, 65 cents per 100 pounds; conventional rate, 43 cents per 100 pounds; rice, not cleaned, 43 cents per 100 pounds; Austria-Hungary, general rate, 55 cents per 100 pounds; conventional rate, 33 cents per 100 pounds; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, 96 cents per 100 pounds; Canada, cleaned rice, general rate, 75 cents per 100 pounds; intermediate rate, 65 cents per 100 pounds; uncleaned rice and paddy, free; Mexico, 2 cents per pound; Cuba, 54 cents per 100 pounds, with a 40 per cent reduction if imported from the United States; Brazil, $3.22 per 100 pounds; Argentina, 95 cents per 100 pounds; Japan, 38 cents per 100 pounds; Australia, $1.46 per 100 pounds; 81 cents per 100 pounds, if uncleaned; New Zealand, 18 cents per 100 pounds. The committee has treated the rice growers fairly well compared to the treatment accorded other farmers. The only above countries having a higher duty on rice than the proposed rate are Russia, 1½ cents per pound; Mexico, 2 cents; Brazil, almost 3¼ cents; and Australia, about 1½ cents.

Wheat, the great staple product of the Northwest, and also extensively raised in the Middle West, is at present protected by a duty of 25 cents per bushel; the Senate bill places it on the free list. Other important countries have rates as follows: Great Britain, free; France, 37 cents per bushel; Germany, general rate 48½ cents per bushel, conventional rate 35½ cents; Austria-Hungary, general tariff 43 cents per bushel, conventional tariff 36½ cents; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, 39 cents per bushel; Russia, free; Spain, 42 cents per bushel; Canada, general rate 12 cents per bushel, intermediate 10 cents; Mexico, 44 cents per bushel; Cuba, general rate 16 cents per bushel, to the United States 13 cents; Brazil, 14 cents per bushel; Argentina, seed wheat free, other wheat 25 per cent ad valorem, wheat except seed wheat is not specifically mentioned in the tariff act and would therefore be dutiable under the general provision that all goods not specifically charged with a duty and not exempted from duty shall pay a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem; Japan, 17 cents per bushel; Australia, 22½ cents per bushel; New Zealand, 11 cents per bushel. Great Britain, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Russia are the only ones of these countries to place wheat on the free list.

The duty on flaxseed is reduced by the Senate bill from the present duty of 25 cents per bushel to 15 cents per bushel. In other countries we find the following rates: Great Britain, free; France, if used for seed, general rate 23 cents per bushel, minimum rate 17 cents per bushel, if used for any other purpose than for seed, free; Germany, general rate 4½ cents per bushel, conventional rate free; Austria-Hungary, free; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, 23 cents per bushel; Russia, general rate 20 cents per bushel, conventional rate 12 cents; Spain, 5 cents per bushel; Canada, 10 cents per bushel; Mexico, 14 cents per bushel; Cuba, 32 cents per bushel with a 20 per cent reduction if imported from the United States; Brazil, $1.13 per bushel; Argentina, flax for seed free, other flax 25 per cent ad valorem; Japan, 13 cents per bushel; Australia, 27 cents per bushel; New Zealand, free.

On potatoes there is at present a duty of 25 cents per bushel; the Senate bill places them on the free list. Other countries, I find, have rates as follows: Great Britain, free; France, if imported between March 1 and June 1, general rate 32 cents per bushel, minimum rate 16 cents per bushel; if imported at any other time, general rate 16 cents per bushel, minimum rate 2 cents; Germany, from February 15 to July 31, general rate 16 cents per bushel, conventional rate 6 cents; from August 1 to February 14, free; Austria-Hungary, general rate $1.02 per bushel, conventional rate free; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, free; Russia, free; Spain, 6 cents per bushel; Canada, general tariff 20 cents per bushel, intermediate tariff 17½ cents; Mexico, 44 cents per bushel; Cuba, 18 cents per bushel; Argentina, free; Brazil, $1.03 per bushel; Japan, 30 per cent ad valorem; Australia, 13 cents per bushel; New Zealand, 13 cents per bushel.

On corn there is at the present time a duty of 15 cents per bushel; the Senate bill places it on the free list. Tariffs in other countries are as follows: Great Britain, free; France, 15 cents per bushel; Germany, general rate, 30 cents per bushel—conventional rate, 18 cents; Austria-Hungary, 21 cents per bushel general rate—14 cents conventional rate; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, 37 cents per bushel; Russia, free; Spain, 11 cents per bushel; Canada, not for distillation, free—if for distillation, 7½ cents per bushel; Mexico, 11 cents per bushel; Cuba, 10 cents per bushel; Brazil, 35 cents per bushel; Argentina, seed corn, free—other, 25 per cent ad valorem; Japan, 6 cents per bushel; Australia, 21 cents per bushel; New Zealand, 10 cents per bushel.

The Senate bill reduces the present duty of 6 cents per pound on butter to 2½ cents. The most important commercial countries have tariffs as follows on butter: Great Britain, free; France, general tariff $2.63 per 100 pounds, minimum tariff $1.75 per 100 pounds; Germany, general rate $3.23 per 100 pounds, conventional duty $2.16; Austria-Hungary, general rate $3.22 per 100 pounds, conventional rate $2.20 per 100 pounds; Belgium, $1.75 per 100 pounds; the Netherlands, free; Italy, $1.31 per 100 pounds; Russia, $1.07 per 100 pounds; Spain, $7.44 per 100 pounds; Canada, 4 cents per pound; Brazil, $28.82 per 100 pounds; Argentina, almost 4½ cents per pound; Japan, $11.14 per 100 pounds; Australia, 6 cents per pound; New Zealand, 30 per cent ad valorem.

On cheese, on which the Senate bill reduces the present duty of 6 cents per pound to 2½ cents, I find that foreign countries have duties as follows: Great Britain, free; France, general tariff, $3.06 per 100 pounds, minimum tariff, $1.05 to $1.75 per 100 pounds, depending on kind; Germany, general rate, $3.25 per 100 pounds; on certain kinds of cheese there is a conventional rate of $1.62; Austria-Hungary, general rate, $4.60 to $5.52 per 100 pounds; on certain kinds there is a conventional rate ranging from $1.10 to $1.30 per 100 pounds; Belgium, on certain kinds, $1.05 per 100 pounds; other kinds, free; the Netherlands, 91 cents per 100 pounds; Italy, general rate, $2.09 per 100 pounds; conventional rate, 86 cents to $1.31 per 100 pounds; Russia, general rate, $12.83 per 100 pounds; conventional rate, $10.27; Spain, general rate, 7 cents per pound; lower rates ranging from 1¾ to 5¼ cents on certain kinds; Canada, 3 cents per pound; Mexico, $3.73 per 100 pounds; Cuba, $2.95 per 100 pounds; 40 per cent reduction on imports from the United States; Brazil, $23.06 per 100 pounds; Argentina, 9 cents per pound; Japan, $7.72 per 100 pounds; Australia, 6 cents per pound; New Zealand, 30 per cent ad valorem.

On milk and cream there are at present duties of 2 cents and 5 cents a gallon, respectively. The Senate bill places both on the free list. Tariffs of other countries are as follows: Great Britain, free; France, general rate, 44 cents per 100 pounds; minimum rate, 22 cents; higher rates on condensed milk; Germany, free; Austria-Hungary, free; Belgium, free, unless intended for the manufacture of condensed milk or artificial butter; the Netherlands, free; Italy, free; Spain, general rate, $6.57 per 100 pounds; certain countries enjoy a lower rate of $4.38 per 100 pounds; Canada, general tariff, 3¼ cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 3 cents; Mexico, free; Cuba, 13 per cent ad valorem; Brazil, 13 cents a pound; Japan, $2.09 per 100 pounds; Australia, 4 cents per pound, if sweetened, 2½ cents, if unsweetened; New Zealand, 37½ per cent ad valorem.

Eggs, which are at present dutiable at 5 cents per dozen, are placed on the free list by the Senate bill. Other countries have duties on eggs as follows: Great Britain, free; France, general tariff, 88 cents per 100 pounds; minimum tariff, 53 cents; Germany, general rate, 65 cents per 100 pounds; conventional rate, 22 cents; Austria-Hungary, general rate, 74 cents per 100 pounds; conventional rate, free; Belgium, free, Netherlands, free; Italy, free; Russia, 26 cents per 100 pounds; Spain, first tariff, $1.75 per 100 pounds; second tariff, $1.31 per 100 pounds; Canada, general tariff, 3 cents per dozen; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; Mexico, free; Cuba, $2.95 per 100 pounds; Brazil, free; Argentina, $1.05½ per 100 pounds; Japan, $2.26 per 100 pounds; Australia, 12 cents per dozen; New Zealand, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The pending bill further proposes to reduce the rates of 3 cents per pound on live poultry and 5 cents per pound on dead poultry to 1 cent and 2 cents, respectively. Great Britain, of course, has no tariff on poultry; France has a general rate of $2.63 per 100 pounds and a minimum rate of $1.75; in Germany the general rate is 65 cents per 100 pounds and the conventional rate 43 cents; in Austria-Hungary the general rate on live poultry is 74 cents per 100 pounds; on dead poultry, $2.30; the conventional rate is 37 cents per 100 pounds on live poultry and $1.47 on dead poultry; Belgium, admitting live poultry free, assesses a duty of $2.63 per 100 pounds on dead poultry; Netherlands, free; Italy, 44 cents per 100 pounds; Russia, free; Spain, 10 cents each; Canada, general tariff, 20 per cent ad valorem; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; Mexico, free; Cuba, $4.72 per 100 pounds; Brazil, 32 per cent ad valorem; Argentina, free; Japan, 20 per cent ad valorem; Australia, various rates; New Zealand, 30 per cent ad valorem.

On hay there is at present a duty of $4 per ton. This the pending bill proposes to reduce to $2 per ton. Other important countries have duties as follows: Great Britain, free; France, general rate, $1.30 per ton; minimum rate, 86 cents; Germany, general rate, $2.15 per ton; conventional rate, free; Austria-Hungary, free; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, no tariff duty, but subject to a statistical tax of about 19 cents per ton; Russia, free; Spain, $1.75 per ton; Canada, general rate, $2 per ton; intermediate rate, $1.75; Mexico, free; Cuba, $5.30 per ton, with a 20 per cent reduction on imports from the United States; Brazil, $20.70 per ton; Japan, $1.36 per ton; Australia, $4.34 per ton; New Zealand, 30 per cent ad valorem.

On straw there is at present a tariff of $1.50 per ton, which the pending bill reduces to 50 cents per ton. Other countries have duties as follows: Great Britain, free; France, general tariff, $3.40 per ton, minimum tariff, $1.76; Germany, general tariff, $2.16 per ton, conventional tariff, free; Austria-Hungary, free; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Russia, free; Spain, fine straw, 88 cents per ton, straw for fodder, $1.76; Canada, general tariff, $2 per ton, intermediate tariff, $1.75; Cuba, fine straw, $20.98 per ton, if for fodder, $5.30 per ton; Brazil, if for fodder $20.70 per ton, if for other purposes, from 86 cents per 100 pounds to $4.14 per 100 pounds, or from $17.24 per ton to $81; Japan, 5 to 10 per cent ad valorem; Australia, $4.35 per ton; New Zealand, 30 per cent ad valorem.

On rye there is at present a duty of 10 cents per bushel, which the pending bill proposes to remove. I find that other countries have duties on rye as follows: Great Britain, free; France, 15 cents per bushel; Germany, general rate, 42 cents per bushel, conventional rate, 30 cents; Austria-Hungary, general rate 36 cents per bushel, conventional rate, 30 cents; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, 22 cents per bushel; Russia, free; Spain, 20 cents per bushel; Canada, general rate, 10 cents per bushel, intermediate rate, 9 cents; Mexico, 42 cents per bushel; Cuba, 20 cents per bushel, with a reduction of 20 per cent if imported from the United States; Argentina, 26½ cents per bushel; Japan, 15 per cent ad valorem; Australia, 21 cents; New Zealand, 10 cents per bushel.

On wheat flour there is at present a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem, which this bill proposes to remove. Other countries have tariffs on flour as follows: Great Britain, free; France, 96 cents to $1.40 per 100 pounds, according to quality; Germany, general rate, $2.02 per 100 pounds, conventional rate, $1.10; Austria-Hungary, $1.36 per 100 pounds; Belgium, 18 cents per 100 pounds; the Netherlands, free; Italy, $1.01 per 100 pounds; Russia, 64 cents per 100 pounds—it will be noted, Mr. President, that, while wheat is admitted free into Russia, there is a duty on flour of 64 cents per hundred pounds—Spain, $1.23 per 100 pounds; Canada, general rate, 60 cents per barrel, intermediate rate, 50 cents; Mexico, $2.48 per 100 pounds; Cuba, 59 cents per 100 pounds, with a reduction of 30 per cent if imported from the United States; Brazil, 58 cents per 100 pounds; Argentina, free; Japan, 70 cents per 100 pounds; Australia, 61 cents per 100 pounds; New Zealand, 29 cents per 100 pounds.

The pending bill also places all kinds of wool on the free list. Other countries have tariffs on wool as follows: Great Britain, free; France, raw wool, free; Germany, free; Austria-Hungary, free; Belgium, free; the Netherlands, free; Italy, free; Russia, slightly more than 4½ cents per pound; Spain, first tariff, $2.18 per 100 pounds; second tariff, $1.72 per 100 pounds; Canada, on wools such as are grown in Canada, general tariff, 3 cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; Mexico, 1¾ cents per pound; Cuba, raw wool, 20 per cent ad valorem; Brazil, a little more than 4 cents per pound; Argentina, 25 per cent ad valorem; Japan, free.

Mr. President, I believe the foreign tariffs cited are sufficient to show the policies of those countries with regard to agricultural products. With the exception of such countries as Great Britain and the Netherlands, which do not expect to produce sufficient agricultural products for their own needs, and rely on other countries to furnish them with these necessaries, it is the policy of other countries to give the farmer as well as the manufacturer such benefit as he may derive from a tariff on his products. The mere fact that the products of the farmer are primary necessaries, while many manufactures have been made necessary by advancing civilization, is to my mind no reason why the producer of products of the soil should be discriminated against. Many manufactures are as much necessaries as the products of the farm, and as to those that are not I can not see why it is a wise policy to encourage the production of what may be called luxuries rather than of necessaries. We are able to produce enough farm products for our needs, and there is no reason to believe that we shall not be able to do so in the future. It is no answer to the objection of placing farm products on the free list to say that this is not a protective-tariff bill. No matter what you call the tariff, the effect of the duties imposed is the same. Whether you say that the purpose of a given duty is to raise revenue or to protect a domestic industry, if a duty is levied it will result in giving the producer of that article in this country an advantage in protecting to a greater or less extent his market from the competition of producers of the same article in other countries; and when you place a duty on the products of one man and place the products of another on the free list you discriminate against the latter to the same extent, whether you call your tariff a revenue tariff or a protective tariff.

The Democratic Members of Congress were responsible for the passage of the Canadian reciprocity treaty. It is true that some of the Republican Members, together with President Taft, supported this measure, but a majority of the Republican Members of both Houses opposed the measure and voted against it. When the Canadian reciprocity treaty was first presented to Congress it looked quite respectable. It had strong supporters back of it, it was the pet measure of President Taft, and was strongly indorsed by ex-President Roosevelt. The powerful influence of the press was behind it; the great milling industry favored it; the American Brewers' Association, whose baneful and sinister influence has been felt more than that of any other trust, not only welcomed it but championed its cause. Even some of our Republican leaders were led to believe that it could do no harm but might be of some benefit, and it was not until some of the Members of the agricultural districts took a courageous stand against this iniquitous measure, and showed beyond a question of doubt that it was a discrimination and rank injustice to the American farmer and of no benefit to the consumer that the people realized the injurious effects of this measure. The leaders of the Democratic Party evidently saw the advantage to be gained by their party, and almost unanimously voted for and became the ardent supporters of the administration measure, and viewing it from a partisan standpoint it did not take a very bright mind to clearly see the political advantage to be gained by the Democratic Party in giving their support to this measure.

From a Democratic standpoint it worked well; it was an entering wedge toward free trade and was the means of widening the breach already existing in the Republican Party. So far as the Democrats were concerned it was, "Head I win, tail you lose."

The progressive Republicans in both branches of Congress attacked the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill not because it was a protective measure nor because they favored free trade, but because a promise was given the American people in the Republican national platform of 1908 that the tariff should be revised, and that this revision meant a downward revision there was no doubt. It was contended by these progressive Republicans that some of the items in the tariff bill were protected by duties unduly high. It was a mistake of both factions of the Republican Party not to agree upon a compromise measure, but, unfortunately, some of the leaders of the dominant party of that day had been in power so long that it was not an easy matter to convince them that they were neither omnipotent nor omniscient. There were then and there are now Republican Senators and Representatives possessing the honesty and the courage of their convictions who were not afraid to criticize and to rebel against the leadership that is contrary to the fundamental principles of the Republican Party. But it seems that in the councils of war that were held it was agreed to apply the steam-roller process to this little band of insurgents rather than to counsel with them; and so the inevitable has happened. The members of the party became hopelessly divided and the Democratic Party has again, as it always does, profited by the dissension and division in the Republican ranks, and as a result the country is again in the hands of Democracy.

You, my Democratic friends, have the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives. I know that you will say that you gladly assume the responsibility of leadership; but, in my judgment, after four years of misrule you will again be hunting for excuses and explaining why we had hard times, if not a panic, and why millions of unemployed, willing workers were walking the streets looking for work and thousands of able-bodied men compelled to beg for bread. Such conditions as existed under the Cleveland administration are yet fresh in my memory, as it must be in the memory of everyone within the hearing of my voice, and while I hope and pray that such a calamity will not again befall the American people, yet the penalties imposed by writing into law the provisions of this bill lead me to believe that it is impossible for the American people to escape the dire punishment.

But you seem to have adopted the same method that the leaders of the Republican Party, to whom I have referred so strongly, used and abused. I believe there are Senators on that side who are dissatisfied with this bill; I believe there are Senators on that side who, if permitted to follow their own free will, would prefer to change many of its provisions, but the party lash has been applied by a most benevolent leader, the same as it was attempted to be applied by the leaders of the Republican Party when that party was dominant in the councils of this Nation. It ought to be manifest to everyone that our leaders erred, and I believe you are making the same mistake. By using the "Star-Chamber method," with the curtains carefully pulled down and the doors well guarded, you have made it possible for a minority of the Senate to control legislation which so vitally affects every industry and every individual citizen of this great land.

I am not complaining because the Democratic Party insists on passing a bill which is in accordance with their views. You have a majority in both branches of Congress, and you have a right to expect to pass a bill that will be satisfactory to the members of your own party, but I have the right to complain of the mode of procedure; I have the right to condemn—and I do condemn most severely—the action you have taken by making a bill in secret caucus. You have excluded the reporters of the press; you have excluded Republican Senators; you have excluded the citizens of this great country who are engaged in the industries and are vitally interested and entitled to be heard.

Mr. President, I do not wish it to appear that it is in any spirit of partisanship that I refer to the Chief Executive of our Government, for it will be remembered that when the reciprocity treaty with Canada was pending before this body I did not hesitate to criticize a Republican President.

Mr. President, I came here with an open and receptive mind, believing it to be my duty as best I could to assist the Senate in making this bill; of course, not expecting it to fully meet with my approval, but to make it a better bill than it now is. But, Mr. President, I have had no opportunity to help draw this bill, nor do I expect that any suggestions I might make will meet the approval of the majority. When this bill passed the House it provided for a duty of 10 cents per bushel on wheat, and according to newspaper reports the Senate committee to which the agricultural schedule was referred was reported as favoring the provisions of the House bill with an amendment providing for a compensatory duty on the manufactured articles of wheat. But it has been said that the committee, at the request of President Wilson, placed wheat, together with practically all agricultural products, on the free list.

There are Senators in this Chamber who claim to know more, and I believe do know more, about the agricultural schedule than does President Wilson. There are Members in this body who know as much, if not more, about the needs of the agricultural classes in this country, especially the agricultural industry of the West, as the majority members of the Finance Committee, and if I am not wrong in my statement, then, Mr. President, the majority members of the Finance Committee have knowingly committed an injustice against the toiling millions who are engaged in that industry.

Mr. President, I know there are Senators on that side of the Chamber who rebelled against the secret caucus. I believe that you were warned by progressive Senators on that side and advised not to proceed to make this bill in the darkness of a secret caucus. I have been told that Members on that side rebelled against legislating in a secret caucus. Perhaps some Senator will say that the Republicans have nothing to do with this bill and that it is none of our business what kind of a bill the Democrats make, as they alone are willing to take the responsibility for this legislation.

I say in answer to that, it is our business; I say that so long as this bill is pending before this body I feel that it is not only our privilege but our duty to call attention to the great injustice that will be done to the people of this country by enacting this legislation. The great industry of agriculture is again the subject of an unjust onslaught and discrimination. Why is the Democratic Party so bitter in its opposition to the great industry of agriculture? What has the farmer done to incur the choler and hate of the Democratic Party? Perhaps Senators on that side will deny that they have any grievance against the farmer, but I call your attention to the fact that in my State alone, where in 1912 we raised more than 143,000,000 bushels of wheat, with short crops in foreign countries, under the provisions of this bill our farmers would lose in a single year more than $15,000,000 on wheat. North Dakota produced last year nearly 13,000,000 bushels of flax, and the farmers who produce that crop will lose more than a million dollars a year under the provisions of this bill. Under the provisions of this bill the farmers of my State alone will lose from fifteen to twenty millions of dollars annually as long as it remains a law on the Federal statute books. Why, Mr. President, should I not be opposed to such an unjust measure?

Mr. President, I come from an agricultural State, and, knowing the true conditions of the people and the hardships they have to endure, the toil and labor they have to perform, the long hours of labor the farmer, his wife, and his children must, if they are going to keep the wolf from the door, of necessity perform, I feel justified in making this protest. I have said before and I repeat that I believe the farmer receives less pay per hour for his labor than any class of men engaged in any other industry. Not only that, but I believe that he receives smaller returns upon his investment than any other class engaged in any other industry. Farming is certainly a legitimate industry, and we had your assurances, my Democratic friends, that you would do no harm to any legitimate industry. The farmers have for these many years listened to coined phrases and beautiful, well-rounded sentences of eminent statesmen that agriculture is the foundation of all sources of wealth, and yet you ignore the demand of the farmers and refuse to write into this bill a provision that would in the future give them some protection, and with complacency you add to their burden, which, under existing conditions, is much heavier than it ought to be.

The chairman of the Finance Committee said in his able speech in reporting this bill the other day that while the committee had placed wheat and other agricultural products on the free list, the committee had also made provisions in the bill to place agricultural implements on the free list. If I understood the Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Finance Committee, correctly, he did not deny that there would be a loss to the American farmer by reason of placing his products on the free list, but that the farmer would be recompensed for this loss by the reduction in the price of farm implements. No doubt this statement was made in good faith and represented not only the views of the Senator from North Carolina, but the views of the majority members of the committee. But let us see for a moment to what extent the farmer will be compensated. The present law provides for a duty of 15 per cent on plows, tooth and disk harrows, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, and cotton gins, with this proviso:

Provided, That any of the foregoing, when imported from any country, dependency, province, or colony, which imposes no taxes or duty on like articles imported from the United States, shall be imported free of duty.

In a report on the International Harvester Co. of America made by the Department of Commerce and Labor, Bureau of Corporations, under date of March 3, 1913, I find that the average factory cost of binders to the International Harvester Co. at its domestic plants for two years, 1910 and 1911 combined, was $56.32. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that this company takes advantage of the duty imposed and no more, the factory price of harvesters would be $56.32 plus the 15 per cent duty, or $8.45; total, $64.77. The farmer pays for these harvesters in North Dakota about $150. The International Harvester Trust is a monopoly, and I believe it controls the business not only in the United States but in foreign countries. Now, what difference will it make to this great monopoly if the duty is taken off? In no way could they profit by the tariff any more than the figures I have quoted, $8.45. It is not my wish to do anybody an injustice, but certainly I am not pleading for any protection for this or a like monopoly.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the protective tariff is alone responsible for the formation of this monopoly or trust; I believe it makes no difference to such large concerns as this whether they are protected by a tariff or not. The proportion of the harvesting-machine business of the United States controlled by the International Harvester Co. in 1911 was as follows: Grain binders, 87 per cent; mowers, 76.6 per cent; rakes, 72 per cent.

Mr. President, my sympathy is not with the great industrial trusts, but with the laborer, which includes the farmer, and with the small manufacturer, who at all times is struggling against opposition and unfair competition. This bill in no way injuriously affects the great trusts and monopolies of this country. They have grown so strong that no foreign competition can or will affect them. I believe that no one seriously contends that tariff regulation has much, if anything, to do with an industrial monopoly. Antitrust legislation is what is needed rather than tariff legislation to properly regulate the trusts.

Mr. President, I have gone into this question for the purpose of showing that great harm and injustice will be done to the struggling masses engaged in the pursuit of labor and other legitimate industries by a drastic change in the tariff policy of this country. I am sure that our Democratic friends are sincere in their belief that this bill will help the consumer. My belief, however, is that the consumer can not prosper unless the business of the country prospers. No great commercial country which is a large producer of agricultural products has ever succeeded by inaugurating a policy such as is embodied in the provisions of this bill. With the exception of England, which is practically a free-trade country—except, as I have stated before, in all her colonies the people are protected by a heavy tariff or duty, and all those colonies give to the people of England a protection, because they give to the people of England a preferential rate which is just as beneficial to the people of England as a protective tariff is beneficial to the people of the United States—Russia is the only country that is a large producer of agricultural products that does not provide for heavy tariff duties on her agricultural products. I admit that any country which produces a large surplus will be, to a certain extent, dependent on the world's market for the price of her products, but in a country where the consumption equals production there can be no question about the benefit of a protective tariff on the products of the farm as well as the products of the factory.

The title of this bill reads, "To reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes." The duties have not only been reduced, but on certain articles and on one certain schedule—the agricultural schedule—the duties have been practically removed. I believe I may be permitted to say that there is no protection to the farmer in this bill. The tariff duties remaining in this bill are certainly not going to benefit the farmers in the West; a discrimination seems to have been made between the East and the West. I do not wish to array section against section or one class against another class, but the bill speaks for itself. The farmer of the West is denied duty on his wheat, but the rice grower of the South has the benefit of a tariff duty on rice. All through this bill there is a discrimination against the farmer of the West. It is manifest that the framers of this bill have had in view the idea of benefiting the consumer; but who is the consumer? Statistics prove to us that more than 33,000,000 people live on farms and are actually engaged in the industry of farming. More than 49,000,000 people live in what is called the rural districts. Only about 42,000,000 live in cities that have more than 2,500 population, so that a majority of the consumers live in the country and not in the city.

The farmer is not only a large consumer of food products, but a heavy purchaser of all kinds of manufactures. He must buy his wearing apparel, as well as the consumer in the city. It may be admitted that the consumer in the city uses large sums of money for luxuries, such as theaters, wines, liquors, and beer. It is natural, of course, that the farmer has incurred the enmity of the brewers and liquor trusts because of his strong support of the cause of temperance. It is perfectly evident that the farmer is not the brewer's friend. Is it not reasonable to believe that if the consumer in the city would follow the example of the farmer in practicing economy, denying himself of the luxuries just as the farmer of necessity must do, there would be less reason for complaint about the "high cost of living"?

In my opinion, this tariff bill is not framed on the scientific principles of either free trade or protection. It is neither "fish, fowl, nor herring," and I am as firm in my belief as I am earnest in pleading for certain amendments, that it will not benefit the consumer, because, to a great extent, it will injure, if not destroy, the producer.

The decree from the White House has, by the dark-lantern method in a "Star-Chamber caucus," been ratified by the Democratic majority, and it is perfectly manifest that any attempt to amend this bill is as impossible and will have no more consideration than would a popular demand by the common people of Russia petitioning the Czar for a more popular government.

It is obvious that party solidarity is playing a strong hand in the making of this bill; on many of the items a vote has been taken, and after lengthy and intelligent discussions by the Republicans, and when it has been clearly shown that the bill should be changed you have voted unanimously to sustain the action of the majority members of the committee. Judging from your action and the votes already taken on certain items in this bill, I believe that you will stick together in solid phalanx, right or wrong, and no matter what kind of an amendment is presented, whether it is to vote the tariff up or down, no Senator on that side will dare to break away, but will follow the plan mapped out for him by his leader, because breaking away might be the means of disintegrating party solidarity, which at the present time is playing such a prominent rôle and is of such great importance to the Democratic Party, but of no value to the country.

I believe there are a few on that side who are smarting under the party whip, but for fear that it might be said that you are not good Democrats you fear breaking away. I want to call your attention to one important fact—that you won your victory in the last election by reason of the division in the Republican Party and by reason of your declaration and pretense that it does not make so much difference to which party we belong if we are right with the people.

In the Western States, where the Republicans are in an overwhelming majority, you have for years conducted your campaign upon this demagogic pretense that it is a question of patriotism and not partisanship. I am not charging you with anything except what the people of the country will be ready to sustain me in. I want to say right now that I believe the people will not again be deceived by your pretense and false promises, nor by your pretended indifference to party solidarity. At any rate, your statements to that effect will not go unchallenged, because the people are entitled to know the truth. History will again repeat itself, and the stone that was laid aside will again be selected as the corner stone of the grand structure. The Republican Party, which at the last election was humiliated by the American people, will again be triumphant and reunited upon patriotic, progressive principles as laid down by Abraham Lincoln. Selfishness and personal ambition will not be mistaken for patriotism and progress, for the seed of envy and deception will find no fertile soil in which to fasten its destructive roots; certain it is they will find no place in the hearts of the rank and file of the American people. Under our changed conditions the people will be the leaders and will select men to represent them who by their acts have demonstrated that they believe in the fundamental principles of a people's government.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow I shall address the Senate on the pending bill.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, it appears that the majority party in Congress propose to enact a tariff law so as to change the existing law without regard to results. Our country has been enjoying a higher degree of prosperity under the tariff law now in force than ever existed previously. Just now while there is more money per capita in the land than ever before, there is a stringency in the money centers due to the proposed tariff changes and consequent unsettling of business affairs. The people are discounting the action of Congress, knowing there is a majority in each Chamber pledged to make radical alterations in the law, so that duties will be imposed for revenue only, and that a protection of our industries will be ignored.

The tariff question is far-reaching. It enters into every ramification of business. By its wise administration all kinds of business will be fostered and advanced. By its unwise administration every character of industry will be injuriously affected. Both private and public credit may be made the objects of its adverse influence. Business will become torpid, clogged, and stagnated. We should consider what happenings may be occasioned thereby in the commercial and business circles and affairs of our people and of the Government. What produces the condition of prosperity we now enjoy? Is it not that those who are endowed with energy, intelligence, and physical capacity are availing themselves of favorable opportunities to forge ahead? Nearly all are gathering in more of wealth than they expend. Industrial incomes exceed expenses. The Nation's income exceeds its expenses. The large balance of trade in favor of our country and its business is rapidly enriching our people and constantly pours wealth into their laps. This balance of trade in our favor amounted to over six hundred millions for the fiscal year last past. This is due mainly, if not entirely, to the existing tariff law, which enables us to build up our industries and not only supply our wants, but export largely in excess of what we import. The greatest industry in New Mexico is that of wool and sheep. It has been said that the sheep and woolen industries in the United States have existed since the formation of this Government—that they are not now self-sustaining and do not furnish enough wool to supply this country—that consequently they should not be protected. We do not furnish enough wool to supply all the wants of the United States.

The amount of wool consumed in this country during the year 1912 was about 496,000,000 pounds. Of this amount we produced 304,000,000 pounds and imported about one hundred and ninety-three and a half million pounds, of which amount we exported about one million and a half. The woolen industry of to-day can not be said to be the woolen industry which has existed since the commencement of our Government, for the reason that since the acquisition of the Louisiana purchase and the territory ceded by Mexico and the opening up of the West the growing of wool has in a great measure gravitated to the plains and prairies near to and in the range of the Rocky Mountains. The sheep raiser who went there has had much to contend with. First, he had to meet the savage who was constantly depredating upon and raiding his flocks. He was compelled to guard against predatory wild animals. He was far removed from the center of industry and markets, and was compelled to meet high rates of freight, sometimes amounting, in early days, to 10 and 15 cents per pound. The cost of his living was fivefold what it is now. He was not always able to obtain sufficient labor of a proper kind to care for his flocks. But he was opening up the great West, building up that portion of the country which was unsettled and unoccupied. He was performing the part of a pioneer—the man who builds countries and empires and lays the foundation on which to make them grow. During the Civil War the woolgrowers supplied the loss of cotton, which had been advanced to over a dollar per pound. Without the woolgrowers' aid, the cost of clothing to the Union Army would have been threefold greater than it was. Can it be wondered that the sheep industry, which drifted to the West under such circumstances as this, did not build up as fast or as rapidly as was anticipated or expected by the people living in the Eastern States, who did not know that such difficulties were encountered or to be encountered? The Indian or savage question has to a certain extent been determined. In determining it large tracts of land, amounting in many instances to as much as a thousand acres for every man, woman, and child of the Indians, have been set apart for their use. The sheep raiser has been driven from the borders thereof and prohibited the use of a single blade of grass thereon. He has been compelled to hunt other and different grazing grounds. As this industry in the West increased and became more profitable on account of the savage being restrained and limited in his field of operations, the killing off of wild animals, and greater facilities for cheaper rates of freight, the wool business from year to year in that section of the country grew more prosperous. All portions of the Rocky Mountain region may be said to be valuable for sheep and Angora goat raising; the sheep occupy the prairie ranges and slopes of the mountains, the goats go into the rough and rugged hills and amongst the brush where sheep can not go without losing a portion of the wool. That portion of the country has not yet filled up to its full capacity. Some portions of it are better adapted to sheep raising than others. In the northern portion sheep have to be fed a portion of the year and sheltered. In the southern portion such is not the rule. The northern sheep, however, grow larger and quicker and produce a heavier fleece of wool and in a measure compensate for the extra expense that they have to bear.

There has been another drawback to sheep raising through the entire country, and that is just such action as is now being taken by the party in power, which from time to time as it acquired control has taken away from the wool and sheep industry the protection it had against the foreign cheap industries, foreign cheap labor, and foreign cheap lands. To-day the sheep raiser in the West is not only confronted with a large number of Indian reserves of great area, from which he is entirely excluded, but he is confronted with various other kinds of reservations of public land, such as forestry reservations, which have been established in all of the Western States, some of them to the extent of at least half the entire area of the State, and in all of the Western States to the extent of absorbing nearly all of the water which is necessary for the use of live stock in ranging and grazing. To-day nearly every sheep owner in New Mexico is compelled to rent lands from the Government for the ranging and grazing of his sheep during those seasons of the year when there is no rainfall or precipitation. He is compelled to pay therefor on an average of 12 cents per head. Some very small herds are able to exist otherwise because their owners happen to have title to lands where they have water sufficient to supply such small flocks. The large flock owners do not own sufficient land on which to range their flocks. They are compelled to go upon the public domain, where there is no water except during the rainy season or in the winter. During the other seasons of the year, when there is no rain or precipitation, they are compelled to rent from the Government on the forest reserves for a few months. This has been the practice for the last 10 years or more. The public domain in New Mexico is fast being occupied. Water can be found sufficiently near the surface to enable the sheep raiser to pump it for the use of his flocks, provided he is assured in some way that he can have land enough around and near his well at all times to enable him to get to it and to utilize it. As a rule this can not be done; the adjacent lands are generally taken up by others. There is much of the land in the West which can never be reduced to practical farming. Dry farming in some localities has proven a success while they do not have a drought.

The Government has adopted a policy of not allowing a homesteader to acquire more than 320, and in some localities not more than 160 acres of land. These lands have no running water on them. They must be supplied by precipitation or by sinking a well and pumping it. This makes it too expensive for the homesteader to raise a crop or live stock, especially in view of the fact that when, in the changes occasioned by political party strife, that party which is now in power gets hold of the reins of government and endeavors to take away the protection which the sheep grower has, not only for his sheep but for his wool, and place him in competition with the cheap labor of the Argentine Republic and Australia, where there are no predatory animals, where there are no savages, where ample ranges can be had and sheep cared for at a minimum cost. During such times the number of our sheep is always reduced in quantity. By the Wilson-Gorman bill wool was placed upon the free list. Sheep were taxed 20 per cent ad valorem. This bill puts them on the free list. The number of our sheep during nearly four years of the existence of that enactment went down from 52,000,000 to 36,000,000.

The value of sheep in New Mexico went down from $3 per head to 75 cents per head; the value of wool from 18 cents per pound to 4 and 5 cents per pound. The number of sheep in New Mexico was reduced at least one-half. The sheep raiser was discouraged. The small flock owner, not having means beyond his previous current income to support himself and family adequately, was compelled to sell out and dispose of his holdings. These were naturally purchased by those who were able to command sufficient cash with which to do it. If he could not find a purchaser of that kind, he sold them for mutton, and they went to the slaughter pen. In this way one-third of the sheep of the country at large, which amounted to about 52,000,000, the same as now, went out of existence, and three-fourths of the value of the remainder was lost. This loss not only fell upon the sheep owner, but also upon the State and upon the people at large. If this bill is carried into law, which it seems the majority have determined upon, a blow will be given to the sheep industry which will extinguish it, unless those people interested in sheep shall do as they did in 1894 and 1895—buy up all the holdings of the small owners and carry the large flocks into what would be denominated by the majority in power as a trust or monopoly.

This act is simply an act to create a wool and sheep monopoly, which will concentrate into the hands of a few most of the sheep of this country which may be retained from the slaughter pens. It will not only compel the small holder to sell his sheep, but it will compel him to sell his farm or his ranch in the Western States. The sheep owners in Ohio and in some of the Eastern States may be able to retain their property by reason of the fact that they are in very small flocks upon the farms and are a mere incident to the conduct of the farm, cared for at comparatively little additional expense. They are small enough so that shelter in the winter can be had for them, and cheap food is accessible. Is it policy to break down this industry simply because it does not furnish enough wool to supply the wants of the entire country? That can not be claimed for the purpose of raising a revenue. Its value is now $250,000,000 for sheep alone. Do you believe that by breaking down this industry, curtailing the number of sheep in the United States, forcing our people to go abroad to obtain the manufactured articles or to obtain wool with which to manufacture will cheapen the cost of clothing?

The duty that is now on wool amounts to less than 20 cents per pound on the scoured product; probably does not exceed 12 or 15 cents per pound, owing to the fact that foreign imported wools only shrink 45 per cent; and a majority of all the wool which is imported comes in under the third class and pays duty mostly at the rate of 4 cents in the grease, some of it at 7 cents, while nearly two-thirds of that amount is immediately put into the manufacture of cloth and thus competes with our clothing wools, which is practically the only kind we produce in the United States. Assuming that the duty on wool as it now stands would be as much as 15 cents on the scoured product, and that 5 pounds of scoured wool is more than enough to make an average suit of clothes, we have 75 cents in a suit of clothes at the outside which represents duty. Can it be said that that is a great reduction in the cost of living? No more than one woolen suit in a year is used by each individual on the average; not that much. For an average family of six people that would be four dollars and a half. But are we sure that if we put wool upon the free list we will correspondingly reduce the price of the manufactured article?

We have been inveighing in this country against trusts and monopolies. We know comparatively little about the operations of trusts and monopolies, when that trust and monopoly is formed in a foreign country to operate on the outside of that foreign country and in our own borders. We have no means of controlling it. We can not reach it, except by a tax upon its products or its property here.

A few years since, on a visit to London, I conferred with one of the proprietors of the largest wholesale operators in woolen goods there and informed him that I would like to make some purchases. His first question to me was, "Where do you desire to take them or have them delivered." I stated in the United States. He then said, "We have an agent in New York from whom all purchases of our goods must be made. We will not sell except through him and at the prices which have been fixed for him there." I informed him that I knew of his agent, but that the price which he had fixed on their merchandise was much above the price which they held in London on the same, even with the freight to New York and the United States duty added. In fact, it exceeded it by at least one-third. He stated that he knew that, but that that was their privilege. They knew that we had to have these goods and they would fix their own price.

I asked him if there was not competition through other firms. He stated that two other firms on the Continent of Europe furnished the same kind of articles they did, but that I could not buy from them because they already had an agreement that no goods should be sold for delivery in America except at the prices fixed by their New York agent. He then stated to me there was not an industry in Europe wherein the different operators thereof could not be combined within 24 hours to fix a price for delivery in a foreign country, like ours, so that the same could not be had for less than the fixed price. The experience of this country has been that when the tariff duties on different articles which we were furnishing in this country, but not in sufficient quantities to supply the entire demand, were reduced below the standard of protection, foreign dealers have, as soon as the tariff rate took effect, poured into our country at a reduced price, large amounts of their products until they have destroyed our manufactories. They have gone below a competing price so as to break up the business here. As soon as that had been accomplished, they not only restored the old price, but put it much higher.

It will not be necessary in this case for the woolgrower in Australia and Argentina to sell his wool in this country at a loss. He can bring it here and sell it at 10 cents a pound and break up every woolen industry we have. Freights for him are not more than one-half what they are for us. His means of handling are better. The woolen manufactories are mostly upon the Atlantic coast and are easily accessible to him. When the sheep grower can not run his sheep at a profit, he will be compelled to dispose of his holdings at whatever price he can get, if he can not look ahead and see there will be a change in the condition of things and be able to hold his flocks until such change comes.

It is said by some that sheep can be raised for mutton. The sheep in the West can not so be raised profitably. A mutton sheep requires to be fed. The stock of sheep which is held in New Mexico is of the merino grade, which is a small sheep and produces a very little carcass. It costs at least $2 per head a year to actually care for sheep. If the sheep is sold the first year you can not realize more than that amount on it.

It has to be freighted to the market; it must be fed up to make it of a marketable quality; and while it may sell in the market at Chicago or Kansas City or farther east for $5 or $6 a head, you can not get more than 5 cents a pound at the best for it on the plains in the West, and the lambs which are produced never average more than 50 pounds to the head. The older sheep do not sell for so much per pound as they increase in age. The prices for their meat depreciates, and yet the expense for caring for them goes on. It is estimated at least 5,000,000 of our people are depending upon the sheep and woolen industry in the United States. As said, there are about 52,000,000 sheep in the United States. The raising of wool necessitates the employment of three men, on an average, for every 1,500 sheep. This means if all the sheep were in herds of 1,500 that there would be 100,000 employees thrown out of employment by the destruction of that industry, but as probably three-fourths of the sheep are in smaller herds than that it means that about 150,000 herders would be thrown out of employment if the sheep industry should be destroyed by putting wool and sheep on the free list.

In their program the majority propose to reduce the duty on the woolen manufactures at least 50 per cent. This means now what it meant in 1894 and 1895, the closing up of nearly every mill—in fact, of every mill where the proprietors have not the means of holding on for four years longer until the people, recognizing the outrage which will have been placed upon them by the enactment of this bill into a law, shall turn the majority out and put those back who will look after their interests and their welfare in a more substantial way. But in these manufactories there are now employed about $460,000,000 and about 169,000 employees. It is safe to say that three-fourths of these employees will be discharged if this bill is enacted into a law. The remaining one-fourth will have their salaries reduced at least one-third. The 5,000,000 people depending on wool and its industries will practically have their means of livelihood cut off. They will have to go out and hunt labor or starve. If they go into the field of other labor, competition immediately arises. The operator is naturally human; he is looking out for his own interest and his own welfare; he will employ labor where he can get it the cheapest, taking into consideration its efficiency. It will not be difficult to train factory hands who have been engaged in a business such length of time as these woolen employees have to engage in any other enterprise. If it is thought that putting wool upon the free list and reducing the duty on the manufactured article 50 per cent will contribute to cheap living, I think that those who have such belief will find they are mistaken. A foreign monopoly will intervene and keep the prices up. If it is thought that a greater revenue may be obtained, that would be more than doubtful. In order to get a greater revenue you must import more than double the amount of merchandise of that quality to make up for the reduction in the rate of duties. When you do that, what is the result? You send out of the country the necessary money to purchase the same or to purchase the wool to make the same. That money is a portion of our wealth, a wealth which should be permanent and kept permanently with us, but which will be sent away to pay for this increased importation. The amount of circulation per capita will by that means be reduced throughout the entire country.

The 52,000,000 sheep in the United States must be run in flocks not exceeding 1,800 head to the flock. A flock of 1,500 head is even more profitable. When they get below 1,500 head the cost of caring for them becomes greater per head. It requires in New Mexico three men to each flock of 1,500 or 1,800 to care for them. They receive to-day an average of $30 per month for wages, and also receive their board and camping facilities. Their board will average $20 per month. The wages and board of each man per year would be $600; for the three men, $1,800; or about an average of $1 per head per sheep, which can be safely run in a flock. But this is not all the expenses of a herd. The owner has to pay the Government 12 cents per head for a range or grazing right. The loss from his herd is about 15 per cent each year by deaths from predatory animals and disease and estrays. It costs him about 6 cents a head to shear his sheep; as much more to attend to the lambing; 15 cents per head as taxes. He is compelled, if he has more than one herd, to employ an extra high-priced man, at $100 per month, to look after all the herds.

He has the expense of 5 cents a fleece for sacking and hauling his wool to market. He has an investment of at least $5 per head on which he should receive, according to the bankable rates in New Mexico, 8 per cent interest, which would amount to 40 cents per head. Not only does he have all these expenses, but he has a number of other incidental expenses which can not be accurately estimated, all amounting to more than $2 per head per annum. Before he markets his male lambs, he has the same proportionate expense as to them, amounting to at least $1 per head, to be deducted from the amount realized on them. He is also subject to the loss of his entire herd from drouths, snowstorms, prairie fires, and disease epidemics. It is not infrequent that whole herds have been lost in snowstorms. During the present year in New Mexico there has been a drouth, and the average crop of lambs will not exceed 30 per cent. It is said they will not exceed the number of the amount of losses of the old sheep, which have died on account of the drouth, so that practically this year there has been no increase in the flock which can be sold off as a profit. The wool has had to pay the whole income.

It has been selling at from 10 to 12 cents during the year, the sheep averaging not exceeding 6 pounds per head, or about 66 cents to the head, so that every sheep owner in New Mexico during the present year has lost at least $1.34 cents on every head of sheep. These are casualties which happen to the sheep industry. The income of 1,500 head of sheep is 9,000 pounds of wool at 11 cents per pound, or $990; 900 lambs, one-half males, worth $2.50 per head, or $1,125; or a total of $2,025, while his expenses amount to $4,270. This leaves him a loss of $2,245 per year against which he has 450 ewe lambs, less 270 old sheep loss, or 180 ewe lambs increase in his flock of ewes. He has also other depreciations, such as in the use of bucks and camp supplies. The ewe lambs will be worth $5 per head, or $900 for the 180 increase, leaving his total loss $1,345 per year, at the value which will be produced by the present law, but his sheep will not retain their value of $5 per head under this proposed law. It will go down. As time moves on and the sheep owner improves his financial condition, he will be able to provide shelter and furnish food for the winter when required.

The predatory wild animals are being killed off; lately, however, New Mexico has been flooded with them by their being driven over from Texas lands, which have been filled up with settlements. Better means are provided to guard against disease. The sheep owner is able from year to year to better care for his flocks and herds. But under the present bill within a year or two after it takes effect there will not be more than 250 sheep owners in New Mexico, while to-day there are over 2,500, owning herds from 250 head to ten and twenty thousand in quantity. While you are undertaking to reduce the cost of living by reducing the price of wool and the price of sheep you are creating a monopoly which is taking away from the poor man his sheep at an insignificant price and placing them in the hands of the wealthy or monopolists. This will be the result with reference to sheep. It will also be the result with reference to sugar.

New Mexico is not a sugar-producing State at present, owing to the fact that we have been kept in the condition of a Territory, where our laws were subject to be repealed at the will of Congress and interpreted and administered by men who were not the choice of the people, but were appointed by an Executive not acquainted with our conditions and circumstances, and residing 2,000 miles away from us. We have never been able to induce capitalists to invest their means in sugar plants so as to enable us to grow the beets to supply them, for the reason that while we were a Territory no capitalist was willing to place his money where the laws could be repealed by a superior authority to that which enacted them, as could have been done by Congress, leaving no remedy in the courts or elsewhere. Since we became a State the attention of capitalists has been directed to New Mexico, and much inquiry and investigation has been had in regard to the availability of the lands of New Mexico for producing the sugar beet and manufacturing sugar. Many capitalists have been making contracts for the procuring of the lands so that they could be used for supplying the necessary beets for factories.

They have also been getting their means ready, and many of them had already provided means for the erection of sugar-beet factories in New Mexico at the time the election in November, 1912, took place. Then the people, acting upon the experience which they had and the example which had been given to them by the action of a Democratic Congress and a Democratic administration which was elected in 1892, absolutely ceased to make any further advance by way of opening up New Mexico to beet-sugar culture or to the production of sugar. Contracts which have been made have been forfeited. Moneys which have been provided have been otherwise disposed of. The capitalists have gone in other directions or are holding their means in safety vaults awaiting to have the Democratic landslide of destruction go by. And he will wait till the end of four years, until the people at the polls can see the results of the action of this Congress in passing this bill, when they will no longer tolerate a party in power to act regardless of the welfare of the people and in restraint of prosperity. The soils of New Mexico have been extensively tested for their capacity to grow sugar beets, and it has been found that they produce as rich beets in sugar-producing qualities as any soils in the world.

Most all of our soils are composed of the richest mountain loam, from 3 to 10 feet deep. They have every quality in them which is necessary to grow the beet which produces the most sugar. We have a rich and bright sunshine for 300 days in the year, which it is said adds to the sugar-producing quality of the beet. It is also claimed that we can produce two to three times as many beets to the acre in our valleys by reason of the fact that they have to be irrigated, than can be produced in the Eastern States, where they rely upon the rainfall. The crop is absolutely sure and is always of a uniform quality. It is true the cost is greater where rains do not prevail. In our States ditches have to be dug, water has to be obtained from distant sources. These ditches have to be kept in repair; men have to be employed to let the water upon the land and to distribute it constantly, an expense which does not attach to rainfall. In a country which would have a steady and constant rainfall, possibly like the State of Louisiana, to supply its want with water, without ditches and irrigation and extra labor for that purpose, they can probably produce the cane sugar as cheaply as the beet sugar, although they can not produce as much to the acre.

There is no conflict between the cane producer and the beet-sugar producer. We use in the United States about 7,966,000,000 pounds of sugar annually. Of this amount we produce in the continental United States 1,922,840,000 pounds, and we bring in from Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines 2,375,325,000 pounds, making a total of about 4,298,165,000 pounds which the United States and its dependencies produce and about 3,668,368,000 pounds which we import from foreign countries. In 1890 we produced in continental United States 301,000,000 pounds of cane sugar and 5,000,000 pounds of beet sugar. Since that time the cane sugar, which has increased with some variations annually, has gained steadily until it has reached 728,000,000 pounds. The beet-sugar industry has advanced steadily each year until it has reached 1,200,000,000 pounds, the cane-sugar increase during the last year being nearly 14,000,000 pounds. It has been said that this industry has existed and had protection for 100 years and has not succeeded in producing as much sugar as we require. We respectfully submit that an increase of nearly 150 per cent in the cane-sugar industry in the last 20 years shows a very respectable increase, one that should not be deemed an industry which is lagging behind.

We also submit that an increase from 5,000,000 pounds of beet sugar to 1,200,000,000 pounds, an increase of 2,400 per cent in 20 years, is a very respectable showing. Each of these industries has increased much faster than the growth of population or the increase of general wealth in the country, there being such an increase in the last 20 years of the two. Can it be said that this is an industry that ought not to be fostered or ought not to be helped, when it is making such extraordinary strides toward prosperity and toward furnishing the wants of the whole people? Every pound of sugar we introduce from abroad we have to send away money to pay for it, which is loss to us. Every pound of sugar that we produce in the United States saves that much money from going abroad and retains it for circulation and for use in the general development and progress of our country. Germany, which is a large beet-sugar producing country, pays a bounty for every pound of sugar exported by her people. The beet-sugar industry has not existed in the United States in any appreciable degree more than 20 years, and, in fact, so that it could be felt in the market, more than 13 years.

In the year 1900 it reached the amount of 163,000,000 pounds. That same year cane sugar produced 333,000,000 pounds. In the year 1900 we consumed in the United States 4,477,000,000 pounds of sugar, and we supplied only about 1,100,000,000 pounds on the continent, and from Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines less than one-fourth. So that it will be seen that the sugar industry is growing much faster than the consumption. We must in time supply all the sugar we consume, and that time is not far distant. We have area enough in the United States of the best sugar-beet producing lands, not only to supply the present wants of the United States, but what we will need probably for hundreds of years to come. It is stated by prominent Senators of the majority that they know that placing sugar upon the free list will destroy the industry. That can not be advocated either in the interest of revenue nor in the interest of cheapening the product. If you destroy four billions and a half of pounds of the product produced in the United States, we will have to import it from foreign countries. The labor which is necessary to produce it here will be thrown out of employment. To-day our laborer has not only to compete with the cheaper labor of Germany, but the German laborer gets a bonus from the Government for his work.

The capital amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars which is invested in it will go to ruin as it is not fitted for any other purpose. The lands which are now occupied by them may be occupied by something else, but whether it will be as profitable will have to be ascertained by an experiment.

It is said that the balance of trade, when in our favor to any considerable amount, shows prosperity, and certainly it must help to produce prosperity.

In the year 1893, namely, for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1893, and extending to June 30, 1894, the imports exceeded the exports by about $19,000,000. This was a year in which the majority party now in power had the entire administration of the Government, including the President and a majority in both Houses of Congress and every Cabinet position. They had come into power on the 4th of March before that year commenced. It is claimed that the Wilson-Gorman bill, which was enacted in 1894, had no influence upon the panic which was prevailing during that time, but that the panic had commenced some 13 or 14 months prior to the enactment of the Wilson-Gorman bill.

A claim of that kind certainly is made without reference to the intelligence of the business people in this country. The Democratic Party went into power under the election held in November, 1892, on a platform almost identical with the platform which was adopted at Baltimore and under which they have gone into power again, especially on that portion of it which refers to the tariff. They having been elected, of course, on a platform of that kind and pledged to carry it out, the American people and the American business men then looked forward to the results which were going to happen. They were like John Hay says about the engineer, Jim Bludso, on the Prairie Belle, when she was afire, when he said:

> I'll hold her nozzle agin the bank
> 'Till the last galoot's ashore.

And Hay says:

> And they all had trust in his cussedness
> And knew he would keep his word.

The American business man in 1893 had trust in the cussedness of the Democratic Party, and knew they would keep their word. They discounted what you would do, and they did not make any mistake. You did, then, exactly what you said you were going to do.

The result was that in anticipation of what you were going to do, relying upon it, having trust in your cussedness, a panic was commenced in this country which culminated after the enactment of the Wilson-Gorman law, in the greatest sacrifice of wealth and prosperity that has ever been known in the history of any country. It is true that at that time the conditions of the country were not as prosperous as they are now. It may be that you will be enabled to enact this law in carrying out your cussedness, but you can not do it without producing a stringency in business, without creating trouble financially. In fact, as it was in 1893, we are beginning now to feel the effects of this proposed law. To-day stocks in the market have a downward tendency. The banks have their vault doors close shut against the man who is asking aid to enable him to invest in new business or carry on the old. The great prosperity that exists now may prevent, and I hope will prevent, a panic such as that of 1894. But you can not throw out of employment the wage earners who will be thrown out by this bill and cause them to compete with others who are holding positions, without creating great want and a great dimunition in the amount of wages.

What use is the cheap cost of living to the wage earner if he has not the means with which to pay it? If you are going to fix it so that he will lose what he has, entirely, or a large portion of it, by the reduction of a third or a half of his income, simply to reduce his living expenses, that will add nothing to his prosperity, to his business, or to the happiness and comfort of his family. They must live, they must exist, they must have some comforts. Will you take away from them all of the conveniences of life and throw them into want? You will do it by the enactment of this law, unless something else may intervene. The only thing that will prevent you from bringing on a more destructive panic than that of 1894 will be the good sense of our people, their present state of prosperity, the fact that most of them have a surplus of means on which they can draw, the fact that they will look forward to the time when another party will take your place in the administrative and legislative branches of this Government and restore to the people the capacity to reclaim the prosperity which they now have, and which you will have destroyed or greatly damaged.

Wool and sugar are not the only features of this bill to which I desire to call attention. New Mexico is also a mineral-producing State, not as great as several others of the Western States, but still possessing within her borders great mountain ranges filled with mineral of all kinds. No duties are imposed upon gold, silver, and copper, when imported. The precious metals do not need protection. They have the same value the world over. No law could be passed to make them possess a different value, except in a coined state as money. Copper is furnished in this country in greater abundance than any other and is easier extracted and marketed. But New Mexico and various other Western States produce zinc and lead. These articles are also produced in some of the Eastern States, like Missouri and Illinois. Probably the greatest amount is produced near the western border of Missouri and the eastern border of Kansas. Under the existing law there is 1½ cents duty per pound on the lead in the ore which may be imported. There is a duty of 1 cent a pound upon all zinc in the ores which carry as much as 25 per cent. There is a heavy freight rate from New Mexico to the east as far as Kansas City on lead and zinc ores.

Unless the ores are high grade, it is almost impossible to carry them to the reduction works. Smelters have been established at Pueblo, Colo., and El Paso, Tex., to which points nearly all the zinc and lead ores extracted from the mines of New Mexico must be carried. The rates of freight for these hauls are very great. As the zinc and lead must be shipped in ore, the rate of freight necessarily is very high when applied to the amount of actual metal therein. Lead and zinc ores run from 10 to 40 and 50 per cent. Zinc is worth in the market to-day about 5 cents a pound and lead about 4 cents a pound. The freight from the mines in New Mexico to any of the smelters must equal at least 1 cent a pound, or about 20 per cent of the value of lead or zinc. The largest deposits of zinc and lead in the United States, probably, are found at the mines near Joplin, in Missouri and Kansas. They have the advantage of being in large bodies, close to the East, and with good railroad facilities and cheap transportation. They have fully the benefit of 1 cent a pound by way of freight over the New Mexico metals. Yet when the metals of New Mexico get in the market they do not bring to the owner any more than the metals from Joplin, Mo.

The House of Representatives placed a duty in this bill of 10 per cent upon the metal in the zinc ore, to be determined at the port of entry. The Senate committee has increased that amount to 12½ per cent ad valorem, while the duty under the present law was equal to an ad valorem of 46.64 per cent. In 1910 we imported zinc to the value of $668,476. This was before it was known what policy of the Democratic Party might be installed with the present administration in power. But from the 1st of July, 1912, to the 30th of June, 1913, the importations were only $77,672 in value of zinc in the ore. These figures show that the people long before the session of this Congress had begun to realize what would happen; that zinc ores would be reduced in value by taking off the duty. No greater supply was imported than was needed. The supply which was on hand was disposed of. The duty on lead of all kinds under the present law when it exceeded 3 per cent is 1½ cents per pound on the lead contained in the ore. The House in this bill put a half a cent per pound on the lead and the Senate increased the same to three-fourths of a cent, just exactly half of the rate that is in effect under the present law.

Under the present law, in 1910, there was imported lead to the value of $145,426, and in 1912 lead only to the value of $22,735. The duty under the present law is the equivalent of 55 per cent ad valorem. Under the proposed bill as it passed the House it was equivalent to 20 per cent ad valorem, and as now in the Senate is equivalent to 30 per cent ad valorem, scarcely more than one-half of the duty which exists under the present law. But, again, these figures show that the lead producer and lead dealers are looking to the future and to the present enactment. It shows that there is a falling off in the importations of seven-eighths of the amount. This means that the dealers are laying in no additional stock, but are getting rid of their old supply. They are expecting this bill to reduce the values, and, as a consequence, they desire to get the benefit of the cheaper product. It is estimated that the increase in the importation of the lead ores will reach $1,600,000 in value, as against the importations amounting to $582,194 for last year under the present law, or that the importations will be about three times the amount during the present fiscal year they were during the last fiscal year.

This means that we will have to expend $1,000,000 over and above what we spent during the last fiscal year for lead. This extra amount will have to be paid out of the moneys of our country and sent abroad to remain there, and is an item of evidence as to what the present tariff will do toward keeping up the prosperous times existing under the present law. The current rate of wages of a lead or zinc miner in the State of New Mexico is about $3. If three-fourths of a cent is taken off the value of lead, it can not compete with any other lead in the United States nor with the lead of any foreign country. There is not that much margin on it. If 34.14 per cent ad valorem is deducted from the duty on zinc in New Mexico; that is, nearly three-fourths of the present duty, we will be unable to compete with zinc in any foreign country. The business must close up. The present troubled condition in the Republic of Mexico makes it practically impossible for any ores to be brought from that country, yet there are zinc and lead reducing plants stationed at El Paso on the border of Mexico for the purpose of receiving the ores of New Mexico, Arizona, and Old Mexico. Zinc and lead ores from Old Mexico, if peace was prevailing there, could be furnished to the El Paso smelters at one-half the cost they could be furnished in New Mexico or other parts of the United States, owing to the cheap labor in Old Mexico, which runs from 12½ cents to $1 a day for ordinary labor.

One of these plants has been compelled to close up because of two facts: One, the condition of Mexico, and because of this it is impossible for them to get ore enough to supply their plant; another, agitation of the tariff bill which threatens to almost certainly reduce the tariff on ores to such an extent that the New Mexico and Arizona ores can not be handled. There is no certainty that these smelters will resume business. The passage of this bill will close every lead and zinc mine in New Mexico and Arizona, and probably those in Colorado. It is claimed by the majority that lead and zinc are mined by laborers at a wage of about $1.55 per day. That is the claim made in the letter of the gentleman from Providence, R. I., which was placed in the RECORD a few days ago by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

I have wired to the cashier of the Joplin National Bank, at Joplin, Mo., to obtain the current wages of zinc and lead miners there and have a telegram from him saying:

Answering telegram to-day, wages of miners in this district now run about as follows: Ground men, classified as shovelers, $3 to $5 per day, depending on number of cans of dirt filled at rate of 7 to 8 cents per can. Machine men, $2.75 per day; helpers, $2.50; trackmen, $2.75; tub hookers, $3 to $3.50; top men, classified as hoistermen, $2.75 to $3 per day; jig men, $25 per week; engineers, $2.75 to $3 and $3.50 per day; blacksmiths, $3; screen men, $2.25 to $2.50. These wages about average on present prices of zinc with ore at $45 to $50; wages probably 25 cents higher per man per day.

J. E. CARMEN, Cashier.

Also I wired to Mr. C. T. Brown, of Socorro, N. Mex., the largest zinc and lead operator in New Mexico, for the current wages there, and have a telegram from his clerk saying:

Mr. Brown out in field; impossible to catch him for several days. We pay timbermen and machine men $4.50 and $4; miners, $4 to $3; muckers, $2.75 to $2 per shift of eight hours.

C. E. MOFFETT, Clerk.

These telegrams do not bear out the calculations made by the gentleman in Providence, R. I., which was printed in the RECORD of July 28, on page 3124. According to the rates shown by the cashier of the bank at Joplin, Mo., if the calculations of the Providence expert were correct, the wage earners at Joplin, who, he says, are about 75 per cent of the whole in the United States, would more than exhaust the whole amount paid for wages and the other one-fourth would get nothing or have to pay something from their pockets to the Joplin wage earner. This shows the criticism of the Senator from Utah on that communication must be correct.

The duty of the present bill may be of benefit to the lead mines in Joplin, Mo., and Kansas, because it will remove from them competitors who now compel them to keep their ores down to a reasonable dividend condition. If they have no competitors, the country at large will be at their mercy, or, at least, at theirs and those who are in the Mississippi Valley, who may combine to make the market as they will. To-day the lead and zinc mines in the Rocky Mountain region keep down the prices of lead. Can it be possible that Senators are legislating in the immediate interest of their own State to the injury of others? It would seem so by the way the duties are being fixed by the Senate on those two products.

Time will demonstrate. There are other products in New Mexico which will be affected by the tariff, among them coal and lumber, of which New Mexico has large quantities. No coal or lumber comes into New Mexico to compete in our individual markets, for the reason that we supply much more than our home market and ship out of the State both lumber and coal. New Mexico supplies most of the coal market of Arizona and southern California and a large portion of northern Texas. By taking the duty off of coal, the markets New Mexico has may be invaded by foreign producers. Australian coal can be brought across as ballast and delivered at San Diego and Los Angeles, without a duty, cheaper than the New Mexico coal. In fact, it can be brought into Arizona and there compete sharply with the New Mexico product. Coal from other countries, especially from Nova Scotia, will be brought into our country on the eastern coast and drive back the supply of coal that is now shipped from the interior to the Atlantic seaboard. The railroads along the line of the Atlantic coast and all seagoing vessels will get their supply from the foreign product. This will necessarily drive the coal in the Allegheny Mountains and in the Mississippi Valley farther west to find a market or close up their mines, or at least curtail their output to such an extent that they will be compelled to discharge large numbers of their employees and throw them upon the world without means of support, as beggars for a living.

In the years 1894, 1895, and 1896 nearly every woolen mill, nearly every spindle in the United States, was standing still; no fires were burning in the furnaces; the chimneys were dead and smokeless; people were without employment, without substantial clothing, and without a sufficient means of support; money could not be had from the banks; business was at a standstill. Would you produce by the passage of this bill a similar condition? I pray that the bill may not pass, and that if it does pass a different condition may result. It has been said that the tariff of 1894 did not produce the panic. The people anticipated the passage of that act. They relied upon the declarations of the party which went into power. The force of those declarations took effect upon them immediately. Upon the result of the election being known times grew hard, money tight, business began to be drawn in, people began to prepare for hard times.

When the Wilson-Gorman bill was passed the panic was practically on. But it was a panic of anticipation, growing out of the declarations of the party in power then; the same party which is in power now. That condition of things continued until the election of McKinley and a Republican Congress, under a declaration that they would inaugurate a tariff for protection and restore the prosperity. Again the people, before McKinley could call the Congress together or take action, discounted the condition of things; prosperity commenced to show itself long before the enactment of the Dingley law; business grew better; the idler obtained work; credit was extended; money began to circulate; business life sprang up.

When the tariff was lowered by the enactment of the Wilson-Gorman bill times grew hard. When the Wilson-Gorman bill was repealed and the Dingley bill enacted hard times ceased; losses were stopped; prosperity commenced; labor was had; the manufactories started up; money circulated; people were able to obtain better clothing and better food; the world looked better, seemed better, and was better. The act passed by a Republican Congress and approved by a Republican President, providing for $500,000,000 emergency fund, may save us from the worst features of a panic. Such fund has been placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury with power to use the same for protection against financial distress. He can use it to break down a threatened or impending run upon the banks. He can use it to supply currency which may be needed to meet extraordinary contingencies—such contingencies as may grow and develop out of the disturbances arising from the effects of this bill if enacted into a law. That fund and the experience which the people now have, gained from a knowledge severely earned by experience under the Wilson-Gorman bill and its workings, may save the country from as great disaster as existed in 1894 and 1895. But even all these things can not prevent financial troubles and difficulties. They can not prevent a stringency in the money market and a tightening up and slumping of the business of the country if this bill becomes a law. They can not make it possible to keep a large balance of trade in the face of the proposed enactment. Such will have the effect to minimize business interests in this country, to compel the people having such business to close down or curtail their transactions here and in foreign countries, our dealers to go abroad and purchase in outside markets those things which should be manufactured at home and disposed of here as well as exported.

It can not prevent the expenditures of large volumes of money abroad or in foreign markets which should be kept at home and made to help our own markets. The more you reduce the tariff, the easier you make it possible for the foreign producer to compete more favorably with our manufacturers and producers; the more you will enable him to take from our markets, carry away from our shores the moneys which now circulate among the people; the more you will cause thereby to be imported from abroad and the less you will enable our people to produce so as to send abroad into foreign trade. You will cause less exportation and vastly increase the importation. You will have to more than double the imports in order to get the revenue on such decreased rate of duty. You can not expect that it will be even possible to evade the importation of foreign products into the United States to the extent of double the amount we now import, for which extra amount we will have to send the cash to pay for them. You can not expect when our manufactories and business shall be curtailed or destroyed that we will be able to furnish the same amount of products to ship to foreign countries in order to obtain the amount of moneys which have been flowing for the last 20 years into our treasuries. If you are infatuated with an idea that you can do that, it is well for you to stop and think. If you destroy four and one-half billion pounds of sugar product, which we produce, and compel our people to buy that amount in foreign markets, where does the money come from which is to purchase it? What will fill its place? If you destroy two hundred and fifty millions worth of sheep, or their woolen product, what will take its place, except wool and woolen goods from foreign markets? If you reduce the duty one-half or more on woolen manufactures, if the amount of importation should not be increased, you will lose one-half of the duties now collected. If you place wool on the free list you will lose all the duties on that, amounting to about fourteen millions and a half per year. If you put sugar on the free list you will lose fifty-two millions a year collected as duties thereon.

These are not all the articles on which you are reducing the duty to any great extent. You will lose on them the amount corresponding to the duties now existing and necessarily must increase the amount of importations in order to make up the full complement of income.

You claim that the income tax will make up for the loss on wool and sugar. Possibly it will. The income tax, however, is an experiment. While good financiers may form some approximation as to the amount which will be received thereby, you must wait for its operations. You must see how much the income of individuals will be divided up among families to get the amount of exemption; how much may be applied for the various kinds of losses which they are allowed to charge off; how much the conscience of the individual may be tested and stretched in order to enable him to reduce the amount to be paid to a minimum. The people in this country are not unlike, in the main, the people of any other civilized country. They all have the same failings, the same human instincts, the same desire to obtain and retain wealth and fortune. You have got to meet these attributes of the man and find how well he can stand the test which this bill, under the income-tax provision, will impose on his conscience.

It seems to me that this bill, in principle, is keeping up the policy heretofore indulged in by Congress and every administration against the West; that is, depriving it of everything possible, for the aid of the East.

Our principal products outside of gold and silver are sugar, coal, lumber, lead, zinc, and cereals, nearly all of which go onto the free list, and those which do not have the duty reduced from two-thirds to three-fourths.

Do you think we in the West can endure privation and poverty more than those in the East? Do you think as a reward for the loss of kindred and friends by the slaughter of the same and the destruction of their means of livelihood by savages we are used to such things and do not need consideration or help? I am not prepared to believe such is the fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Shively
Bacon	Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Borah	Hitchcock	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Hollis	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Hughes	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	James	Page	Smoot
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Sterling
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Stone
Chamberlain	Jones	Pittman	Sutherland
Chilton	Kenyon	Poindexter	Swanson

Crawford	Lane	Saulsbury	Thornton
Cummins	Lea	Shafroth	Vardaman
Dillingham	Lewis	Sheppard	Walsh
Fall	Lodge	Sherman	Williams

Mr. BACON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] has been unavoidably called away from the city this afternoon.

Mr. JAMES. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. BRADLEY], I desire to state that he is unavoidably absent from the city.

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is unavoidably absent today.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily absent to-day. He is paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be stated, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment, offered by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], is at the top of page 29, as follows: In line 1 strike out "25" and insert in lieu thereof "35," and in line 2 strike out "3" and insert "6," so that, if amended, the paragraph will read:

101. Freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone, lava, and all other stone suitable for use as monumental or building stone, except marble, breccia, and onyx, not specially provided for in this section, hewn, dressed, or polished, or otherwise manufactured, 35 per cent ad valorem; unmanufactured, or not dressed, hewn, or polished, 6 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, believing that the rates of duty in the bill as it came from the Committee on Finance would work very great injury to the granite industry of the country, the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] offered an amendment restoring the duties of the present law.

That amendment was rejected. I then offered an amendment proposing a reduction of 20 per cent from existing rates, and that amendment was rejected. Laboring under a misapprehension, I moved to strike out the paragraph, and that motion was very properly negatived.

I have now offered an amendment proposing a reduction of 30 per cent from the amount named in the bill for manufactured granite and 40 per cent of unmanufactured granite, and while it may be a vain hope, I have a slight hope that the Senators on the other side may see the justice of the amendment I have offered and agree to it.

I desire to speak very briefly on the amendment I have proposed and to present some statistics that will, at least, be of historical interest, if they do not materially contribute to the discussion.

In 1909 there were 707 different enterprises engaged in the manufacture of granite in the United States. There were 825 quarries. The capital invested was $25,422,307. The expenses of operation, and so forth, were $16,192,138. The wages paid were $12,181,727. The value of the product was $18,997,976. The total number of persons engaged was 22,211, and the number of wage earners was 20,561.

Of the entire industry New England had 316 distinct enterprises, being 45 per cent of the whole. She had a capital invested of $12,842,980, which was about 45 per cent of the whole. She paid wages to the amount of $6,098,280, being 50 per cent of the whole. The value of her products was $9,497,135, being 50 per cent of the entire production, and her wage earners were 45 per cent of the entire number. These figures are for the New England States.

New Hampshire has not a very large stake in this matter, and yet it is of very considerable consequence to our little State. She has 40 different enterprises. Forty-six quarries are being operated. The capital invested in 1909 was $891,030. The expenses of operation were $1,053,085. The wages paid were $880,762. The value of her products was $1,215,461. The number of persons engaged was 1,385, and the number of wage earners engaged, 1,305.

Turning to the Mineral Resources of the United States, 1911, I find these figures as to the value of the granite product in the United States, and also in the State that I in part represent:

Granite produced in the United States.

In 1907	$18,661,709
In 1908	18,420,699
In 1909	19,581,597

In addition to these figures I have a statement showing the value of granite, trap rock, sandstone, limestone, and marble used for various purposes in 1910 and 1911, which is of statistical interest, and I shall ask to have it inserted without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the value of granite represented nearly 28 per cent of the total value of stone in 1911. The increase in value was from $20,541,967 in 1910 to $21,391,878 in 1911, an increase of $849,911. Granite for building and crushed stone increased in value, but there was a decrease in the value of granite for monumental work, curbing, flagging, and paving.

Rough granite for monumental work, granite sold dressed for monumental work, granite for paving blocks, crushed granite for roads, railroad ballast, and concrete, and granite for miscellaneous purposes not specified in the returns, increased in value; rough granite for building purposes, granite sold dressed for building purposes, and granite sold for rubble, riprap, curbing, and flagging showed a decrease. Fourteen States each produced granite valued at more than $500,000 in 1911, in the following order: Vermont, Massachusetts, Maine, California, Wisconsin, Washington, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Georgia, Maryland, Minnesota, North Carolina, Oregon, and Connecticut. Of these States the first seven produced granite valued at more than $1,000,000 each, and six of them, Vermont, Massachusetts, California, Washington, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, showed an increase in the value of the output.

Now, Mr. President, I do not desire to say anything further at this time on this question. The amendment I offer now proposes a decrease of 30 per cent from the rate fixed in the Senate bill, from 50 per cent on manufactured granite to 35 per cent, and a decrease of 40 per cent on unmanufactured granite, from 10 cents to 6 cents per cubic foot. It is a very large reduction and it is a recognition freely made that, in my judgment, this product can stand a considerable reduction from the terms and rates of the existing law.

The matter is of very considerable interest to some of us. It touches particularly five New England States that have been for a long time engaged in this industry, and that have great pride in the industry, producing as good granite as there is in all the world. Those States are in open and active competition with themselves and in open and active competition with all other States in the American Union that produce granite. They are furnishing the product at a price that does not give them very large profit to-day, and if the bill as it is now proposed shall be enacted into law it may entirely destroy that profit; at least it will very materially affect the industry itself.

I will content myself, Mr. President, now by asking for the yeas and nays on the amendment I have offered, repeating the faint hope that our Democratic friends may see the justice of the amendment and give it a majority.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are called for by the Senator from New Hampshire on the amendment presented by him.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I shall be obliged to vote against this amendment. My family has been engaged in the stone industry in Massachusetts and New Hampshire for many generations—for over 100 years. It is well known in New Hampshire that my family is so engaged. But I have received no protest or complaint of any sort against the reduction suggested by the bill, except from one manufacturer in the western part of the State.

I have heard this matter discussed for years, and it is not the opinion of the manufacturers of granite or of the owners of granite quarries in New Hampshire that they are materially helped by the present rate. They realize that many duties on articles they consume have been reduced in their interest, and they believe that they should take their share of the reduction.

Granite is so bulky that there is very little of it imported. Now and then some one wants a Scotch granite monument or headstone; and if some widow or widower or daughter wants a Scotch granite headstone instead of a domestic one, there is no reason why that mourner should not have it without paying a large tariff rate.

I know of no demand to have the present tariff rate kept up. There is substantial competition among the different producers of granite all over the country.

It was asked the other day how they could tell the difference between granite that is intended for monumental and building purposes and those stones which are not. I will say that it is so expensive to work a quarry and ship stone that none of our granite is used for building and monumental purposes unless it is what they call good color, and good color and clear stock are very readily recognized. The only poor color and poor stock that is quarried and transported at all is for the purposes of edging and paving. So it is very easy to tell the difference.

For the reasons that I have suggested, Mr. President, I shall vote against the reductions suggested by my colleague.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I had intended to make some observations in reference to the pending amendment, but I think the two New Hampshire Senators have sufficiently debated the question, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply want to say that my State, as well as the State of New Hampshire, is quite a large producer of granite. I believe there are only eight States in the Union that produce more than North Carolina. We produced in 1910 nearly 1,000,000 tons.

Like the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], I have heard of no complaint from my State about this matter, and I do not now recall that we have had any from any source. I am not quite sure about that, however. I have not examined the testimony to see, but I do not recall anyone who has spoken to me about it or anyone who appeared before the subcommittees while I was present.

I rather think, Mr. President, that the apprehension of our friends the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is without foundation. The Senator from Vermont had great apprehension with reference to competition from Canada. I sent for the book that corresponds to our geological survey of the natural resources of the country, published by the British Government, and I can not find that there is any granite of any consequence produced in Canada except in Quebec. That is where all the granite that need to be feared, I suppose, by New England would come from.

I find that in 1908 there were produced in Quebec only 30,000 cubic yards of granite, and that it was valued at 51,000 pounds. According to the calculation I have made, that is 30 cents a cubic foot, which seems to me very much higher than the price of granite here.

But what I was purposely getting at was some little statistics with reference to competition existing now in New England between the different States where granite is produced. I think the real thing that they need up in New England is some little protection against each other. I have here the Mineral Resources of the United States, giving the production and the price of granite for building purposes and for monumental purposes in the States of Vermont and Maine, and this is what I find:

In 1910 the value of granite for building purposes in Vermont was 57 cents per cubic foot in the rough. In Maine in the same year it was 22 cents per cubic foot in the rough. Dressed in 1910 in Vermont it was $4.13 per cubic foot. In Maine, when dressed, it was $2.09 per cubic foot. In Vermont in 1910 and 1911 rough monumental granite was $1.91 per cubic foot. In Maine in that year, 1911, monumental granite in the rough was worth 67 cents per cubic foot. Granite, monumental, dressed in Vermont that year, was worth $3.47 per cubic foot. In Maine in that year monumental granite dressed was worth only $3.03 per cubic foot. So there seems to be a pretty sharp competition between Maine and Vermont in the price of granite, and probably the difference between the price in those two States is very much greater between the price in this country and any other country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single observation.

It is absolutely incomprehensible that for the same quality of granite there can be any such difference in price as between Maine and Vermont. There is granite and granite in our country, and it would be well to compare the qualities before we determine the relative price in the different communities.

Mr. President, I listened with interest to what my colleague [Mr. HOLLIS] said on this subject. It is true that his family at some time, or one or more members of his family, were engaged in the granite business, but I believe they are not engaged in it now. It is a surprise to me that my colleague has not received any communications on this subject from the men who quarry granite and manufacture granite in various towns in New Hampshire. I have received quite a number of communications, one of them coming in my mail this morning, a very earnest appeal that the rates named in the pending bill should be modified to some extent. But I am not going to quarrel with my colleague over that matter. His vote will speak for itself and mine will speak for my position on this and all other subjects.

I had hoped that this concession would be freely granted. Evidently it is not, because the attitude of my colleague, I take it, would settle it if anything was needed to settle it; and I am ready now, as I was 15 minutes ago, to have the yeas and nays taken on the amendment I have offered.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in reply to what was said by the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] as to the question whether there was any demand for the maintenance of the duty upon granite products I beg leave to read briefly from a letter which I have just received from the secretary of the Granite Manufacturers' Association in Barre, which is undoubtedly the largest granite center in the United States. In this letter he says:

It appears that the tariff on granite was reduced at the request of Mr. Frank J. Hanold, of Townsend, Townsend & Co., New York City, representing the National Association of Wholesale Granite Dealers, composed of about 15 to 20 firms engaged in selling monuments at wholesale. It is interesting to note that this request for a reduction in the tariff comes from an organization composed of a few men who get their living by handling what some one else produces. They are not all interested in the production of the goods which they handle, nor do they care what it costs to produce them. They are only interested in the dollars which they can squeeze out of the producer and the consumer; and in case they succeed in getting the tariff reduced, the ultimate consumer will pay just as much for his monument as he does to-day, and what is saved on duty will go to swell the coffers of the wholesaler. It will mean that the wholesaler will push the foreign goods, because he can make a larger margin than he can on the home products. It may be hard for one not familiar with the monument business to understand this particular line of reasoning, but among those who know the business it is a well-known fact that the dealer can sell most any kind of granite which he desires to push. This is specially true of the ordinary sized jobs, as the consumer usually buys but one monument in his lifetime and naturally takes the word of the dealer as to the quality, etc., of the article which he purchases. Working from this premise, it is easily to be understood why the wholesale dealer is so anxious to have the tariff reduced. I understand that no manufacturers were heard at any of the hearings when the schedule was being made up, and it is particularly hard for us to realize that the committee recommended the lowering of the tariff on the strength of the representations made by an organization which is in a way antagonistic to the best interests of the legitimate manufacturer.

If granite were a necessity and the reduction in the tariff would cheapen the ultimate price of the finished monument to the consumer, we would not feel like entering a protest; but the consumer will never know that there has been a reduction, and why throw open the door to foreign granite for the benefit of the importer at the expense of the American manufacturer and the American laborer? The granite cutter in Barre to-day is receiving 40¾ cents per hour, minimum; in Scotland he receives 15 cents per hour average. What protection are you giving the American laborer by this proposed reduction?

I do not care to quote further, but that I think very fairly states the position of the granite manufacturers in Vermont.

My colleague [Mr. PAGE] was not here when the Senator from North Carolina was speaking of the granite industry in Canada. I do not know what information he has upon that subject. I have very little except I know that the Canadian Government places a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem on dressed granite, and that duty is so great that no American stock, no New England stock, can enter Canada in a cut or finished condition. All the sales that we can make in Canada of our granite are sales of the product as it comes from the quarry where it has not been improved by the expenditure of money for American labor.

Mr. JAMES. I ask for a vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as bearing upon this question I wish to submit a fact which I ascertained through the Interstate Commerce Commission. I was curious to know whether the freight rate upon granite would afford any protection to the American producer as against the producer of the only sort of monumental granite that is imported into this country.

Upon investigation I found that the freight rate on a short ton of granite from Dundee, Scotland, to New York is $1.15\frac{6}{10}$; upon a long ton, $1.25.

A short ton of granite contains from 11.8 to 12.5 cubic feet. I figured out the cubic feet in a monument that was diagrammed and the dimensions given accompanying a letter which I received from a granite-producing firm located at Quincy, Mass., and the only one, I believe, which made any protest before either the Ways and Means Committee or the Finance Committee as to the reduction of these duties, at least so far as I could ascertain from an examination of the testimony.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator will permit me, I think he will find that the association at Barre, whose secretary wrote me the letter I quoted this afternoon, did file their protest.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With the Finance Committee?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. With the Finance Committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Possibly that is so. I could find but one.

Mr. President, figuring the cubical contents of the small monument which was diagrammed in this letter of protest I found it contained about 1 ton of material. Now, taking a ton of granite as having a content of 12 cubic feet and applying the duty to it fixed in the present law of 10 cents per cubic foot the Aldrich duty would be $1.20; that is, $1.20 would be the duty on a ton of granite. The freight rate from Scotland to New York is $1.15. The duty, at 3 cents per cubic foot, would be 36 cents, to which would be added the freight rate of $1.15, giving the producer in this country, with duty and freight added, a protection amounting to $1.51 per ton of 2,000 pounds, or, on the basis of a long ton, protection amounting to $1.61 per ton.

The freight rate from Beebe Junction, Canada, to Chicago and perhaps a dozen distributing points in the United States is almost exactly the same as the freight rate given to the American producer of granite from New York, Baltimore, Barre, Vt., and a number of other points in this country. So there is no protection in the American freight rate as against a foreign producer, but there is a protection in the ocean freight rate.

Now, the question naturally arose in my mind as to whether the shipper of granite from Scotland could not avail himself of a combination rate which would put him more nearly on a competing basis with the American, but the Interstate Commerce Commission, whose assistance I had in ascertaining these rates, inform me that there is no combination rate; that the ocean freight rate would be added to the freight rate in this country on a shipment of granite from Scotland to any interior point in the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin, with his permission——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why a combination freight rate may not be made on this product as well as on other products that we are importing, concerning which great complaint is being made now?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not prepared to give to the Senator any reason based upon the transportation business why such rate might not be granted. I simply state that I am informed that it does not exist at the present time.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not now; but the added suggestion I would make is that if this violent reduction of duty of 50 per cent should result in a very largely increased importation of Scotch granite, would they not avail themselves of that privilege which seems to be accorded to other importers?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should think they would seek to avail themselves of the lowest rate that they could get. Indeed, it is fair to presume that they have sought and failed to secure such combination rate. There may be, sir, some reason, based upon some rule of transportation with respect to this sort of product, which leads the transportation companies to refuse to give such combination rate. Be that as it may, this rate is the prevailing freight rate now in this country, as I understand it.

Mr. President, as I am on my feet, I will add just one more fact as bearing upon this question, which is rather interesting, and which, I think, must be taken into account in our consideration of tariff reductions.

Great changes have come during the last few years, in a comparatively limited period at least, in the elements affecting cost production in this as in many other businesses. Not long ago the number of men employed in quarries for producing a given quantity of granite was necessarily much larger than now, and I think that we who stand for a reasonable tariff, one that shall be protective of American industries under existing conditions, must give special weight to these changed and changing conditions.

In quarrying granite, Mr. President, the modern drill, which has been put in operation in all of the principal quarries in this country—I think in all of them—enables one man operating that drill, the power for which is furnished by electricity or by compressed air, to drill a hole 3 inches in diameter 8 feet per hour. One man operating that drill can do the work that it required three men to perform in the same time only a few years ago. The wonderful efficiency of this drill enables the sinking of a hole perpendicularly a distance of 25 feet. In one engineering authority I find it stated that in firing a single blast in quarrying granite 70,000 tons of granite were freed and made ready for loading—a sufficient quantity in bulk and weight to load a freight train 3 miles long.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator from Wisconsin tell us where that was done?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was done in the granite quarries of Scotland.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. We never do that in America.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Scotch quarries are equipped, according to this authority, with precisely the same machinery that the Senator will find in the quarries in his State and that are to be found in the granite quarries of Wisconsin.

Of course, that quantity of granite would have to be subdivided, but these modern appliances for blocking this granite are equally improved, and increase the output enormously over the appliances used only a few years ago. Therefore, Mr. President, the difference in the wage scale is not so material a factor in the production of granite as it was a few years ago.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he regards the report of the census as correct? I believe that report says that the percentage of cost of granite is 80 for labor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, Mr. President, I do not believe that statement means the wage cost in a unit of production. I have no doubt that that term as used in the census report refers to the conversion cost. It is inconceivable that it should be the wage cost. Why, the wage cost in the production of woolen cloth, going through some nine different processes in converting the raw material to the finished product, is, as I recall, from 20 to 45 per cent. It is preposterous to suggest, as it seems to me, that the labor cost of quarrying granite and preparing it for market, drilling and blasting and polishing, which is done largely with labor-saving machinery, is 80 per cent of the total value of the product.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to interrupt him further?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I presume the Senator from Wisconsin is correct in saying that the 80 per cent covers the labor after the blast has thrown out from the side of the quarry the great blocks of granite. I imagine the 80 per cent covers the sawing, which is done largely, though perhaps not altogether, by machinery, and the polishing, which is done by machinery. As the Senator says, the conversion is really pretty much all there is to the work on granite. The work of drilling and getting it out from the side of the mountain is comparatively cheap; but it is true, I think, that the cost of labor which enters into granite—into the finished monument—is about 80 per cent of the entire cost after the granite has been drilled and has been blasted out of the quarry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am very certain, Mr. President, that the Senator from Vermont is mistaken if he means by the labor cost the wage cost—the sum paid to labor for converting a ton of granite from the raw material as it lies in the ground to the finished product ready for shipment.

Mr. PAGE. I have no means of verifying the figures that are given in the census report. It may be, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, that they include the expense of power.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes; it includes all overhead charges; it includes depreciation; it includes the interest on the investment; it includes everything that goes into the conversion cost.

Mr. PAGE. I do not know that that is a correct statement as to the cost of manufacture. The cost of manufacture, so far as we know, is very largely labor after the granite has been thrown out by the blast.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has now furnished the definition, or, in other words, he has now correctly quoted the census report, which gives us exactly the definition for which I am contending—that is, the total manufacturing cost—that is, the total cost of conversion.

I am not surprised, Mr. President, that there is such a dearth of information before the Senate upon this, as there is upon so many of the other items in this tariff bill. The only firm that responded to the questions that were sent out to those protesting against a change in tariff rates, in so far as shown by the printed report of the committee, is the Granite Manufacturers' Association of Quincy, Mass. It is surprising to read the answers which that association makes, through its secretary, to the questions propounded by the committee, the Finance Committee questions being 29 in number. I will only detain the Senate to merely read the answer to one question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Would the Senator from Wisconsin tell us the date when those questions were sent out?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The letter of the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SIMMONS], transmitting these questions, is printed in the document I hold in my hand and is dated May 24, while the answer is dated June 2.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. What is the answer?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator will find it, if he has the document, on page 44.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Did the Senator from Wisconsin state what company had made the answer?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Manufacturers' Association of Quincy, Mass.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator from Wisconsin will look at another document he will see that this company addressed the committee as early as May 13, before the questions were sent out. They wrote to the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is a report which was submitted before that?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But, as I understand it, they were also sent these questions——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am not disputing with the Senator from Wisconsin about the matter.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Because I am informed that the committee submitted these questions to every manufacturer or producer in this country who had filed a brief or filed any protest with the committee.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Perhaps I misapprehended the point the Senator from Wisconsin was making. As I understood the Senator, the point was that these companies did not wake up to the importance of this matter until after they received those questions. As a matter of fact, this company woke up to their importance as soon as they found that these New York firms had appeared asking for the reduction.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was not making that point at all. I will read but one question and answer, Mr. President, from the reply made by the Granite Manufacturers' Association of Quincy, and printed on page 44 of the document. The question submitted referred to the percentage of labor cost to the total cost of a unit of product in this country. That question was presented in one or two different forms, and could not have escaped the attention of anyone to whom it was sent. Anyone will search in vain in the answers made to these questions for any informing answer to those questions. Questions 24 and 25 are as follows:

24. What is the total cost of production per unit of the same products as yours in competing countries? In answering this question give the exact source of your knowledge or information.

25. What is the percentage of labor cost to the total cost of a unit of product in competing countries? In answering this question, give exact source of your knowledge or information, stating the countries separately.

The answer given by the association to which I have referred in response to these two questions combined is this:

Nos. 24 and 25. We can only answer this by stating that the minimum wage for our granite cutters is $3.25 per day of eight hours, and the wage in Scotland is $1.35 per day of nine hours. Our information is obtained from members who keep in touch with affairs at their former homes.

It will be observed that they do not state that the wage of $1.35 in Scotland is for the same class of employment as the minimum wage of $3.25 which they pay.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not reasonable to assume that it is?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think that it is reasonable to assume that such an answer is an entirely candid and frank answer to those questions when you take into account not only those two questions but the further questions likewise submitted to them:

What is the total cost of production per unit of product in this country?

What is the total cost of production per unit of product in competing countries?

What is the percentage of the labor cost to the total cost of a unit of product in this country?

What is the percentage of the labor cost to the total cost of a unit of product in competing foreign countries?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, he must remember that those are pretty technical questions to address to a man who is engaged in the granite industry. In my own city we have a great many Englishmen engaged in the granite industry, and they tell us frankly what the difference is between the wages paid in Concord, N. H., and in Scotland, and I apprehend that they mean the same class of work. I never questioned it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would suggest to Senators interested in ascertaining the relative cost of production in this and in competing countries that an examination of the answers to the questions sent out, made by the few who responded at all, fails to furnish very much specific information on the subject. This would indicate that it was a subject that did not trouble them sufficiently to lead them to inform themselves upon it, or else it tends to show a want of the utmost frankness on the part of a very large proportion of those who responded at all.

Mr. President, I believe in an intelligent application of the production-cost theory to tariff making, and I shall have something further to say on that later. I do not believe that it is a magic formula, but I shall contend—and I think can successfully maintain the contention—that without it you have no guide whatever for the making of any sort of a tariff, whether it be a tariff for revenue or a competitive tariff, or a reasonably protective tariff. I believe——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment, if the Senator please. I believe that on a product of this character, with a minimum of the conversion cost being really wage cost or labor cost, we are reasonably safe if we fix duties at a low rate.

We have, in the State of Wisconsin, a considerable production of granite; we have a very extensive field of it of a very fine quality. I have not received—and I had my files consulted only yesterday—any protest from those engaged in that business in Wisconsin. I have been somewhat surprised to find that there is only one—possibly two—protesting manufacturers or producers of granite in all of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate. For that reason I shall feel constrained to vote against the amendment increasing the rate fixed in the pending bill, upon which the roll call has been ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator takes his seat I might say that I voted with great avidity for the questions which the Senator formulated and presented to the Senate; but I thought then, as I think now—and I apprehend the Senator will agree with me—that to reach the difference in labor cost we will have to get some different machinery than simply addressing an individual manufacturer; in other words, we shall have to have a commission who will give their time to it and who will be able to investigate that matter personally, or through agents in foreign countries as well as in this country, which an individual manufacturer can not do.

I can see the great difficulty that those men had, many of them untrained in anything but their own industry, in trying to give categorical answers that would satisfy so technical a mind as that of the Senator from Wisconsin; but I can not believe that they personally made answers to mislead the committee or the Senate.

In reference to this particular matter of the granite industry, I can readily understand, taking the manufacturers in my own town, that those technical questions would stagger them very much. They might sit up two or three nights in endeavoring to formulate an answer that would not at all be acceptable to the Senator or to a committee or to the Senate itself. They might do the very best they could, very much like a man in the country who gets a letter from the Senator may sit up a night or two trying to formulate an answer. He does the best he can, but the letter is not very well expressed when he gets through with it.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will permit me to reply first to the Senator from New Hampshire, I will then yield to him with pleasure.

Mr. President, I did not offer the questions which were submitted as an amendment to a motion to refer this bill to the Committee on Finance with any suggestion or thought in my mind that the answers to those questions would enable us to dispense with a tariff commission. I believe, sir, in the establishment and maintenance of such a commission, a commission composed of experts, a commission of nonpartisan character; but I do not agree with the Senator that there is any business of very great importance conducted in this country that can not make intelligent answer to every one of the 16 questions which I submitted, in spite of the fact that there were but few responses to the questions sent out, which numbered something like 2,500, if I remember correctly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Over 2,000, I think.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was informed that something over 2,500 were sent out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Probably that is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And the answers, I think, returned, numbered only some sixty-odd.

Mr. SIMMONS. There were 66 answers upon 32 subjects.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, touching the answers made to the particular inquiries addressed to the Massachusetts Granite Manufacturers' Association, I can easily see that it might be difficult for the ordinary man to ascertain precisely the percentage of labor cost per unit of product in foreign factories. He might have some difficulty in that respect; but did this association answer as to the percentage of labor cost per unit of product in this country?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It did not, even as to its own business. I will say to my friend from Indiana that I have little doubt that most concerns of importance in this country will be found to be pretty well informed upon the subject of cost of production. They know to the fraction of a cent the labor cost of production in every unit of their own product. It is not an absolute and continuing thing; it will change with the seasons and from time to time; it will vary; but they know very definitely at the end of the year the cost in every unit of product turned out, and if they have been at all apprehensive of competition from abroad they will be found to be pretty well informed as to the conditions of the principal competing industries in the principal competing countries.

Those that are very large institutions have agents abroad all the while observing, inquiring, investigating, and keeping close watch upon the industries, in order to avail themselves of any improvement that may be made there over the operations in this country, or anything in their systems which in any way can affect the interests here.

Mr. PAGE and Mr. JAMES addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the Senator lives in a State where the tanning industry is very large, and I presume he is cognizant of the fact—for I think it is a fact—that the chemicals used in tanning which are brought from Germany are delivered at Milwaukee at a rate of freight not higher than the freight rate from the Atlantic seaboard to Milwaukee. Is the Senator aware of that fact?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was not aware of that particular fact until the Senator stated it; but I do know that combination rates are very common and that the foreign producer is given that advantage over the domestic producer, which in many instances is an element that must be reckoned with.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, has the Senator any doubt in his own mind that if the duties are reduced from 50 per cent to 25 per cent on imported monuments and other manufactures of stone it will materially increase the importations?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not believe it will harmfully increase the importations. I believe the duty will be at about the line which will measure the difference in the cost of production. I am not absolutely certain of that because of the dearth of data; but I purpose in voting for duties to vote with the best light I am able to get on each item, with a view, if I can, of reaching that measure of duty which will cover the difference in the cost of production.

Mr. PAGE. But is it not true, Mr. President, that in making these computations the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate were always keeping in mind the barrier of extra freight, and did not that enter into their consideration very much in deciding on these rates of duty?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am bound to say that where freight rates afford more protection than duties which in themselves are almost prohibitory, they ought to be taken into account. Otherwise, in a combination between the transportation companies and the beneficiaries of high protective duties, the people of this country would be wholly at the mercy of that combination and could be charged double and treble prices.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will allow me, when this question of the duty upon granite was taken up I went to my granite friends in the quarries of my home locality and asked them where they thought the strongest, keenest, most dangerous competition would be found.

I do not think the conditions in the Hardwick and Woodbury quarries are exactly like the conditions in the Barre quarries, because the Barre quarries are very largely producers of monumental granite, while the quarries of Woodbury and Hardwick produce a great deal of building stone.

I want to say that those men were eminently fair. They said to me in 1909: "We are Republicans. The Republicans have promised to reduce duties and we want the granite producers to stand their share of reduction. We do not object to a fair reduction in the tariff; but you ask us what we are apprehensive of, and we simply say that if there ever comes a time when we are not all doing all we can the first trouble will be with the Canadian producer."

As I remarked the other day, the stratum of granite in Vermont extends through into Canada, and there is quite a large concern at Beebe Plains, to which I referred yesterday. I do not know how extensive it is, but I am told it is quite extensive. I want to say to the Senator that Beebe Plains, Hardwick, Woodbury, and Barre are all situated on the Boston & Maine railway system and the freights from all those points are substantially identical. Hence the protection which would be given in the matter of freight to the Hardwick and Woodbury producers, and other producers at that point of the granite-producing section, would not amount to anything, because the rates are the same. I think that fact should be taken into account in considering the duty that ought to be placed upon this commodity.

If it is true that they have at Beebe Plains the same quality of granite, and if it is true that they have a large and well capitalized manufacturing concern, and if it is true—as I am informed, I think, correctly—that the quarry owners there employ nonunion help at $2.25 per day of nine hours as against a minimum of, I think, $3.25 paid in this country, the question of labor cost of course comes in. In addition to that, where they work their shops with nonunion men they are able to be more exacting than are the quarries in this country, where the working conditions are prescribed by organizations. I mentioned yesterday the fact that in Canada, where a workman injures a piece of granite, it is charged to his account. That can not be done on this side. The union men would not suffer it. They think it is not right. The Canadian employers, however, are able to exact that as well as a greater number of hours of work per day.

It is true that, as far as some parts of Vermont are concerned, we make a superior kind of granite. I think the Bethel white, as it is called, has no counterpart in this country. I am told there is something that approaches it, but nothing that equals it. If any of you will take the trouble to look at the new post-office building you will see that it is almost of the whiteness of marble. Those people who produce this high quality of granite are protected by the product itself, so that they have nothing to fear, as there is no foreign granite that is equal to it.

These men have all through the year, and year after year, all the work they can do; and they have not been so solicitous in regard to the tariff as the men who have been confronting different conditions. But the moment you bring the matter to their attention they take their figures and begin to compare what they have to meet in Canada with what they have to meet here; and I believe they are sincere in saying that the labor cost there is very much less than here.

By the way, I want to correct myself in regard to labor cost. The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has kindly informed me that the labor cost is practically 36 per cent. The Senator from Wisconsin was correct in saying that the total cost of conversion or manufacture is 80 per cent.

Another point I want to bring to the attention of the Senate is that in Canada they work extra hours without extra pay. On this side our granite workers are able to exact one and a quarter pay for every hour worked over the eight-hour period. The men go into the quarries at 7 o'clock in the morning and work until 12; then they commence again at 1 and work until 4. You will often see them in our granite producing towns come from work at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

I want to say further, Mr. President, that this is an industry of which we ought all to be proud. The men engaged in it are thrifty, intelligent, and, many of them, educated men. They are men who live well and dress respectably, and I believe our friends on the other side of the Chamber who have this particular part of the bill in charge will make a great mistake in reducing the tariff from 10 cents a foot to 3 cents a foot on unmanufactured granite and from 50 to 25 per cent on manufactured granite. I do not believe it is right. I think it is an attack upon a leading Vermont industry more severe than has been made upon any other leading industry in the country.

I want now to revert to what has been given as one of the fundamentals of the new tariff, and that is that there should be competitive conditions and strong competition. I am connected in a business way with these granite men, and I know that there is nothing in this country that is more competitive than the granite business. Aside from one or two large concerns in Hardwick and Woodbury, the whole business is in the hands of little men who have come up from the quarries. They finally find themselves able to hire a little shop; they employ 10 or 20 or 30 men, and then they reach out all over the country for business. I presume there are not only hundreds but perhaps thousands of concerns, nearly all small ones, bidding for business in a way that makes it so thoroughly competitive that they have to be pretty thrifty in order to make any more than a fair daily wage.

I wish the Senator from Missouri could say that in his heart of hearts he does not believe this reduction is right, and change it, although I am frank to say that my faith is hardly up to the scriptural "grain of mustard seed" in regard to the matter, and so believing I will not take up the time of the Senate further in discussing this section of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is an interesting discussion, and it opens up some new questions. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and then I shall be through.

In answer to a question propounded by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] as to whether the Senator did not believe this reduction would increase importations, the Senator from Wisconsin said that in his judgment it would not to any appreciable extent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not to any very considerable extent.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it does not, what good is it going to do? It is going to reduce the revenue that our Democratic friends are searching for so assiduously and it is not going to affect the business, so what good will the reduction do unless it does to a very considerable extent increase the importations? And if it does largely increase the importations, of course it does that relative amount of injury to the domestic industry and to the men who are engaged in quarrying and manufacturing the granite.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if I was understood to say, or if I said or left the impression upon the Senate, that I did not think it would be felt in importations, I was misunderstood or did not state myself as I should. I am desirous of seeing the duty so framed that unreasonable prices, when charged in this country, will lead to importations. I think the present prices in this country on many of the necessaries are unreasonable. I am going into that subject more fully at a later period in the consideration of the bill and shall not take the time of the Senate to do so now.

I am obliged, as every Senator here is obliged, to vote upon these various propositions without complete information. I wish we had more. But I am going to follow the best light I can find, and at any moment during the consideration of the bill when it shall be made reasonably plain to me that I have erred in voting for too low a duty or for too high a duty I shall hasten to correct any error or mistake I may thus make. But for the present I am convinced that the duties fixed in this bill are reasonably protective to the particular industry under consideration, and therefore I shall not vote to increase them above the amounts named in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire simply to add that unless the reduction in the duties on granite results in increased importations it will be about as idle a piece of legislation as could be conceived of, because it will reduce the revenue on what little is now imported, and it will do no good whatever so far as fixing prices is concerned. I believe it will largely increase the importations from Scotland, from Quebec, and from Nova Scotia. Believing that, I repeat my regret that there is little hope of securing agreement to the very generous reduction that I suggested in my amendment; and I doubly regret that the Senator from Wisconsin can not see his way clear to vote for that amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, right upon that point, I regretted not being able to furnish the Senate some information with respect to the prices of granite of different dimensions for monumental purposes and the variation of those prices covering a period of years. I can only state my impression, but I am very confident, from having been obliged to ascertain as to the prices of monumental work of modest pattern, that notwithstanding the wonderful development in the methods of production that have taken place in recent years the prices of all monumental work have increased very rapidly in the last 10 or 15 or 20 years.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to understand a little better the position of the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senator referred to labor-saving machinery that is used in this kind of work at the present time. Does he find that there is any difference between this country and foreign countries in that respect, as far as granite is concerned?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not, Mr. President.

Mr. WORKS. Then I presume that has nothing to do with the question of the rates to be fixed as between the two countries.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can not agree at all with that statement of the question. That is, I think the element of protection which the labor of this country has heretofore required is reduced as machinery takes the place of men in production.

Mr. WORKS. Then it is only a question as to the percentage of actual labor used in the production of the article?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Whatever may be the controlling idea with others, with me the difference in the labor cost will be the principal element that will influence my vote in the matter of duties.

Mr. WORKS. Yes; and in this case, according to the Senator, the labor employed is practically the same in foreign countries and in this country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not say anything of the sort. I say that the same kind of machinery is operated in the Scotch quarries that is operated in the granite quarries of this country. The operation of that machinery has brought into employment about the same number of men in the quarries, turning out the same quantity of product; but the number of men has been constantly diminishing with the increase in the use of machinery, so that the wage element or labor cost per unit of production cost is a very much less important matter than when wages constituted so much of the entire cost of production.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator has brought another element into this discussion that is quite important from my point of view, and that is the question of the effect of freight rates. Upon an amendment offered by me a few days ago, based partly upon the larger freight rates which our own people were compelled to pay, it was maintained on the floor of the Senate that freight rates ought not to be considered at all in determining what the tariff rate should be. Does the Senator agree with that doctrine?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, that takes us into quite another subject, and a very important one. I think it would be necessary for us to determine whether that freight rate is a reasonable freight rate. Yet I concede that it is a question of very vital importance to an industry remote from market, and in some cases I might give considerable weight to it. I do not want to see our industries destroyed. In view of the fact, however, that we correct our tariffs at such infrequent periods, I should be reluctant to vote for the continuance of duties which, according to the best information we could get, were at the top notch, because the product is at the present time subject to an excessive freight rate. It seems to me that we must take into account the fact that there is constantly going on in this country important work in the direction of a better regulation of our transportation systems. I am hopeful that within a very few years, when we have acquired all the information necessary and when Congress has become as responsive as I hope to see it ultimately, we may reach a time when we can enforce reasonable transportation charges in this country. I hope that time will come within the next three or four years.

Mr. WORKS. I asked the question because the Senator from Wisconsin proposes in this instance, where the freight rate is against the foreign producer, to use that as a reason for not increasing the tariff.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator does not quote me correctly. I know he does not intend to misquote me. I stated the amount of the freight rate, and stated that it was an additional and excessive protection. I think the rate fixed in the bill, without taking into consideration the freight rate from Scotland to New York, is a protective rate upon rough granite.

Mr. WORKS. I so understood the Senator from Wisconsin. I think I did not misunderstand him. It seems to me it is entirely inconsistent that this rule should not work both ways.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me at this point?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I think the competition we have to encounter is not from Scotland; it is right across the line in Canada. There is no end of granite there, and in the nature of the case the transportation will cut but a limited figure. Take it over in Ontario; take it in Winnipeg and Owen Sound in Canada. There is enough granite there to answer every purpose in this country right on our borders; and it is that competition rather than the competition of Scotland that we have to fear, if any at all.

Mr. WORKS. I was referring to it more as a matter of principle than anything else, because it is going to be or may be a very important matter in determining the rate that is to be allowed upon other commodities produced in this country. I merely wanted to get at the exact view of the Senator from Wisconsin upon that subject, because, unless he is ready to admit that the difference in freight rates should be taken into account in determining the rate of the tariff where the disadvantage is with us, it seems to me inconsistent to use it as he has done in this instance.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in the light of this debate it might seem that we have exhausted all the phases of the granite question. But I find in the Tariff Handbook a statement which seems to me somewhat curious, and I should like to put a question about it to the chairman of the committee or whoever may be in charge of this particular branch of the bill.

It is recited in the handbook that the importations in 1912 brought a revenue of $7,499, and that the average unit of value was 41½ cents. The estimate for a 12-month period under the pending bill is for a revenue of $3,000 a year, and the average unit is estimated at 44 cents. So it would seem, under the reduction which is proposed to be made from 10 cents to 3 cents per cubic foot, that the average unit of value will increase from 41½ cents to 44 cents per foot, and the revenues derived therefrom will be considerably reduced—more than one-half. I wish to ask how those figures were arrived at, and how it was discovered that the reduction in the duty will result in an increase of the average unit of value? Can the Senator from Missouri tell me?

Mr. STONE. I did not understand the Senator, Mr. President. The Senator spoke in such a low tone of voice that it did not reach this side. Do I understand him to ask how it happened that the House has reduced the tariff from 50 to 25 per cent, and has reckoned that the duties collected will be decreased about one-half?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; that was not the question I propounded. The question I asked was how it happens, with a reduction of the duty upon this article from 10 cents to 3 cents per foot, that that will result in an increase of the price of the article from 41½ cents per foot to 44 cents per foot?

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I do not know that I am able to tell the Senator offhand the way in which the estimate is made; but it is my impression that in estimating the unit value the expert takes the unit of value for several years, and in that way arrives at the average unit of value. The Senator will see that the unit of value for 1912 is 41.5 cents, as he has stated. For 1910 it was 49.8 cents. It is probable, and I think it is true, that in estimating the unit value here the expert took the three preceding years, and got the average value from that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That would hardly be correct, because in 1905 the value was 35.8 cents.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not mean to say that the expert took 1905; I said "the three preceding years." In this bill there are given the figures for 1912 and 1910, but not the figures for 1911. I think he has taken the three preceding years as being probably the best index of values.

I wish the Senator to understand that I am not stating that with certainty, but I am under that impression. I will try to ascertain how that is, and enlighten the Senator a little bit later; but I think that is the method that has been pursued in making the estimate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The fact still remains that the unit of value in 1912, which consisted of 12 months, being the usual number, was 41.5 per cubic foot.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For the next year it is estimated that it will be lifted to 44 cents per cubic foot as a result of decreasing the duty more than one-half.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will also see that the unit of value for 1910 was 49.8. So if you take those two years, 49.8 for 1910 and 41.5 for 1912, and add them together you would have an average of about 44 cents.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that value per unit is the foreign price. Am I not correct in that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand that.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it is easily explained how it will be advanced. I presume that the committee estimates that the foreign manufacturer, by reason of the reduction of duties and the elimination of American competition, will be enabled to advance the price. It is easy of explanation.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think that ever entered the head of anybody except the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Whatever may be the explanation of it, it seems to me rather absurd for us to reduce a duty upon an article if the result of the reduction is simply going to be to increase the price of the article on which we reduce the duty. I understand the principal object of the bill, as announced by the Democratic majority, is to produce revenue and also to decrease prices. Now, if it has exactly the opposite effect from what its proponents announce and desire, it does not seem to me that there is a great deal of sense in reducing the duty.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator overlooks the fact that if there is a greater importation from abroad it will act as a regulator of prices in this country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I imagine the Senator or whoever was responsible for the estimates must have known what he was about. It is estimated that the quantity will be increased only about one-fourth, namely, from substantially 75,000 to 100,000 cubic feet. That will result in a decrease of duties of considerably more than one-half, namely, from the present amount of $7,499 to $3,000 per annum.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is talking about the reduction of the unmanufactured. It is estimated that as a result of that reduction there will be an increase in importations from $31,000 to $44,000. Of course we all know, as has been stated here repeatedly and as it was stated in the House, that these estimates are not to be accepted as importing absolute verity. They are simply the result of a calculation. But the Senator will see that of dressed granite the importations last year were $145,000, and it is estimated that they will be increased to $200,000 as the result of the reduction.

There may be but little change; there probably would not be much change in the foreign price of the product as a result of our tariff legislation. That is not the question. The question is, What effect will be produced upon the domestic price by an increase of importations? What will be the difference upon the domestic price between a prohibitive duty upon importations and a duty which is competitive and will allow the foreign product to come in when the domestic product is maintained at too high a level?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that under the estimate of the committee the duty to be received under the bill before us will be $50,000, as against $72,905 in 1912. In other words, the bill is not a success as a revenue producer. Its only success, as far as I can see, will be in throwing out of employment some of our Vermont labor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is quite in harmony with the other sections. The policy of it seems to be to decrease the revenue and increase the price of the article.

Mr. PAGE. This matter of the average unit is very unreliable for consideration anyway. It depends very largely on where the granite comes from. There is a great deal of granite in this country, like the "Bethel white," probably worth a dollar a cubic foot. On the other hand, the ordinary cheap gray granite is probably worth in the vicinity of 50 cents a cubic foot. The foreign price as given here is 41.5, against 48.8 in 1910. That difference is very likely because the granite in 1910 came quite largely from Scotland, while the importations in 1912—I do not state it as a fact, but as a probability—were, I presume, more from Canada, where they have a cheaper kind of granite.

Mr. GALLINGER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAMES (when Mr. BRADLEY's name was called). I wish to make the announcement that my colleague [Mr. BRADLEY] is unavoidably absent and is paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SHEPPARD (when Mr. CULBERSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote "yea."

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. O'GORMAN's name was called). I wish to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and his pair by transfer with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BACON (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] is necessarily absent from the Chamber this afternoon. He is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I observe that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] is not present. I am paired with that Senator and on that account I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KERN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEA. I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent on account of sickness in his family and that he is paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and also that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Brady	Cummins	Nelson	Sherman
Brandegee	Dillingham	Oliver	Smoot
Bristow	Gallinger	Page	Sutherland
Burton	Jones	Penrose	Works
Clark, Wyo.	McLean	Perkins

NAYS—44.

Ashurst	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Kenyon	Reed	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kern	Robinson	Stone
Chilton	La Follette	Saulsbury	Swanson

Culberson	McCumber	Smith, Ga.

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had intended to offer another amendment, which I think I will offer in a modified form. I am a little curious, but will not pursue it to any extent, to understand how it happens that an amendment that I offered fixing a duty of 40 per cent got a good many more votes than a duty fixing 35 per cent, but I presume we are drifting to free trade day by day, and very soon we will be ready to vote to put everything on the free list.

I had intended to offer an amendment fixing the rate at 30 per cent, but I presume I would not get any vote but my own if I should do that. So I shall desist.

But I do want to call attention to one matter in this item that is so palpably unfair that I will risk a viva voce vote in the hope that a few Senators may be willing to raise their voices when they would not record their votes in favor of it.

On unmanufactured granite, Mr. President, the Wilson tariff law—which we allude to sometimes as a free-trade measure—granted a duty of 21.28 per cent. The Dingley tariff law raised it to 35.34 per cent. The Payne law kept it at 20.41. It is proposed now to reduce it to 6.82; in other words, to reduce the tariff from 10 cents to 3 cents per cubic foot on unmanufactured granite.

There may be some reason for it, some occult reason that is not capable of being understood, and probably any attempted explanation would only increase the uncertainty and darkness of the subject. So I am not going to provoke discussion, but I am going to move, Mr. President, that the numeral "3" be stricken out and "5" inserted, reducing the present duty 50 per cent, and I do hope that Senators will in a viva voce vote see the justness and fairness of that proposition and amend the bill to that extent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 2, before the word "cents," strike out "3" and in lieu thereof insert "5," so that it will read:

Unmanufactured, or not dressed, hewn, or polished, 5 cents per cubic foot.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STONE. Paragraph 102 was passed over at the request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I would be glad to have it disposed of now.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to know from the Senator who has the schedule in charge why it is necessary to have a duty of $1.50 a ton on grindstones. I find that a very small quantity is being imported. In 1912 there were only 6,335 tons. From the amount of the importations, the figures would indicate that the tariff is now prohibitive.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the fact is, as stated by the Senator, that, I think, something like $900,000 of value of this commodity represented the production in this country as against a very small importation—about one hundred and twenty thousand and odd dollars of importation.

Mr. GRONNA. That is what I say, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from North Dakota is right as to that statement. The duty of $1.75 carried in the present law was reduced by the other House to $1.50. Whether that reduction would result in larger importations, and how much greater importations, of course is probematical. The reduction, I will say, manifestly is not very large. Does the Senator from North Dakota desire that the rate shall go still lower?

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to see grindstones on the free list. They are one of the articles used mainly by the farmers. The farmer's wheat and other products are put on the free list, so I do not see why he should be taxed on his grindstone. It is true you have reduced the duty by eighty-eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent.

Mr. STONE. The Senator makes an appeal to me that rather touches me; I will not say it is wholly convincing. However, I do not know but he may be nearer right than wrong. It may be that there ought to be a greater reduction on this article.

Mr. GRONNA. I will wait to hear the Senator from Missouri give some reason why there should be a duty of $1.50 on grindstones. Under the present law the duty of $1.75 per ton must be prohibitive, for there have been no importations of any considerable amount.

Mr. STONE. They have not been very large.

Mr. GRONNA. The duty assessed on the farmers I can not figure out from the amount of importations, but the amount the farmer will be taxed upon the quantity imported is insignificant, only about $7,500; but multiply that by 9, and it amounts to quite a considerable sum. I will let the item go by, because I do not care to delay the passage of this bill; but on lime, which is a product which is mainly used by the farmer—and lime is the poor man's cement—you tax him $7,500,000 a year. Is that to compensate him for putting his agricultural products on the free list?

Mr. STONE. We will go back to lime in a few moments. I suggest that we might dispose of grindstones at present.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. STONE. What does the Senator from North Dakota wish with reference to it?

Mr. GRONNA. I wish grindstones to be put on the free list. They are a necessity, viewing the matter from the farmers' standpoint. The smallest farm in the country could not get along without a grindstone.

Mr. STONE. It might be well to put grindstones on the free list or to reduce the duty on them; I do not know. If the Senator wishes to have that paragraph passed over, I have no objection, and the committee will consider it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] or the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] kindly inform some of us who are in an inquiring frame of mind this afternoon just what effect this will have upon the American manufacturers? It would be interesting for us to know. Is it desirable that the farmer should get a grindstone at a very cheap rate and put out of business the manufacturers of grindstones in this country?

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what we pretty nearly did for another industry a moment ago.

Mr. GRONNA. I admit, Mr. President, that I voted for it.

Mr. STONE. It is a very small matter one way or the other in the amount involved either in the manufacture or in revenue. If the Senator from North Dakota is insistent upon passing over the paragraph still further, I have no objection.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have it passed over; but before I take my seat, Mr. President, I wish to state, in reply to what has just been said by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that it was simply for the purpose of giving the farmer cheap tombstones that I voted for the paragraph as it is found in the pending bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if I could select the victims I might agree with the Senator from North Dakota. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the paragraph be passed over.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. I presume the Senator from North Dakota is interested in the small grindstones which are usually used upon farms for sharpening agricultural implements. The same situation arises with reference to this item as would arise with reference to many others. I presume the consumption of such grindstones would be affected very slightly by anything that was done with the rate as proposed to be levied here. The grindstones that are referred to here are very large stones, 20, 30, and 40 feet in diameter. Those are the stones that I understand are largely imported into this country. They are used in file grinding, in saw grinding, and in industries of that kind. It is doubtful upon the particular grindstones in which the Senator from North Dakota is interested if there would be any reduction as a result of placing grindstones generally upon the free list, and we would lose the eleven or twelve thousand dollars of revenue on the large grindstones which are annually imported into this country for file makers and saw makers.

Mr. JAMES. But I will suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that the Senator from North Dakota made, to my mind, a right good Democratic argument. He said that while the amount of revenue collected would be $11,000, yet the farmers of the country would have to pay nine times that much upon the theory that the production of this country was nine times as much as the importations, and that the manufacturers here add the amount of the tariff to the cost price to the consumer, which strikes me with considerable force.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not want to interject a political discussion.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from North Dakota asks to have the paragraph passed over, and of course we will have it passed.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I am against throwing away this revenue, and I wanted to state my position. A great many of these small grindstones are made out of the large grindstones that are worn down. There is a very large file factory in my State.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New Jersey does not claim that the importations of grindstones are of small grindstones?

Mr. HUGHES. No; of large grindstones. That is what I say. In the effort to give the farmers these small, insignificant grindstones free we are throwing away the revenue which we should collect on the great big grindstones which are used by the file and saw manufacturers of the country, out of which the little grindstones are finally made when the big ones are worn out. I am opposed to throwing away this $11,000 worth of revenue, and I wanted to state my position.

Mr. STONE. Well, Mr. President, the request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is that the paragraph go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be passed over at the request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to take up and see if we can dispose of paragraph 75, relating to lime, which was passed over at the request of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. He has stated that he has no objection to taking up the paragraph now.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to paragraph 75.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, paragraph 75, line 6, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "lime" and insert "17½ per cent ad valorem, including the value of the barrel or package: Provided, That if any adjoining country shall levy and collect duties on importations of lime from the United States under a rate less than 17½ per cent ad valorem the President shall from time to time fix the rate on importations of lime from such country at the rate charged by such country."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not understand just why the rate was fixed in the bill as it is. It could not be for the purpose of raising revenue, because the estimate is that it will produce less revenue than is produced under the existing law. It can not be intended as a protective duty, because it is very materially reduced below the present law. The only effect of it that I can see is to discriminate against our own lime manufacturers in favor of the lime manufacturers of Canada. I am satisfied the committee did not intend any such discrimination; that it was not done purposely; but it seems to me that will be the inevitable result and the only effect of this reduction.

The tariff under the present law is 5 cents a hundred pounds, including the barrel or package in which the lime is imported. That is the same as the duty imposed by the Wilson law. According to the handbook, reduced to an ad valorem equivalent, the duty under the Wilson law is 28½ per cent; in 1905, under the Dingley law, it was equivalent to an ad valorem of 26.28 per cent; in 1910, under the Payne law, according to the handbook, it was equivalent to an ad valorem of 11.23 per cent; and in 1912 to 9.17 per cent.

I do not understand just how these figures have been obtained. In the handbook the average unit of value in 1896 is given at 17 cents and a fraction a hundred pounds; then in 1905 the unit value is given at 19 cents a hundred pounds. In 1910 the unit value is given at 44 cents and a fraction per hundred pounds, or more than double what it was in 1905; and in 1912 the unit value is given at 54½ cents per hundred pounds, or nearly three times what it was in 1905.

In the statement with reference to the production in this country the handbook gives the total production as 3,467,523 tons, valued at $13,763,604. If you will figure it out on the basis of a unit of 100 pounds, that will give a little less than 20 cents, or practically the same as the unit value for 1896 and 1905, or one-half of the unit value given here upon which the ad valorem duty is computed.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. So far as unit value is concerned, that is determined by the value of the product per unit as it comes into the customhouse from year to year. That often materially varies from year to year. The variation may be due to one cause or another, according to the product. It may be due, for example, to a cornering of the product by manipulators, or it may be due to shortage of the product in foreign countries and a consequent enhancement of the value there. But the unit value, as the Senator knows, of course, is computed on the value at the place from which the importations come.

Mr. JONES. They would not import lime from a country where it is valued at 44 cents a hundred pounds into a country where they can only get less than 20 cents per hundred pounds for it.

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator that for the year 1912, to which the Senator refers, we imported 99,853 units of 100 pounds.

Mr. JONES. Nineteen hundred and ten is really the year to which I am referring now.

Mr. STONE. One hundred pounds is the unit. We imported 99,853 of these units that year, and the value was $54,459. It is a simple process of division to ascertain the unit value on that year's importations.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; that is true, but it seems to me that the valuation there is wrong. I do not see where they get that valuation, when the value of the production in this country is only 20 cents a hundred pounds.

Mr. STONE. I can not go beyond the appraisements upon which the duties were paid on the importations.

Mr. JONES. I am merely calling attention to the situation with reference to the figures. I do not know, however, that the point is very material with reference to the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. STONE. I will call the attention of the Senator to the further fact that of lime we imported in 1912 $54,459 in value, and exported $138,958 worth, or more than twice as much.

Mr. JAMES. Two and a half times as much.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Kentucky says two and a half times as much.

Mr. JONES. I make no question as to that.

Mr. STONE. In addition to that, the uses of lime are numerous. Out of a total production of over $13,000,000 worth in this country, we imported practically nothing; in other words, wherever we imported $1 worth we made over $254 worth.

Mr. JONES. I understand that. I do not think the Senator catches the point to which I was calling attention.

Mr. STONE. Now, $500,000 worth of this kind of lime was used for fertilizing purposes. It is used for chemical purposes; it is used for building purposes. The uses are very great.

Mr. JONES. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. STONE. I can see no logical reason why this practically prohibitive duty should not be reduced, and I do not think the reduction is greater than it should be.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the point to which I was calling the attention of the committee is that while the unit of value of the imports is given as 44 cents in 1910, according to the other figures the value per unit in this country was only 20 cents, or less than 20 cents, substantially the same as was shown for the other years, from 1896 to 1905 there being a gradual increase. That is, I could not understand why in 1910 the unit of value was more than twice what it was in 1905, when the home value was practically the same as it was in 1905.

I do not know that that is very material with reference to the point I want to make, however, in regard to the duty. It is probably one of the discrepancies in the handbook.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to say to the Senator that I assume there are practically no importations into this country, except probably in that year of high-priced lime. There are a great many of what we might call freak importations. We find that to be the case all through the bill. There are cases where there are a few importations, and when you begin to investigate the matter it is found that it is some special quality that is not produced in this country, or, at least, not produced in the section of the country where it is imported.

Mr. JONES. That is a new characteristic.

Mr. SIMMONS. As a matter of fact, there is hardly anything that varies so much in price in this country as lime. In my section of the country we produce lime that sells for from $3.75 to $4.50 a ton. We buy from other sections of the country a lime for which we pay from $9 to $11 a ton. There is a vast difference in the quality of lime, and the domestic price is low. I believe 20 cents is about what the domestic price in 1910 figures out. It is very low, because they took all the limes, those of low quality and those of high quality, and averaged them; and of course the low quality brings down the price of the high quality. I assume that in that year the importations were of the higher grade of lime.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the main point I want to present with reference to this proposition is simply this: The rate on lime going from this country into Canada is 17½ per cent on the lime and on the package. In other words, we can not put our lime into that territory except by paying a duty of 17½ per cent. You are going to permit them to put their lime into this country at only 5 per cent, which can have no other result than to favor the Canadian manufacturer and producer of lime.

I want to discuss this matter also from the standpoint of the peculiar conditions out in our section of the country. We have some lime manufacturing plants in our State, right along the border. There are also large deposits of lime in British Columbia. They have a great deal of Chinese labor over there that is paid about $1.75 per day, while the labor in this country is paid $2.87 per day, on an average, for the same kind of work. So they have a decided advantage in that respect.

Then there is a difference in the price of wood, which is largely used in the manufacture of lime. The Canadian purchases his wood for from $1.40 to $1.65 a cord.

In this country the manufacturers of lime have to pay from $2.50 to $3.25 per cord for their wood. So in that respect they have a decided advantage. Why give them a further advantage by a reduction of the tariff? You will not get any more revenue. According to your own estimates, you will get less than you do under the present rate. According to your own estimate of the ad valorem rate, it is now only nine and seventeen one-hundredths per cent. That certainly is not high—simply a revenue duty. Why reduce it, then, when you do nothing more than simply give the advantage to the Canadian manufacturer?

It seems to me that while this legislation ought to be for the benefit of the American consumer and the American people, it ought not to be framed in such a way—I do not say with the purpose, but in such a way—as actually to discriminate against our own people and in favor of the people of Canada. This matter was argued very strongly the other day by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] with reference to gypsum rock, and I am not going to repeat the arguments he then presented. They apply to this matter even more strongly than they did in that instance.

The amendment I have proposed simply puts us upon an equality with Canada. It simply proposes that we shall put an ad valorem duty of 17½ per cent upon the lime and the package, with a proviso that if any country adjoining ours reduces its rate below 17½ per cent we can reduce our rate to the same figure. It puts us upon an equality so far as the rate is concerned.

In letters that I have from our people they say that all they ask is that we shall place them upon an equality so that they can compete with the Canadian on an equal rate of duty. They do not ask anything else, although labor is higher in this country than it is in Canada, and although wood and material of that kind are higher in this country than in Canada.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. The statement that labor is higher in this country than in Canada is not borne out by the report of the investigating committee, of which Mr. MANN was the chairman, when they were making an investigation on regard to pulp and timber. They reported that in the lumber manufacturing industry the wages were higher, if anything, in Canada than in the United States.

Mr. JONES. Of course, the Senator knows there was a great difference of opinion and also a great difference in the facts in reference to the different localities. I am not talking about the general condition of labor in Canada. I am talking about the labor in the lime mills bordering on the State of Washington. When I talk about that, I talk about a matter that I know something about. I know that they do employ a great deal of Chinese labor in Canada and that they do not employ Chinese labor in our country, and that the Chinese labor there gets less wages than the American labor in this country.

Mr. JAMES. I suppose the Senator might find certain parts of the United States where they pay a higher wage in one State for the same kind of labor than they pay in another part.

Mr. JONES. Oh, certainly.

Mr. JAMES. I take it that Canada does not differ much from our own country in that respect.

Mr. JONES. But you will find it to be true that wherever Chinese labor is employed it is cheaper than American labor.

Mr. JAMES. What really good reason can the Senator give the Senate for reducing the tariff duty on an article where our exports are two and a half times as great as our imports? In other words, what fear of importations need American manufacturers have when they now export two and a half times as much as is imported here? When the importer has to stand the duty of 5 per cent, which we leave in the bill, what fear of importations need there be when we are now going into his own market and paying the freight rate in order to get there?

Mr. JONES. I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from North Carolina suggested one answer to that question, and that is that the tariff does not at all affect the matter in the interior, but it does affect it along the border line. You might take off the tariff and it would not affect it in North Carolina or in the interior. You might raise it 100 per cent and it would not affect it one way or the other, but it does affect it along the border. That is the condition I have in mind, and that is the condition that I think we ought to try to meet, if it does not injuriously affect the other sections of the country. I would not ask a duty be placed upon an article that my State produces simply for local benefit if it was an injury to all other parts of the country. I would not do that at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. What the Senator from Washington is saying appeals to me quite strongly, but it seems to me his amendment goes too far. The amendment, as I heard it read, increases the duty to 17½ per cent, does it not?

Mr. JONES. It does.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is only trying to equalize conditions along the border, would he not accomplish that better by leaving the duty as it is, and adding the other part of the amendment? That would make the duty against Canada the same as Canada imposes against us.

Mr. JONES. That is what my amendment does.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator's amendment, as I understand, goes further, and under it lime imported from any other country would have to pay 17½ per cent.

Mr. JONES. No; it says "adjoining countries."

Mr. NORRIS. It applies only to adjoining countries?

Mr. JONES. It applies only to adjoining countries.

Mr. NORRIS. It struck me that the Senator's amendment ought to contain only the reciprocal clause——

Mr. JONES. That is what is intended.

Mr. NORRIS. And let the duty remain as it is in the bill.

Mr. JONES. Of course if the duty is left as it is in the bill, it allows the discrimination to continue. I will say frankly that I have in mind the situation in Canada. They charge us 17½ per cent duty on lime and the package. That is what I put in my amendment, with a proviso that if they reduce their tariff the President is authorized to fix our tariff at the amount they fix. If they put lime on the free list, he is authorized to put it on the free list.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the Senator's amendment were adopted, and lime were imported from some country that was not an adjoining country?

Mr. JONES. My amendment expressly says "adjoining country."

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator's amendment strikes out "lime."

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And, as I remember, it strikes out everything after "lime."

Mr. JONES. It does. I suppose that would put lime from other countries into the basket clause, if there is a basket clause. I had not thought about that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator think that if his amendment were to be confined to adjoining countries we would come in conflict with the treaties we have with all the other countries of the world?

Mr. JONES. I hardly think so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think very clearly we would. I want to suggest to the Senator that I rather think there is no reason why this product should not be on the free list, so far as I can see. The truth is, as the Senator states, that it is largely a border proposition. There will be, at some point of the border on our side, the limestone out of which this product is made. There will be no limestone on the other side of the international line. At another point there will be one of these deposits on the other side of the line, and none on our side. I take it that importations from Canada are made only where there is a deposit on the other side that is nearer to a community on this side than any domestic deposit. In that case, lime would be imported into this country. We imported from Canada last year only $34,000 worth of this material. The balance of the imports came from elsewhere. Only $34,000 worth came from Canada.

Mr. JONES. That is more than half of the total imports, according to your figures.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; 20 per cent came from Germany. If there is a deposit across the line on the Canadian side near some American community, but there is no American deposit for a considerable distance, it is very much to the advantage of the Americans to buy from the Canadians in that case, on account of the freights. It is well known that this is not only a bulky product, but it is a dangerous product; and the danger of transportation, growing out of the combustibility of the product, adds very much to the freight transportation charge. By reducing the duty, or putting the material on the free list, we save American communities the remission of the duty or the reduction of the duty, as the case may be.

Mr. JONES. I suppose there is not a State in the Union that does not produce lime. I do not know of one, although there may be some particular locality along the border. But you do not provide any way by which we can get into the Canadian locality, where they have no lime.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is hardly a State in the Union where they do not produce lime of some kind; but they do not produce all kinds of lime.

Mr. JONES. I am not splitting hairs on this matter at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. In the Senator's State the price of lime is somewhere near $8 a ton. In my State the price is only about $4 a ton. You produce one quality in your State and we produce another quality in our State. While your State may produce one quality of lime, it may not produce another quality that your people desire and must have. In that event it will be better to buy it from Canada than to have it shipped from some far-distant point in this country.

Mr. JONES. We produce lime in our State at $2 a ton, so that the figure of $8 a ton does not apply to us at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the average.

Mr. JONES. I am simply discussing the general condition there. I should like to see some method by which we could put our people, in a general way, on an equality with the people of Canada.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think there is some force in the Senator's claim; but it seems to me it would be better to pass this item now, and make a draft of the amendment which would confine it to the situation described by the Senator, and remove from it any question of its having a general application.

Mr. JONES. I should be perfectly willing to let it go in that way. An amendment was offered the other day using very much this language, and no question of that kind was raised. It had not occurred to me.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me. I think if he will take the amendment which was offered the other day by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] he will find that it does not follow the course that the Senator from Washington is now pursuing. As I remember, however, if he will take the latter part of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, and offer it as an amendment at the end of this line of the bill, he will then do all he wants to do, and reach the situation to which I have called the Senator's attention.

Mr. JONES. Would that meet the 17½ per cent duty imposed by Canada?

Mr. NORRIS. It would mean that any country imposing against us a duty greater than that levied in the bill would meet the same kind of a duty when it came to export lime into this country. I think it would fully meet the situation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Nebraska is in error about that. The amendment that I offered applied only to the duties between adjoining countries. It did provide that Canada could not come in here on any better terms than Canada permitted us to go there. That was the substance of the amendment.

I agree with the Senator from Nebraska, however, that it would be better if there were no attempt to change the duty provided in this bill. If the Senator provides that the duty shall in no event be less than Canada charges us, he will accomplish his entire purpose.

Mr. JONES. Oh, certainly. I can not see how that really makes any difference, however, because the rate is 17½ per cent now. In other words, the provision of the Senator from Iowa would raise the rate.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Iowa tell me on what day he offered his amendment so that I may look it up in the RECORD?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have forgotten the day, Mr. President. I do not remember.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary has it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the Secretary may read it.

The SECRETARY. The amendment was offered on July 28, and appears in the RECORD at page 3131, as follows:

Provided, That the duties levied and collected upon the commodities covered by this paragraph shall in no event be less than the duties levied and collected by any adjoining country upon the importation of said commodities into such adjoining country from the United States.

Mr. JONES. I think that will cover the situation. The only difference is I propose to put into the bill exactly the rate Canada charges without raising it in an indirect way.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator must see, it seems to me, that putting that rate in as applied to other countries——

Mr. JONES. It applies only to adjoining countries.

Mr. NORRIS. He strikes out of the bill, however, the duty provided; and it would, at least, throw lime into the basket clause.

Mr. JONES. That might be true.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator from Washington is satisfied to have his amendment read by the Secretary substituted for the one he has offered, let us have a vote on that.

Mr. JONES. I would be satisfied to have that done, but there is some further argument that I want to present.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is not through?

Mr. JONES. I am not through. I will state that I suppose I would have been through long before this time but for the interruptions. I will ask the Secretary, if he can do so, to fix up the amendment and let it be read as a substitute direct.

Now, here is the situation in our State. The present tariff is used to injure our industry in a way I know no man will approve of and no man will desire to encourage if it can be avoided. I have here a letter from a very responsible man in our State with reference to the competition of the Canadian people in our own market, and I would like the attention of Senators to his statement:

This unequal contest has encouraged British Columbia real estate schemers to open up lime properties in a more or less primitive way, and then, while lying behind their 17½ per cent wall of protection, attack the American markets with the avowed purpose of forcing American manufacturers to either subsidize them to remain out of our markets or to buy them out entirely, in order to maintain a living price for the product from their own kilns in their markets.

Now, notice what the writer of this letter says here:

Just now this exact condition is prevailing. A certain manufacturer on the British Columbia side is continually shipping small quantities of lime into our markets, both to Puget Sound and the Hawaiian Islands, cutting the prices down to an unprofitable basis, and openly and defiantly saying to us "There is just one remedy for you—pay us a sufficient subsidy or buy our plant at our figure as the price of peace in your own markets."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will yield to me I would be glad personally to have a vote on this amendment if we could reach it in the near future, but I think it is not probable. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if he thinks we have not put in a pretty good day's work?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think our arrangement was that we should adjourn at 6 o'clock. I wish to say before that is done, however——

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator from Washington is about through, I should like to have a vote on his amendment.

Mr. JONES. It would take considerable time, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has an amendment also to offer to this same paragraph. So I suggest that it will probably take 15 or 20 minutes or it may be half an hour.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee whether he would not be willing to have the metal schedule go over until Monday on account of the absence of several Senators.

Mr. BURTON. I thought it was to go over until Tuesday.

Mr. PENROSE. Monday, I think, was the understanding.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am perfectly willing to let it go over until Monday. We have conferred about it. The Senator from Pennsylvania said that he and his colleague and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would be absent to-morrow. They are interested in the metal schedule, and we were perfectly willing, after conferring with the subcommittee, to let it go over until Monday.

Mr. BURTON. I do not wish to insist at all for my personal convenience, but I shall be absent on Monday, and I understood the postponement was to be until Tuesday.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does that mean that the sugar schedule will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. SIMMONS. That would mean that Schedule D would be taken up, and if that was finished we would get, then, to the sugar schedule. D is the wood schedule.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should object to taking up the sugar schedule to-morrow, because——

Mr. PENROSE. The wood schedule could come up. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has indicated his intention of addressing the Senate to-morrow, and we will have a full day, I have no doubt.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suppose if we get through with Schedule D we could go to some other schedule, if the Senator from Kansas was not ready to take up the sugar schedule. I do not know about postponing the metal schedule until Tuesday, unless the Senator from Ohio has some special reason.

Mr. BURTON. I do not really wish to have it postponed to that time unless it is entirely in accordance with the convenience of Members of the Senate. However, it was my understanding that the consideration of that schedule would be postponed until Tuesday morning.

Mr. PENROSE. That was a misunderstanding. My understanding was Monday.

Mr. SIMMONS. The understanding was that it would be postponed until Monday.

Mr. BURTON. I have an amendment to propose to this paragraph relating to lime, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD. It was submitted on the 24th of April.

The amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

On page 18, at the end of line 11, change the period at the end of the line to a semicolon and add the words: "Provided, That lime shall be subject to a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem when imported directly or indirectly from a country, dependency, or other subdivision of government which imposes a duty on lime imported from the United States of 10 per cent or more ad valorem."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was unanimous consent given that the metal schedule should go over until Monday?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not know that it required unanimous consent. The committee indicated its purpose to let it go over until Monday.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The committee will ask to have it passed over until Monday?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and take up another schedule.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. SIMMONS. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2433) providing for the free importation of articles intended for foreign buildings and exhibits at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and for the protection of foreign exhibitors.

I should like to have unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, because it has been very much delayed. Of course, I will not insist upon it if there is any objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. It proposes to let the articles come in free?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. At the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] I will simply report the bill, and I will ask unanimous consent to take it up to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, August 2, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 1, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Take us, O God our heavenly Father, into the inner sanctuary, the holy of holies, that we may renew our faith and confidence; be strengthened, purified, ennobled by the contact, and lifted above the petty, the sordid self-seeking ambitions, destructive to the larger life and possibilities which wait on the faithful; that we may satisfy the longings of our better self, which makes for righteousness in the soul, and speeds it on to victory under the divine leadership of the Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, July 29, 1913, was read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Journal will be approved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Journal recites that the message of the President was ordered printed, "with the accompanying documents."

The SPEAKER. The words "with the accompanying documents" should be stricken out, because the Chair announced——

Mr. MANN. Was not that the message concerning the Fine Arts Commission report on the Panama Canal?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. As I understood, the Speaker stated that the accompanying documents were sent to the Senate. The Senate ordered the message printed without the accompanying documents. I think myself it would be well, if the House could get hold of the accompanying documents, to have them printed, perhaps. I do not know whether we can get them or not.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected in that respect, because the Chair announced that there was a note tacked onto the message stating that the documents had been sent to the Senate.

Now, does the gentleman from Illinois ask that the documents be printed?

Mr. MANN. If we have not possession of the documents, I do not know that that would do any good.

The SPEAKER. I suppose that is correct, too, although we are entitled to a copy of the documents if we want them. If there be no objection, the Journal as corrected will stand approved.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TUESDAY NEXT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDRESS OF JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a speech of Hon. John Skelton Williams, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, before the annual convention of the Maryland Bankers' Association, at Blue Mountain, Md., June 26, 1913, on the question of finance and currency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by Hon. John Skelton Williams, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, on the subject of finance and currency. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address referred to is as follows:

AROUSED THOUGHT, ADVANCING NEEDS, AND OUR FINANCIAL EMANCIPATION.

[Address of John Skelton Williams, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, before the annual convention of the Maryland Bankers' Association, at Blue Mountain, Md., June 26, 1913.]

"Mr. President, Gov. Goldsborough, and gentlemen of the Maryland Bankers' Association, I feel that you have conferred upon me not only an honor but a privilege by asking me to address you, and at this place and this time. My business and personal relations with many of you have been pleasant, with some of you intimate, so that I feel I am talking face to face with friends, associates, and neighbors, men whose interests I have shared and understand, for practically all my active life until now has been in banking. A large part of my dealings have been in Baltimore and Maryland, and I know your needs and feelings, your views and experiences.

"This place is especially appropriate for some frank, face to face, man to man, banker to banker discussion of the relations between the banks and financial and commercial interests of the country, and the country itself—the Government and the people—and of the principles and purposes that should guide and govern that relationship. We are near Gettysburg, most famous of the battle fields of a great war, ground hallowed and consecrated by the blood and gladly yielded lives of brave men on both sides, who fought and died on the point of principle and for pure love of country and cause. On that ground, too, in honor of the soldiers who had volunteered to die, a great man, destined soon to die, delivered to the world a deathless message and invoked all his countrymen to unite in the solemn vow that government of the people, by the people, and for the people should not perish from the earth.

"It is gratifying to be allowed to speak to you at this time, because it is a time of consideration of questions vital to all of us, and when some, whose interests or inclinations bind them to pessimism, are trying to sow seeds of doubt. Having gone directly from participation in your interests and activities to take a small part in that side of a new national administration which is most closely identified with you and your affairs, I believe I can bring you from my observation and knowledge of the motives and methods of this administration a message of cheer and assurance.

"The Democratic Party has not come to the financial and industrial interests of our land as the Goths and Huns and Vandals descended upon Rome. It has not come to attempt to apply any theories of pedantry or to undertake unconsidered experiments. President Wilson has been called 'the schoolmaster' in derision; but the name, like some others in history, given hastily or with intent to injure, has already become one of honor and affection. This great schoolmaster, with a class of a hundred million free people and a schoolroom consisting of a continent, an archipelago, some great islands and some small, in two oceans, besides being a statesman, also is a student, profound, painstaking, laborious, intent on getting down to the ultimate roots and causes of things and grasping the philosophy of them.

"I am an amateur in politics and in affairs of government, but a business man, forced to learn to study men keenly and to analyze their work and methods and motives. I do not know quite how far I am justified in recording here my opinions of my superior officers, formed after three months of association with them. Yet it may be proper to say that from internal and intimate view of the administration, I am impressed deeply with the conviction that all its chiefs and potent factors are intent on the purpose expressed by Mr. Lincoln, near this place, that we shall have a government of, for, and by the people, and that it shall endure. It will not endure unless the people prosper. It can not be destroyed by internal violence, by assaults from without or by any other power but that of corruption within itself, eating its vitals, sapping its strength, destroying its life. The one sure way to establish it securely, to be certain of its expanding prosperity and greatness, and of its continuing health is to see that its foundations are in honesty; that all its policies are clean; that the management of its affairs is guided by correct and high principles of fair and open dealing. I most earnestly believe the attainment of these results to be the single and united purpose of this administration.

"Honesty, fairness, stability, consistency are essential, most especially in the department of the Government with which I have the honor to be connected, and in its necessarily intimate relations with banking and finance, the currency, commerce, and the great industries of the country. I feel justified in saying that these principles will govern whatever currency and banking measures or propositions the administration may suggest or support.

"I am not here to denounce or accuse anybody or to make a political speech or to assail any party. In some of the problems before us perhaps all of us are to blame, more or less, we business and banking men of all parties, as much as anybody. It is no violation of confidence to say that since I have been in the Treasury Department, and so had access behind the scenes, I have learned of some strange and sinister doings in the past, not general, thank God, and not affecting the financial structure as a whole. The men inside the department learn quickly that the vast majority of bankers and business men of America are straigh' and honest and deserve, as I believe they will receive, the careful protection and consideration of the administration, which understands and honors the need and value of their service and function in the great machinery of commerce.

"Yet the corrupt spots are dangerous and demoralizing and spread infection. Speaking for myself, I know they should be removed. Speaking from what I have learned of this administration, I believe they will be removed, and all of us and the entire country and its business will be better for the removal. No house is fit to live in while important timbers are worm-eaten or unsound. No society can be clean or stable while the seeds of moral infection and disease are floating in the atmosphere. Cleanliness and light, honesty and open dealing are the sanitation of our commercial and social life.

"We must and will learn the difference between earning money and getting money. In banking we must draw the broad line between the banker who by sagacity and labor serves his depositors and on fair terms earns proper dividends for his shareholders and the banker who misuses the money of his depositors and betrays the confidence of his stockholders to graft for his own personal enrichment. In other departments of business we must make clear difference between those who seek honest profit by doing public service and supplying products and those who by cunning systems of double bookkeeping and by arbitrary forcing or inflation attempt to create fictitious values and get for themselves actual money in exchange for artificial increase or unjustified and unsustained imaginings or anticipations. The purpose and labor of all of us should be to get all business as nearly as possible to a basis of actual value and service, of fair returns for investment and brains, honestly used, and of trading on reasonable expectations and accurate statement.

"To hasten these conditions and make them possible we need new currency and banking laws. Every thinking business man in the country, every foreign student of our conditions, knows this, and all of us have known it many years. We have been stumbling and feeling our way along endeavoring to work and carry on our affairs permanently with a system evolved in an emergency; to maintain ourselves on a makeshift. But for the mercy of the Almighty, the almost superhuman courage and recuperative powers of our people of all classes, and the majestic strength of our principles of government we would have been destroyed by the continuance in time of peace and vast growth of war measures of finance and currency.

"We have a system which makes our prosperity a danger; the very diligence of the farmer and the fertility of the soil an annual threat and cause of fright. The more abundantly kindly Providence has blest us with great crops, the more alarm we have had at financial centers at the drain on resources required to move them. We have had alternating chills of fear and stagnation and deadly interest rates, fevers of abundant and cheap money, overconfidence, and desperate speculation. We have had at one time of the year gluts of money, heaped at the centers with nobody wanting or employing it; at another time such scarcity that legitimate business was denied the means with which to move and the best collateral went begging. The effect of this has been to increase and harden constantly and steadily the concentration of financial power in a few places and a few hands.

"Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, who died recently, was widely regarded as the king of American finance and the dominant factor in our commercial life. Perhaps it is propinquity to Gettysburg that keeps Mr. Lincoln in my mind. Nobody can be near that field without impressions of that wonderful and beautiful improvised masterpiece of his. Aside from that, he had a way of saying and writing memorable and pithy things in short sentences which everybody could understand. He said—I do not exactly recall the words, but in effect—that God Almighty never made a man good enough to be absolute master of another man.

"So I say that the Almighty never made a mortal man good or strong enough to be master of the destinies, to control the prosperity or adversity, the contentment or misery, of a hundred millions of free and honest people.

"My personal hope is, and I tell it to you frankly, that the present administration will transfer the financial control and direction of this country from any man or group of men, responsible to nobody but themselves, working in secret with their motives and designs guessed at obscurely, to the Government itself—directly responsible to the people, and with all its purposes and plans spread before the people who create it and for whose service it is created and exists. Mr. Morgan's plans and policies were known to himself and his few intimates and were revealed only as he saw fit to allow them to be given by word of mouth or through the newspapers. The innermost policies and purposes of the Government will be spread with 'pitiless publicity' before the people in official documents and in the debates in Congress, for and against, and every business man, banker, and farmer, to the farthest and most remote sections of the country, can know as much of the financial conditions and prospects as Mr. Morgan's intimates and partners knew while Mr. Morgan was the financial king.

"I think I can promise you further that with the currency and banking laws as they are being considered, and as they probably will be enacted, there will be no possibility of political, social, or personal influence. The purpose is that these laws shall work naturally and automatically, as free from outside pressure or individual considerations as any well-set and well-geared machine. They will be made to avoid glut or famine; to supply and make safe honesty, energy, and sagacity, and righteous and legitimate needs; to force crookedness, dishonesty, and folly to surrender and get out of the way before they rob or destroy. I believe we are about to secure a solid basis of currency with which we can face the world and which will make an American currency note as good and as thoroughly trusted and as readily acceptable anywhere on this planet as the gold dollar physically in hand.

"Notwithstanding the mistakes and difficulties of the past, we are now in good condition for the change of system. Providence seems to have prepared for us the circumstances and the psychological moment. The country never has been in better or sounder condition than it is; never has had better assurance of commercial stability than it has to-day. Working with inadequate and dangerous tools, we have arrived at a point where we can remove danger of such collapses as have overtaken us at times. We can provide for the future and for all the development and expansion we know must come. We can devise and install new and fit machinery without the disturbing and distracting influence of fear, with deliberate foresight; for we are on strong foundations.

"Recently a prominent officer of a well-known bank in New York City delivered before an association of bankers an address in which he contended that serious perils may be ahead of us. Copies of this address were scattered widely. Because of the position of this gentleman, the present importance of the subject he discussed, and the gravity of the possibility he suggests, I have studied and analyzed with some care his figures and deductions. My conclusion is that he is wrong and mistaken in nearly every essential point he presents. Permit me to detain you a few minutes to show you why I think he is wrong. It is essential that all of us give careful thought to the situation and try to get to accurate understanding of it, even at the cost of dealing with statistics on a large scale.

"Possibly it is unnecessary for me to undertake the task of contradiction. There is a touch of humor in the fact that I find the gentleman who has sent abroad the pessimistic pamphlet, or prophetic warning, to which I have alluded is controverted squarely and directly by the president of the bank of which he is vice president—two men of ability, looking from the same viewpoint at substantially the same facts and reaching diametrically opposite conclusions, one arriving at a peak, the other at a wall. Let me show you what they say:

"The vice president of the bank last month, speaking of American credit, expressed the fear that during the next year or two we will be unable to hold our stock of gold, the basis of our credit. Although we have a credit balance with Europe of more than $500,000,000 annually, he contends that this is but nominal; that Europe may, and probably will, present a bill which will wipe out our credit balance and demand of us in settlement five hundred million more. This demand against us, the vice president says, consists of interest and dividends on our securities held abroad, of ocean freights on foreign vessels, of incomes of Americans living abroad drawn from here, of travelers' expenses, immigrants' remittances, insurance premiums, and other items. To this time, says the vice president, Europe has preferred generally to invest all this money in our securities rather than call on us to pay it in gold. Now, he argues solemnly, Europe practically has ceased to buy our securities, having other uses for her money, and may exact gold, making an annual drain on our credit base of $500,000,000. So he threatens that our great stock of gold may be ravished from us within four or five years.

"So much for the vice president.

"The president of the same bank, a financial expert, who held several years the office I have the honor to occupy, wrote in a magazine article on 'America's commercial invasion of Europe,' published in 1902, as follows:

"If our foreign trade is to continue to hold the same relation between imports and exports that has been ruling for the last few years; if we are to go on selling Europe, say, six hundred millions a year more than we buy, there will be, then, after liberal reductions for travelers' expenses, ocean freights—an item which the development of American shipping may materially decrease—and immigrant remittances, a balance due us of between three hundred and four hundred millions a year.

"Between the dismal arithmetic of the vice president and the joyous mathematics of the president there is a discrepancy of a matter of eight or nine hundred million dollars. One says Europe will devour our trade balance of five hundred millions and extract from us five hundred millions more, which is ten hundred millions. The other figures that Europe is accumulating a debt to us of from three hundred to four hundred millions a year.

"The president of the vice president's bank added that he had asked 'every finance minister of Europe and the head of every imperial bank' for an answer to this problem and that 'nearly every important financier' there had already reached, after much 'pondering,' the conclusion that the one possible solution, from the European standpoint, was that Americans must enter the European securities market and buy there, exactly reversing conditions, as the only way to collect our trade balances.

"When the president wrote his diagnosis, the American trade balance against Europe was considerably smaller than it is now. This country's excess of merchandise exports over imports for the 10 years preceding 1902 had averaged less than $325,000,000, and for 1902 was $478,000,000. Yet the president of that bank, experienced and able financier, estimated our net credit balance at three hundred to four hundred millions a year, after deducting substantially the same items suggested by the vice president 11 years later. He also stated at that time that there was pretty good reason to believe that there were then but few American securities left in Europe to be returned; that he had in fact inspected the vaults of some of the great banks abroad where securities are kept and had found the sections set apart for American securities owned abroad already practically empty—'only here and there scattered packages.' He also added that 'this was the visible evidence of what an examination of investors' strong boxes would show in all those European countries' which had in years past 'found in America the most profitable field for investment.'

"For the 10 years which have elapsed since then the excess of our exports of merchandise over imports has averaged four hundred and eighty millions annually, or more than our credit balance for the fiscal year 1902, and the excess of export merchandise and silver over imports for the past 12 months has given us a gold credit abroad of about seven hundred millions for the year. If this president's theories were right, and he tells us they were affirmed by the finance ministers and chief financiers of Europe, the European countries must have accumulated an indebtedness to us in these past 10 years of between two and three billion dollars.

"Probably much of this has been absorbed by our own investments in Europe, Canada, Mexico, South America, and other countries, as well as by our purchases and recall to this country of American securities which were once held in Europe. As interest and dividends on these latter have ceased to go abroad and now stay at home, a natural and inevitable conclusion is that our credit balance against the world is growing instead of diminishing and that if it came to a final settlement and balancing we would collect abroad vast sums, in gold, instead of being forced to pay.

"Putting aside the optimistic president and the pessimistic vice president of the same bank—but keeping in mind the fact that the vice president's address, so widely circulated in pamphlet form, demands careful consideration because of its tendency to arouse alarm just at the moment when we need confidence and the girding of our loins to march forward with the enterprise, strength, and purposes of the country—let us look at the actual, plain facts.

"Not only have our credit balances against the rest of the world increased to huge figures—helping, incidentally, to give assurance of peace—but our stock of real, present, solid gold has grown almost beyond comprehension. At the beginning of the year 1896, the total monetary supply of gold in the United States amounted to scarcely $500,000,000. April 4, 1913, the stock of gold in the country was $1,859,000,000, a gain in 17 years of $1,359,000,000, or 272 per cent. The United States has gained in these 17 years in its stock of gold an average of $80,000,000 a year. Great Britain's supply has gained $5,000,000 a year for the same period. Our gain is fifteen times as much as that of the Empire, long rated as the richest on the planet. In this connection, it is well to take note that the world's production of gold, since the beginning of 1900, 13 years ago, has been one-half the production of the 400 preceding years, and the actual production of gold for the current year is likely to exceed that of any year in the world's previous history. Last week the Bank of Germany reported its gold holdings at the highest figure ever attained. The latest reports, brought to about the 1st of this month, show that the great banks of France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden, Norway, Italy, and Russia, all have gold holdings well in excess of a year ago.

"The balance of trade in our favor for the fiscal year ending next week will be greater than we ever have known, adding another great block of millions to what the world owes us.

"Our internal commerce shows conditions distinctly encouraging. Bank clearings for the month of May for the country outside of New York City show a gain of 2 per cent over the same month of a year ago; for the five months ending June 1, an increase of nearly 4 per cent. The decrease in New York City clearings is not discouraging, because it indicates decrease of speculation. The increase outside the metropolis means increase of actual business. The surplus reserve of the clearing-house banks of New York City last Saturday exceeded $40,000,000 and is the greatest known at this season in 15 years, with two years excepted.

"The world is prosperous, and the prosperity of the world at this time means solidity and assurance for us, because the world owes us. We know it can pay. Germany's exports for the four months to May 1 show 20 per cent increase; her imports 2 per cent. The United Kingdom increased its domestic exports 12 per cent, its imports 5 per cent, in the five months to June 1. France reports 7 per cent increase of exports, 3 per cent in merchandise imported for the four months to May 1.

"Referring to the conditions which prevail in Europe at the present time, an eminent English economist recently expressed publicly the hope that those who have for many months past been hoarding large amounts of money in the leading European countries will appreciate the fact that the dangers against which they have made provision have passed, and he furthermore declared that to continue this policy of hoarding would be a criminal proceeding, calculated to restrict and damage the good credit of the respective countries. This hoarded fund, he said, 'should now be returned to general use, so that productive industry may be resumed at once and the means for paying wages and purchasing material become available.'

"In the 11 months of this fiscal year to June 1 we have exported eleven millions of gold more than we have imported. But in the same 11 months we have received from our mines from eighty to ninety million dollars of gold, and our stock of the metal is now the greatest on earth, exceeding by 55 per cent that of France, by about 100 per cent that of Russia, and by more than 160 per cent that of the United Kingdom.

"We exported during the fiscal year now closing manufactured products approximating $1,200,000,000, while in 1899 our total exports, manufactures, agricultural, and all, including cotton and wheat, were practically no more than our manufactures alone now are. Our total exports for this year will be $2,500,000,000, exceeding by $300,000,000 any year of our history. We are garnering bountiful harvests, adding untold new millions to our store of values.

"In our own country intrinsic conditions are sound. The workingman is receiving higher wages than at any time in the previous history of the country, and at the same time official figures show that our great enterprises generally are running full time, with constantly increasing earnings. For the past 12 months our country has been enriched from the products of the farm to the extent of $8,000,000,000; our mines have yielded approximately $2,000,000,000; the products of our forests and fisheries a billion and a half; while our manufacturing establishments have added to the value of raw materials, through the process of manufacture, $10,000,000,000 more.

"In many European countries American securities are a specially favored class of investment, for the reason that they are regarded as always having a ready market. In fact, the London Statist has recently declared that the American securities which are held in certain leading countries of the world are now regarded as a kind of reserve, owing to their ready convertibility. Leading bankers estimate that this country has purchased from Europe and paid for in the past 12 months, covering the period of the Balkan War, securities amounting in the aggregate to from $350,000,000 to $500,000,000.

"Pessimists who distrust this country or minimize its resources and power may do well to consider that the earnings and income of this people, over and above the cost of living, and representing their savings, nearly all of which are available for reproductive employment and investment, are now estimated, by an authority so conservative and well informed as the London Statist, at more than $5,000,000,000 per annum, and in all human probability this amount will increase materially from year to year.

"We have the gold; we have the crops; we have the credit; we have the people. We have a comfortable balance against a prosperous and now generally peaceful world. Certainly it is the time of all times for us to change our gauge from narrow to broad and not only get our banking and currency system into line with the world's best commercial and financial thought, but show the world that a real Republic can deal with that most intricate of all problems of civilization, involving finance, currency, banking, commerce, and government, making the five work together for the common weal, the general wealth, the common advancement along all lines of endeavor and progress, and the glory and honor of the country and people.

"The success of any plan for banking and currency reform will largely depend on whether or not it shall provide:

"First. A currency which will at all times be worth its face in gold in all sections of the country.

"Second. A plan by which the amount of this currency can be increased to meet the legitimate demands of agriculture, industry, and commerce, and be automatically reduced when the occasion for the increase has passed and the additional currency is no longer required.

"Third. A governmental supervision or direction sufficiently powerful to prevent at all times domination and exploitation by any set of men or group of interests, however philanthropic their alleged intentions, or however beneficent their designs.

"These three objects, it is believed, can be obtained by the currency measure now before the country. The bill is not perfect. No thinking man would expect any product of human thought or purpose, however clean the thought or high the purpose, to be born perfect. I believe it is far better than any measure along the same line ever put before our Congress. It will be pruned and, I hope, strengthened, and when it has passed the Senate and House will come out a powerful impetus, a safeguard for thrift and enterprise, an assurance to all legitimate business.

"It is reported that the provisions of the new currency bill which have elicited criticism in certain quarters are those which provide governmental control of the reserve banks, and the Government's issuance of the new currency, and there are some who have been so rash as to predict that serious consequences will follow the adoption of these policies. My memory takes me back to the year 1887, when the bill to create the Interstate Commerce Commission was pending in Congress. Calamity howlers were then much in evidence. The 'interests,' railroad and financial, especially in Wall Street, were loud in their declarations that direct misfortunes must follow such supervision and control, or, as they chose to express it, 'interference' from the Government with the people's enterprises and investments; and panics and depressions were freely predicted. For your amusement, and as a matter of historic interest, I submit to you contemporaneous comments on the interstate-commerce bill, some of which have curious resemblance to present criticism of the currency bill and serve to remind us that fear of innovation, hate of the new, and resistance to all reform, meaning change of habits, are supported by venerable precedents, younger, as they are older, than the Bourbons. Hear these extracts from newspapers and speeches of 1887, expressing widely disseminated, in some instances honestly held, sentiments.

"Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, of Rhode Island, in 1887, discussing the then pending interstate-commerce bill, said:

"What I find fault with is that in order to cure evils which are apparent to the farmers of Illinois or Michigan you propose to demoralize the whole commerce of the country; you propose to establish an arbitrary, unjust, unreasonable, impracticable rule, which, while it will do what you say, will do much more.

"The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD quotes Senator Platt, of Connecticut, as follows:

"It seemed to me, with my knowledge of the history of the management of railroads, and with my knowledge of legislation upon this subject, that the result would be an immediate rate war by all the railroads of the United States.

"Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, in expressing his disapproval, said:

"Here is a proposition which, in my judgment, would be destructive to great business interests in the country, especially to the export business of the principal city of the State which I represent.

"And Senator Leland Stanford, of California, is quoted as follows:

"If this bill shall become a law its consequences will be most disastrous, in my judgment, to the varied business interests of the country.

"Congressman Hanback, of Kansas, was equally pronounced in his opposition. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD quotes him as saying:

"My judgment * * * leads me to believe that the legislation proposed by the bill in question will be fatal to the best interests of my State, as well as to the whole country. * * *

"I think it is safe to say * * * that these great lines of industry, the product of capital and the employer of labor, ought not to be interfered with, as they will be by the provision of this bill.

"The opinion entertained by the Republican leader at that time, Congressman Charles H. Grosvenor, of Ohio, is summed up in the following words:

"It will unsettle rates, disorganize the industries of the country, and thus force a reconstruction of systems of production. In the meantime labor will suffer, the farmers' products will lack a remunerative market, and uncertainty will discourage industry. It is a dangerous stride toward a centralization of power in the hands of the few to the hindrance, vexation, and permanent injury of the many.

"The New York Tribune, in an editorial on January 31, 1887, in expressing its disapproval of the measure, says:

"This bill is intended to help western farmers especially. The Tribune believes that it will do them more harm than good, not because many of its aims are not meritorious, not because it lacks excellent features, but because it contains provisions which will increase the cost of transportation for producers and consumers alike, will bury transporting companies under mountains of litigation, interfere with the building of new roads where they are needed, and in the end do much to bring into disrepute and odium restrictive measures undertaken with sincere purpose for the public good.

"And in its editorial of March 24, 1887, the New York Sun has this to say:

"Of all haphazard legislation that Washington has ever known this paternal governmental interstate-commerce act now appears to us as perhaps the most thoughtless and mischievous that has ever been put forth. If the combined legislative force of the Nation had done a thing as remote from reason and common sense as would be the ruling of an ape upon the Supreme Bench, and if upon its consequences, which are supreme, the greatest interests of the country must hang in doubt, peril, and confusion, what would we expect as its first results?

"Despite these direful predictions, as one intimately acquainted with the railroad as well as the banking interests of the country for 20 years past, I frankly say to you here that it is my judgment and my conviction that if the 'wide-open' policies under which our railroads were being operated before the inauguration of the Interstate Commerce Commission had not been curbed, systematized, and regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was first appointed in 1887 by President Grover Cleveland, that license and their unbridled operations and reckless selfishness would have led the country to panic and the roads to ruin. It is also clear to me that subsequent laws, enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, have been of great value to the railroads themselves, as well as to the public. Some of us can remember the wolfish and wrecking wars the railroads waged against each other, the strong destroying and devouring the weak, hidden financial powers seizing the corpses and fragments, honest investors ruined, and the public suffering. We can remember, too, how the pools, which were concealed menaces to legitimate business, stifled competition and made investment without 'ground-floor' information a doubtful guess.

"I firmly believe that the supervision which the new currency plan bestows upon and secures to the General Government will prove not only of supreme value to the people as a whole, but will be of inestimable value to the shareholders and owners of our banking institutions, both far and near, insuring the stability and safety of their investments and preventing the exploiting of the resources of banks for the benefit of unscrupulous men, whether they be within or without the banks. I believe, too, that the public will come to approve the currency system that will be adopted as heartily and universally as it does the interstate-commerce laws.

"There is no accepted principle of social or political economy which views with disfavor the issuance of currency by a government rather than by the banks, but if in time past, under peculiar conditions in smaller countries, there have been instances where currency issued by a bank may have met trade conditions better than government money, such exceptional cases can not be successfully imitated here.

"Under the wise guidance and direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, our railroad mileage has grown from 133,606 miles in 1886 to 250,000 miles in 1913. The gross earnings per mile of the roads has increased from $6,570 in 1886 to $11,534 for 1912, and net earnings per mile increased from $2,376 in 1886 to $3,538 in 1912. The total gross earnings increased from $820,000,000 in 1886 to more than $3,036,000,000 in 1912, while net earnings over operating expenses have increased from $300,000,000 in 1886 to $943,000,000 in 1912, and for the first nine months of this fiscal year gross earnings show a further increase over last year of $200,000,000 and net earnings an increase of about $80,000,000.

"These figures are not suggestive of strangulation or ruin, and we may surely expect that our banks will grow and prosper more than ever with the nonpartisan governmental supervision or direction now proposed. Under the supervision of men of the same high and unimpeachable character as those who compose the Supreme Court or the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is my belief that our banks will advance more safely and more solidly than ever before. A successful and conscientious banker, controlling millions of deposits, said to me the other day that he would welcome the establishment of Government control and Government currency, and that if there was not relief from the present antiquated conditions he intended to retire from the banking business altogether and look for some other occupation.

"Some have tried to make it appear that the administration is hostile to the great railroad interests, and that as Pharaoh required the chosen race to make bricks without straw, so our Government is now requiring the roads to find money to pay high costs of labor and materials without increasing the rates they collect from freight and passengers. This administration is the friend of all honestly operated business enterprises, large or small, public or private. It is a maxim of the law that he who asks equity must do equity, and that a plaintiff must come into a court of equity with clean hands.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission can not be charged with a disregard for the safety and prosperity of the roads if it should suggest, before putting into effect a 5 or 10 per cent advance in rates, that the roads themselves purge and reform, on the one hand, those departments of their service concerned with the purchase of materials and supplies, including rolling stock, having freshly in mind the miserable example of a leading western line, which was defrauded of an amount estimated at $5,000,000 in a short space of time by its own employees and ex-employees, under the very eyes of an honest president and an intelligent board of directors. Next it is also fair to suggest to the roads to look into and apply reforms where needed at the financial end of their business and to consider the overhead charges, sometimes imposed by directors for their own purposes, without consultation with shareholders or consideration of commercial results.

"Gentlemen, we have come to a time of doing business on business principles, of consideration of public and general rights, and we may as well face it and adapt ourselves to it. The day of the soft snap and the easy thing is going, if it has not gone. People of all kinds and grades must earn what they get by giving service and for value received—railroads, banks, and all.

"It is almost 50 years to the day, and within a few miles of this place, when men went by, described in the strong words of the poet:

"Pickett's Virginians passing through;
Supple as steel and strong as leather,
Dusty of hat and rusty of shoe,
Enured to hunger and war and weather;
Peerless and fearless, an army's flower.
Sterner warriors the world saw never,
Marching lightly that summer hour
Sterner warriors the world saw never,

"The history of our nation is strewn thickly with heroic incidents on land and at sea. Our men and boys, battling with each other on the issue of principles, have confronted each other with the plying of rifle butts, the thrust of bayonets, and at the muzzles of cannon. Our women, generation after generation, have endured willingly deadly pain and gone to the gates of death to give sons and daughters to the Republic. Having these splendid stories before us, surely it behooves us, with our special responsibilities, to be true to our obligations to aid loyally and patriotically in the work of keeping our standards high, our finance clean, our business methods honest, to make sure that we shall not permit internal decay and corruption to sap away the life of our Republic or to cause a Government of the people and by the people to perish."

UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION, ETC.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if he is going to extend his remarks on the subject of our amendment?

Mr. CULLOP. No; on the subject of a recent editorial in the Washington Times, concerning the report of the United States Steel Corporation and other industrial matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SOCIAL INSURANCE.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of social insurance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of social insurance. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the task of preventing social waste is preeminently the task of America to-day. No other problem approaches it in magnitude, for its varying aspects make up the phases of the social question, which contains in itself much of menace and much of peril.

The business and industrial interests of this country have realized the importance of the problem of waste of material, and in recent years the desire to prevent this waste has been the greatest aim of these interests. Establishments and corporations have experimented long and at great expense, with the result that they are to-day making millions of dollars from the vast stores of materials which formerly went to waste and were counted of no value.

The steel industry is utilizing its disfiguring mountains of ore dust by pressing it into briquets to be used again. It is utilizing the slag from its furnaces in the manufacture of cement in immense quantities. It is using in a dozen ways the blast-furnace gas, which was formerly a complete loss, but which now not only drives giant engines, but is used in making paving materials, aniline dyes, and many other valuable products.

The lumber industry has solved the problem of the waste of sawdust, and the great heaps which were formerly a source of danger are now of value in the production of wood alcohol and a number of other commodities.

The packing industries are making a hundred valuable products from by-products, and cattle to-day become everything from beefsteak to buttons, and pork is used in a hundred ways, from sausage to the painter's brush.

Waste paper is used for the manufacture of more paper; waste iron becomes the highest form of steel; waste rubber is valuable for other products; and even garbage from the streets of cities become fertilizer and fuel.

In fact, the utilization of waste products has become the most interesting and most profitable study on the part of the manufacturer and chemist and inventor of to-day. Fortunes have been made and are being made from waste. Once we threw away everything but the main product, but to-day we use the waste and transform it into countless articles of comfort and luxury. Seldom is an industry started but its by-product is disposed of at a profit. The waste of one industry is the raw material of another, and we have learned that there is no material thing without economic value.

But American business and industry, while solving the problem of waste in materials, have forgotten the far greater problem of the waste of life. I do not mean to say that all business men and all leaders of industry have overlooked this vital question; but, taken in the whole, the dollar-and-cent issue back of the conservation of materials has blinded business and industry to everything save the fact that human life is cheap and that the place left vacant by accident or death or disease is quickly filled from the ranks of those who clamor for it.

Now, I want to lay down the proposition that viewed from a purely financial standpoint alone, the economic loss caused by sickness, invalidity, industrial accidents, and unemployment form the greatest drain to-day on the Nation's resources, and that it is a matter of dollars and cents for every American citizen that this waste be prevented. I will prove that the Nation is the loser of a stupendous fortune every year through this waste, caused by misfortunes which may come to every worker, but which many escape. They are risks not ordinarily considered, and against which no provision is made, and for that reason become matters of collective action.

First of all, we must admit that the Nation has really never recognized this waste, for only partial and haphazard reports are available in the effort to learn just how many persons are sick in this land and how many workers suffer through accident and unemployment.

But even these partial reports of governmental departments bear out the statements I have made as to the magnitude of this waste, and their inaccuracy err on the side of minimizing rather than exaggerating its extent.

ACCIDENTS.

As regards industrial accidents, the 1908 mortality statistics of the United States Census Bureau, covering but one-half of the population of the country, reports that 19,970 persons lost their lives in mine and mill and factory in the year reported. It is a most conservative estimate to say that 20,000 industrial wage earners lose their lives every year while in the discharge of their daily duties.

As to the nonfatal accidents, great variations appear in the estimates of investigators, based on partial reports. Frederick L. Hoffman, reporting for a great insurance company, states that there were more than 2,000,000 nonfatal industrial accidents in 1908. Prof. R. P. Falker, in an address before the National Civic Association, declared that the number for that year would not exceed 500,000. Taking his estimate, which is admittedly the lowest possible, the fact remains that the industrial establishments as at present conducted send a worker every minute to the surgeon or the undertaker.

That means a tremendous loss in dollars and cents, for these maimed and killed workers are persons reared to the point of productive efficiency by the expenditure of millions of dollars on the part of society.

It has been estimated that in Pennsylvania it costs the State $1,000 for every native-born child reared to the age of 21. It has also been estimated that the economic value of an able-bodied worker in the prime of life is in excess of $10,000. Through industrial accidents the loss is either complete, as in the case of death, or, instead of being of assistance to society and adding to the production of the Nation, these injured ones become a dead weight, to be carried as a burden by society at large.

George E. McNeill, of the International Underwriters' Association of America, has estimated that the loss to the State of Massachusetts by fire is one-half the total loss of earnings by accidents in all gainful occupations. If that basis be taken for the Nation at large, and it is a crying condemnation that it is the only basis upon which we can figure, the annual loss of earnings to the workers of this Nation through accidents is $350,000,000 each year. And that takes no account of the expense of medical attendance and funeral expenses.

SICKNESS AND INVALIDITY.

As regards sickness and invalidity, we face the deplorable situation that in order to estimate their extent we must have recourse to figures and tables compiled by other nations.

English reports show that for every death there are two years of continual illness. The mortality statistics of the United States in 1908 state that 1,500,000 deaths occurred in the year reported, which would indicate that 3,000,000 persons were continuously ill that year. That means an average loss of 15 days a year for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

Two-fifths of the number sick, or 1,200,000, are from the ages of 20 to 65, or the productive period of life. If we figure the United States census average yearly income of wage earners—$435—the loss in earnings alone is $500,000,000.

The United States Bureau of Labor reports that the average family spends $27 a year for medicine, which adds another total of $500,000,000 to the sick bill of the Nation, and this does not include the cost of medical attendance nor funeral expenses. In other words, sickness and invalidity among wage earners costs the Nation, through loss of earnings and medicine alone, a total of a billion dollars every year.

UNEMPLOYMENT.

In considering unemployment, the most bitter and unjust misfortune that can come to the wage earner, we find again that the Government has made no systematic and thorough effort to secure accurate and comprehensive figures.

But even the partial reports furnished us are astounding revelations of the social waste involved in unemployment. The census reports for 1900 show that 6,468,964 persons, or about 1 out of every 5 wage earners, was idle for a period of from 1 to 12 months during the year reported. These figures are more than borne out by the reports of the United States Bureau of Labor, which made a special investigation in certain sections of the country.

The Bulletin on Unemployment, issued by the bureau October 15, 1912, throws an interesting side light on the assertion which is often made that all desiring work in this country can secure it, and that those who are idle are idle from choice. The bulletin says:

> Brief consideration of unemployment is sufficient to establish as fallacious the frequent assertion that all who desire work in the United States can obtain it. Even if at the best seasons of the best years, industrially, all who wanted work were employed, some would be out of work the next month. Those who became unemployed would of course be the less efficient, but if all were equally capable some would lose their jobs simply because industry could not use them.

Taking the census reports and figuring on the basis of $435, the average annual income of the wage earners, we find that the loss in earnings alone, due to unemployment, amounts to the stupendous total of $847,600,000. This is obtained by taking the average number idle for the average period for which they are unemployed.

Thus taking the most conservative possible figures the total waste every year in this Nation from industrial accidents, sickness and invalidity, and unemployment amounts to $2,197,600,000.

Surely that forms the preeminent problem of waste from the dollar and cent standpoint that America is facing to-day. Beside it the saving of materials which were formerly waste products dwindles into insignificance. Even the question of preventing the waste of natural resources, great as that question is, can not be compared with the importance of preventing the waste of health and life and limb.

The packing industry has inaugurated many devices for utilizing by-products, but the total value of all products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry in 1909 was $1,370,568,000, only a little over half the waste through sickness, accidents, and unemployment.

The lumber industry has sought out ways to prevent the waste of sawdust and other by-products, but the entire product of the lumber and timber interests of this Nation in 1909 was $1,156,129,000, or a billion dollars less than the waste of humanity through these misfortunes.

The steel industry has spent millions to devise ways for utilizing its ore dust and slag, but the entire product of the iron and steel industry in 1909 was $985,723,000, less than half the amount represented in the waste of humanity values through sickness, accidents, and unemployment.

The paper industry is using waste material after expensive study and testing, but the entire value of the product of the paper and wood pulp industry in 1909 was only $267,567,000, or but one-ninth of the money wasted through these misfortunes.

That waste is more than the value of all the live stock on all the farms east of the Mississippi River; it is more than the value of all the manufactured products of the State of Pennsylvania; it is far more than our entire foreign trade, imports and exports; it is a loss of $60 annually for every man, woman, and child engaged in gainful occupations, or $25 annually for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

WHO PAYS THIS WASTE?

That the waste is going on can not be denied; but the question arises, Who pays it? It is a sad commentary on our ideas of social and industrial justice that we are obliged to say that this social waste, these misfortunes met with in the service of society, fall with all their crushing power upon the shoulders of the wage earners themselves.

No fair-minded observer of actual conditions will say that the toilers of this Nation should be forced to bear the burden of this waste unaided and alone. It might be argued that they should if, in our industrial system, we weighed the waste as well as the productive portions of life. If the loss from sickness, accident, and unemployment during the 50 years of the assumed productive life were considered in the wages paid, it would admittedly be the duty of every worker to pay the cost of his own misfortunes.

But the fact is, and it is well known to all, that contracts for employment cover no such elements. Sickness, accidents, old age, and unemployment are ignored entirely, and the income, which should be based on the entire period of life, is based only upon that period when the worker is able-bodied, strong, and efficient.

No such specious arguments as the virtue of "free play of supply and demand" will avail to-day. There is no free play of supply and demand under industrial conditions of the present. There is always an oversupply of labor, with countless recruits to the very lowest classes of labor, added each year through just these misfortunes we are considering.

There can be no equality between a single workman bringing his labor to the giant corporation and endeavoring to market his commodity. He is a suppliant and he is obliged to take what is offered or go without employment.

No; it is assuredly not justice to demand that the workers should bear the entire weight of this burden.

SHOULD INDUSTRY PAY FOR IT?

The business and industrial interests of this Nation voluntarily pay the expenses of costly and toilsome experiments to utilize materials which were formerly only waste products, but the business and industrial interests will not voluntarily assume the payment of the waste in humanity values. That statement is beyond question.

And business and industry can not be justly required to bear all the burden caused by sickness, accident, and unemployment any more than the wage earners can be justly required to bear all of this waste. Some part of it does belong to business and industry, however. For instance, each industry should be responsible for the payment of fair compensation for accidents and occupational diseases, the direct result of industrial operations. But the question of ordinary illness, unemployment, and old age are each different, for they concern directly every citizen and they are questions distinctly social.

No man can be sick to himself alone, especially in a crowded factory or tenement. No man can suffer from enforced idleness and suffer alone. The bitterness and desperation which comes from the inability to earn his bread in the sweat of his brow, although he pleads for the opportunity, do not concern the toiler alone. The potentialities of such a condition concern every member of society. It is a question which vitally concerns the common welfare of the Nation.

GOVERNMENT MUST DEFINE JUSTICE.

The duty of defining the responsibility in each of these sources of waste must rest with government. Voluntary action has not and can not meet the problems and deal with them. Social and industrial justice will never come voluntarily from great corporations. None of the great combinations of capital, engaged in vast industrial enterprises, will uphold justice when it lessens the golden stream into the strong box. Of the few and halting steps made by certain corporations, and which are pointed out by the forces of reaction as seven-league strides, not one but has been a frankly avowed attempt to increase earnings and dividends.

It requires a power greater than business and industry, a power that represents the interests of all classes, to define justice and to maintain it, and that power in this Nation can be nothing save the power of the people's Government.

The collective will of the people, expressed through their Government, can alone deal with this colossal problem of waste and devise measures for its prevention as far as possible and the distribution of the burdens of any part that is inevitable.

THE SOCIAL UNREST.

I have dealt with these questions from a financial standpoint exclusively to show that on business grounds the Nation should cope at once with this wanton waste of resources. But to my mind that is not the most important phase of the question, for the cost in money alone is not to be compared with the cost in other ways of the social and industrial injustice represented in the figures I have given. And securing social and industrial justice in this Nation will of itself solve the problem of the financial waste of humanity values.

From this standpoint the question presents a menacing front, and one which demands immediate and effective treatment. With 10,000,000 Americans in poverty, and with 72 per cent of pauperism caused by these misfortunes and risks I have mentioned, this problem is interwoven with the entire social question, and it becomes the supreme task of America to deal with it wisely but promptly.

That task can not be ignored in safety nor brushed aside with lofty indifference or cool disdain. That policy, pursued by blind reactionaries in the past, has but dammed up the floods of discontent, hatred, and prejudice, creating new and greater perils for a later day.

Fanned by such tactics, there is to-day a smouldering flame of discontent throughout the Nation, especially in the great industrial districts. That flame can not be put out with the puffs of sneers or the sprinkling of indifference. The weak pleas of the self-satisfied to let well enough alone, the worship of vested rights are but as cobwebs before a storm of revolutionary ideas never dreamed of before in this Nation, but which are to-day filling men's hearts with the bitterness of despair and leading them on in reckless desperation to unseen destinations.

This social unrest burns and crackles in the streets and alleys where hunger holds sway. It embitters and enrages those who are stretched on beds of pain and suffering and who see dependent ones suffer with them. The shouts of revolt and insurrection go up from the great army of the unemployed who have sought for work and could not find it. It grows greater at the sight of old and worn-out workers who after long and faithful service have nothing left but the degrading shelter of the poorhouse.

IS DUE TO INJUSTICE.

To my mind the social unrest, which has become a threatening feature in our national life, is due almost entirely to social and industrial injustice. It does not find its inspiration to any great degree in the unreasoning attitude of the shiftless and those who are idle from choice, nor from the malice and wantonness of the criminal and the anarchist. It is instead due to the sight of flagrant injustice in the eyes of the people, the pressure of unjust conditions upon millions of citizens in a land conceived in liberty and dedicated to equality.

Industrial and social injustice is sowing the seeds of suspicion and wrath and hatred with lavish hand. Unless checked the harvest will certainly be in kind, a harvest of anarchy and social and political disintegration.

Surely no more important duty rests upon the American Congress than that of seeking to learn the facts of the situation and to meet the conditions with promptness and firmness; for rest assured that the question is not how long these brutal conditions will continue, but rather what will succeed them. Whether the change will be orderly and constructive or chaotic and destructive rests in large measure with the lawmaking body commissioned to act for the people.

The first task is to learn the full extent of the problem, and it is high time that the National Government recognized the need of exact knowledge in a situation of such vital importance to the common welfare. We must go honestly to the root of the matter and no longer attempt to sugarcoat the truth and cloak the facts in a lying livery of misrepresentation.

LET IN THE LIGHT.

We need to learn whether it is true that the workers who give the Nation its riches and make it great and strong are themselves left without the means of existence in times of misfortune, such as accident, sickness, and unemployment. That is the very heart of the problem and an honest study of its phases, in the light of full knowledge, will put us on the road to the solution. For when we find that such is the condition, and none can doubt but that that will be the finding after honest inquiry, the task of insuring workers against such calamitous waste will be a duty admitted by all.

With collective action dealing with these diseases of the social body will come measures along the line of their prevention. If the burden of waste falls upon all alike, the importance of preventing waste will be immediately perceived by all. If preventable sickness, accidents, and inexcusable unemployment lay their toll of cost upon all, it will at once become the common task to put an end to such a drain upon the wealth and prosperity and productiveness of the Nation. Such action anticipates no pauperizing of workers or payment of any demands rightfully charged against the individual. The expenses included in the cost of living must be met by the individual, but the contingencies to which all are liable but which many escape, the misfortunes which are not foreseen and for which no provision is made, these should be met by governmental action, prescribing the method in each case most consistent with right and justice.

If such a plan be opposed because it is new, I answer that the conditions are new and teach new duties. The blood-rusted keys of the past will not open the door of the present. Conditions have vastly changed since Thomas Jefferson could say that he never saw a native American begging in the streets, or Charles Dickens exclaimed "A beggar in Boston would be like a flaming sword."

The rapid evolution of civilization has caused some forces that served their time well, under other conditions, to lose their virtue in the present. They must be put aside or changed to meet the conditions of to-day. The problem of social and industrial justice demands a solution and it must be given here. No new land beckons the descendants of the founders of this Nation to come to other lands and work out old problems under new conditions. There is no farther west, and here in this Nation of ours, for the first time in all history, men are compelled to settle their problems with finality, face to face.

NO CAUSE FOR PESSIMISM.

The social unrest of to-day and the fact that the problem must be solved here give no ground for pessimism. It is rather a hopeful omen, for it proves that Americans have not degenerated from the days of independence and protest against injustice. Their discontent to-day has in it something of the divine, for it is the urge eternal in human hearts, driving men and women along paths that lead upward and ever onward.

Those who are voicing their protests against injustice are to-day the true successors of the Americans of seventy-six and the sixties. They recognize that charity, philanthropy, and generosity are worthy qualities, but they know that they are not substitutes for justice. They have around them schools and libraries and museums that make their appeals to the mind and direct the thought along the lines nearest and closest, the struggle for a livelihood. They are glad that even though the workingman to-day should be better fed, better clothed, and better housed than ever before, he is still more greatly changed in himself, and the bare necessities of life, which might once content him, are to-day only a part of the demands he makes of a twentieth century civilization.

That is the explanation of the nation-wide movement which is sweeping this Nation in its demand for social and industrial justice. The people have come to see clearly that the willful waste of any kind of resources is criminal, but that the greatest crime is the waste of human health and life and limb. As life is more than meat and the body than raiment, so the saving of humanity values is greater and more important than preventing the waste of property and possessions, especially when the waste of life is also the greatest waste of money in the Nation.

THE PEOPLE'S DEMAND.

The American people are calling upon their representatives to attend to this greatest of all questions. They demand that the whole extent of the problem be learned through careful study and investigation. They know that no panacea will furnish a patent solution for every phase of the problems involved, but they do ask that an honest effort be made to better conditions and that their Government be used as the machinery for promoting the common welfare, for securing as full a measure as possible of social and industrial justice.

The bill which I have introduced has those ends in view. It provides for the creation of a commission of social insurance to study all the phases of this problem and report its conclusions. It means that this Government may properly inquire into the causes of social unrest and seek to allay it. That it shall learn how far industrial conditions contribute to economic waste and then adopt the method in each case which is soundest in economic principles and most consistent with justice.

This measure would enable us to discover the good and the bad in our industrial and social conditions and enable us to uphold the one while we assail the other. It would consider the faults and wrongs as well as the things to be commended. It would mean the securing of the actual facts, to be followed by prompt and efficient action based on those facts. It would enable us to know the truth, in the belief that only the truth will ever make us free.

VOTES FOR WOMEN.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, in that two minutes I desire to have read an editorial from the Sacramento Bee of July 26, in relation to a statement made by Secretary Daniels while in California, as to woman suffrage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to have the editorial read as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DANIELS SAYS WOMAN SUFFRAGE WILL SURELY COME.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 26.

Secretary Daniels, of the Navy Department, told the women of the San Francisco Civic League last night that whatever the opinion of individuals about the wisdom of woman suffrage "We may as well get ready for the inevitable, for women are going to vote."

"Only last month," he continued, "Illinois gave them the ballot for all except constitutional offices, and the present generation will witness complete woman suffrage in every State in the American Union. And when it comes the Constitution will not be broken and the home will not be dethroned.

"For 6,000 years infants have been permitted to die by impure milk, impure food, disgraceful sanitary conditions, unhealthy surroundings, death-hole tenements, and typhoid and other preventable germs. We have spent millions to protect infant industries until they have grown into giants and we continue to feed them. We have spent only a pittance to protect the infants."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2711. An act to provide for the acquiring of station grounds by the Great Northern Railway Co. in the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2711. An act to provide for the acquiring of station grounds by the Great Northern Railway Co. in the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ADAMSON, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for 10 days on account of very important business.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a few paragraphs from the Scriptures commenting on the Monroe doctrine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a part of the Bible. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENT. We can well consult some ancient guideposts as to the path of wisdom in our present uncertainties. In the Book of Proverbs are found the following:

My son, if thou hast become surety for thy neighbor, if thou hast stricken thy hand for a stranger, thou art snared with the words of thy mouth.

He that passeth by and vexes himself with strife that belongeth not to him is like one that taketh a dog by the ears.

He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it.

DIGGS-CAMINETTI CASE.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD in reference to House resolution 182, now before the Committee on Rules, relative to the Diggs-Caminetti case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD on resolution 182, the Kahn resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman state that the resolution is now before the Committee on Rules?

Mr. HINEBAUGH. It is before the Committee on Rules. It was first referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, but that committee was discharged and it was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there has been an agreement here in regard to debate on the Diggs-Caminetti case, and I think that everything that is said about the case ought to be said on the floor of the House.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Tennessee will yield, I want to say that every gentleman who spoke on that side on Tuesday asked and obtained leave to extend remarks in the RECORD, and some of the gentleman have inserted remarks in the RECORD that were not uttered on the floor and to which no exception is taken.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think everyone who spoke got permission to extend remarks.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. I do not think the gentleman from Tennessee would object if he knew the nature of the remarks.

Mr. ADAMSON. If it is on our side it is all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. HINEBAUGH. I hope it is not on either side.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will withdraw objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HINEBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of House resolution 182, relative to the Diggs-Caminetti "white-slave" case. The resolution is as follows:

House resolution 182.

Whereas the United States district attorney, John L. McNab, of San Francisco, Cal., has tendered his resignation to the President of the United States; and

Whereas the said John L. McNab in tendering his resignation to the President used the following language: "In bitter humiliation of spirit I am compelled to acknowledge what I have heretofore indignantly refused to believe, namely, that the Department of Justice is yielding to influences which will cripple and destroy the usefulness of this office"; and

Whereas Mr. McNab in his resignation charges that his hands are tied by the Attorney General of the United States in the prosecution of Maury I. Diggs, former State architect, and Drew Caminetti, son of Mr. A. Caminetti, Commissioner General of Immigration, both of whom are under indictment for the violation of the Mann White-Slave Act; and

Whereas said Diggs and Caminetti are charged in said indictment with the ruination of two high-school girls of Sacramento, Cal.; and

Whereas it is charged by said United States District Attorney McNab "that in these cases two girls were taken from cultured homes, bullied and frightened into going into a foreign State, and were ruined and debauched by defendants, who abandoned their wives and infants to commit the crime"; and

Whereas it is charged that certain powerful influences are being brought to bear on the authorities having this matter in charge to permit these men to go unwhipped of justice: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate fully and completely the facts in this case and report their findings to this House.

This resolution was introduced on the 24th day of June, and on the same day and at about the same time House resolution 181, relative to the same subject, was introduced by Mr. KAHN, of California.

Originally both of these resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. On the 25th of June I was notified to appear before said committee at 11 o'clock the following day for the purpose of granting me an opportunity to be heard on my resolution.

At the session June 25 the Judiciary Committee was discharged from the further consideration of my resolution and it was referred to the Committee on Rules, where it has peacefully slumbered ever since.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose in presenting House resolution 182 was not intended in any sense to embarrass this administration. Its only purpose was to call the attention of the administration somewhat vigorously to the evident blunder which had been made by the Department of Justice in this case, in order that a prompt correction of the error might be made, and because I did not want the Department of Justice, under a possible misapprehension of the facts, even to seem to lend itself to delay in these cases.

As a trial judge in former years I had been amazed and grieved to hear the charge boldly made by apparently intelligent people that the courts were the most unjust institutions in the land and that the poor man had no redress where the rich and powerful were concerned, and so in discussing my resolution at the time I stated in substances that—

"One of the most frequent criticisms urged by people generally against the courts is the delay in bringing cases to trial and the powerful influence of money and politics in the rendition of justice. Frequently it is boldly asserted that men of wealth or political influence are beyond the reach and operation of criminal law.

"We are now presented with the alarming spectacle of a member of the President's Cabinet requesting the Attorney General of the United States to delay the trial of the son of still another high Government official, the son being held under indictment for a most heinous offense.

"And the reason given by the Cabinet officer in question for requesting the delay is that it 'is in the interest of the public service.'

"Since when has the demand of the public service operated to the extent of nullifying an act of Congress?

"And how does the public service extend to the son of the Commissioner General of Immigration?

"In my opinion the interests of the public service, as well as of the Nation in its entirety, hinge on the strict enforcement of the Criminal Code. The law should take its course without regard to the wealth or political connections of the defendants."

In all of this there was no thought of embarrassing the administration.

Of course every man worthy of citizenship in our Republic believes the law should take its course, without regard to the wealth or powerful political influence of any of the parties connected with the subject matter of the litigation. It was because I believe it is exceedingly important to the future welfare of my country that this belief should continue and be justified that I wanted the Department of Justice to change its policy of delay in these particular cases.

The punishment of individuals when proven guilty of crime or the violation of law is, of course, important, but the continued respect and support by our people for the law and courts is vastly more important for the future welfare of the Nation.

I hope to live to see the day when no truthful man can charge that any action by our Department of Justice or by our courts is the result of political pull or any ulterior motive. If truth and justice are to prevail, it behooves us to guard our courts and

Department of Justice with "disciplined valor and ancient renown." And this can only be done by placing men of unimpeachable character and highest honor in these powerful places. "You do not hitch a race horse to the plow, nor should you expect me to do the work of which every man is capable."

This sentiment should be, and really is, as applicable to men who aspire to positions on the bench and in our Department of Justice as in any other walk of life.

The importance of bringing our courts and public officials generally to the highest standard, free from any suggestion of the power of the invisible government, is emphasized when men in public debate give expression to such ideas as this:

If the church means organized imposture and systematic duplicity, then we are opposed to it, and we make no bones about saying so. And if the state means a great, brutal police army, whereby the workers are to be kept down in the mud in order that a privileged few can climb onto their backs up into the sunlight at the top, then, sir, we are opposed to the state, and we make no bones about that, either.

But if the church means organized fellowship in human affairs, whereby the commercial cutthroatisms of to-day—every man's hand against his brother's throat, throttling the life out of his competitor—if the state means justice instead of organized, systematic greed; if the state means beauty instead of ugliness and banality of our dividend-seeking industrialism to-day; if the state means the industrial kingdom of God upon earth, then we Socialists not only are not opposed to that kind of a church and that kind of a state, but I ask you to consider and to register your decision—if not to-night, next fall at the ballot box, and for all time hereafter; I ask you, in the name of truth and righteousness and eternal fellowship, to say that only under socialism can a proper kind of a church and state exist, because in the night that is now darkening upon the world, in this growing chasm between the rich and the poor, in this day of liberty's decline, unless we can socialize our day's work and socialize our commerce, socialize the secular life of to-day, a free church and a worthy state will never more be possible.

Because of these things there should be no party politics in such a resolution and no thought on the part of anybody about embarrassing the administration. Every Member of this House should consider such resolutions on the basis of the highest patriotism rather than from the low level of political advantage.

In the face of Mr. McNab's statement that rich and powerful political influences were being brought to bear to have these men go unwhipped of justice, it at once became the duty of the President and the Attorney General to insist that the cases be pushed for trial; and to the credit of the President it may be said that he immediately took that position and ordered the cases to proceed to trial; and we now know that a trial will be had the first week in August. All of which is most salutary.

The duty of the Chief Executive, however, it must be conceded, does not end here; for the reason that the Department of Justice is under fire and the motives of the Attorney General impugned, surely the President must satisfy himself that his Attorney General was and is above suspicion in these cases, unless we are to believe it possible that party fealty is so strong that patriotic duty must be surrendered at the door of party expediency.

In these days of Mulhall confessions, which have opened at least one chapter of the book of the invisible government, and at a time when an important Cabinet official believes himself warranted in making the charge that certain New York banks have organized a campaign to depress the Government 2 per cent bonds for the purpose of influencing the proposed banking and currency legislation, it seems to me that the time was never more ripe for the representatives of the people in Congress to cease playing the game of practical politics and devote themselves to the herculean task of cleaning their own Augean stables.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS IN THE CIVIL WAR.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a communication from Col. L. C. True on the subject of the retirement of Volunteer officers in the Army of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a communication from Col. True on the subject of the retirement of Volunteer officers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The communication is as follows:

KANSAS CITY, KANS., July 19, 1913.

Hon. JOSEPH TAGGART, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I write hurriedly to make a few suggestions as to the merits of the pending legislation in the interest of the Volunteer officers of the Army in our Civil War.

If I may be allowed to indulge in a little irony, I would say the bill ought to be entitled "An act to redeem the pledges and promises of the Government made to its soldiers when it needed their services and broken when they were no longer needed." It should have a preamble reciting that—

"Whereas most of the men are dead who were in their lifetime entitled to the relief herein granted to the living; and

"Whereas the few surviving are rapidly passing away, and it will not cost a great deal to now make good the promises made 50 years ago: Now therefore

"Be it enacted * * *."

But I wish seriously to give a few of the reasons why the bills should be passed, as follows:

First. The acts of Congress in force and the proclamations of the President and the governors of the loyal States when volunteers were called for were the law of the land and constituted part of the contract of enlistment.

Second. On the 22d day of July, 1861, Congress passed an act calling on the States for volunteers, in which it was provided that they, the volunteers, should receive the same pay and emoluments of similar corps of the Regular Army, and if wounded in battle or otherwise disabled in the line of duty they should be entitled to the same benefits which had been or might be conferred on persons in the Regular Army.

This act, together with the proclamations of the President and the governors, stating the same things, constituted part of the contract of enlistment and justified the volunteers in believing that they would receive as Volunteers the same benefits in every respect as was provided or might be provided for Regulars.

Third. Afterwards in the same year, on the 3d day of August, 1861, Congress passed an act for the retirement of Regular Army officers who had become unable to perform their duties from wounds or otherwise, on pay proper for life, but omitted to include such Volunteer officers as had become unable to discharge their duties from wounds or otherwise. Pay proper for a lieutenant colonel of Regulars was $1,640 and two rations. If Volunteers became disabled they could not be retired even for the short terms of their enlistment, but must take pensions, if anything, and then the maximum pension for a lieutenant colonel was $360. I wish casually to remark that there is some difference between $1,640 and $360. This was the first act of discrimination and injustice after the promise was made, but the Volunteers were patriotic men, and this bad faith did not prevent them from going into action whenever they heard the long roll sounded.

Fourth. Forty-three years after the Revolutionary War an act was passed (May 15, 1828, to apply 2 years before the act passed—41 years after the war) giving officers and soldiers half pay for life.

Did not our Volunteers have the right to expect something equivalent to this 41 years after the Civil War?

Fifth. During the Revolutionary War the Army consisted of both Regulars and militia. On the 4th of March, 1831, an act was passed extending the benefit of the half-pay act to the militia.

Were the militiamen any more a part of the Regular Army in 1831 than our Volunteers in 1861–1865? Have we been given such treatment as that?

Sixth. During the Mexican War, 1846–1848, the Government needed soldiers just as it afterwards did in 1861, and to obtain them it held out inducements, both to Regulars and Volunteers alike, by passing the act of May 13, 1846, putting disabled men on half pay proper for life.

Seventh. Now, 52 years after the beginning of our Civil War, when the promise to treat Volunteers the same as Regulars was made, nothing of the kind has been done, nor have pensions equivalent thereto been granted. Why not? Did any soldiers of this country ever render more valuable services than the veterans of 1861 to 1866? Have the officers been treated as they should have been under the promise? Pensions have been granted at such rate that soldiers receive more than the equivalent of half pay, and in most cases more than full pay, but not so as to officers. Officers had more responsibilities and incurred more dangers than soldiers did and should be rewarded accordingly, especially after having the solemn promise of the Government. It is sometimes contended that officers got pay enough to reward them, and half pay now would be unjust discrimination between them and the soldiers.

Officers did not get pay from which there could be a savings account made. They had to buy their own uniforms and swords and pay as much for them as half their salaries, while the soldiers were furnished everything they were required to have. Mounted officers had to furnish their own horses, and turn them over to the enemy in case of capture without indemnity.

I think the Government ought to keep faith with the Volunteer officers—the few now living—by putting them on half pay, just as it did the Revolutionary soldiers and the Mexican soldiers, and I hope this act of simple justice will not be delayed until 99 per cent of those entitled to it are dead. That would be a poor time to give them a law by the terms of which they might have it, if they had not been mustered out before its passage. I understand 72 per cent of them are gone now, while 28 per cent still believe that Uncle Sam is honest enough to keep his promise some time. Yes; some time (?).

Respectfully,

L. C. TRUE,
Ex-Private, Company E, Thirty-eighth Illinois Infantry, and Ex-Lieutenant Colonel, Sixty-second Illinois Infantry.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read a telegram which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to have a telegram read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The telegram is as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 30, 1913.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Western Pennsylvania Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage extend hearty thanks and congratulations to you for your opposition to movement to give vote to women and trust you will continue in your opposition until the movement is defeated.

MRS. JAMES H. REED, Chairman.

Mr. NEELEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not know what the resolution is, but it will interfere with the order of the day.

DIGGS-CAMINETTI CASE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has 64 minutes remaining for debate in the Diggs-Caminetti case, and the gentleman from Illinois has 9 minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentlemen on the opposite side of the aisle consume the balance of their time. I expect to use all the time allotted to me in one final speech.

Mr. MURDOCK. How much time is that?

Mr. CLAYTON. I have 64 minutes and the opposition has 9 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the two girls involved in the Diggs-Caminetti case are each 19 years of age, and only daughters of highly respectable families and connections. They made the acquaintance of Diggs and Caminetti because one of the girls, and at least one of the men, were employed at the statehouse in Sacramento. They went on automobile rides together, and on a few occasions went into an apparently outwardly respectable French restaurant and drank wine. The men represented to the girls after a little while that the girls were going to be arrested. The girls were told by these men that warrants had been issued for their arrest. They were told that a newspaper was prepared to publish a sensational article concerning them, with their pictures, and that as a result of their arrest and the publication of the article the girls would be disowned by their parents and driven on the street. The men offered to obtain divorces from their then wives and marry the girls. These two girls were urged to fly with these men from California to Nevada. Up to the very last the girls begged that they be not taken out of the State. They begged that they be not made to leave, and when they said a word in favor of their own protection they were told they would be arrested; that the chief of police had warrants for their arrest, and they would be arrested if they did not flee. At the train, where they met to go, the girls again refused to go, and begged that they be permitted to return home. They were again told that unless they went they would be arrested, and forever dishonored.

At that time Diggs with a wife had two small children. At that time Caminetti with a young wife had a babe 5 weeks old. The men said that they would obtain divorces from their wives and marry the girls if the girls would go with them to another State. They finally yielded to the threats and persuasions and went to Reno.

Up to that time the Norris girl, who became the companion of Caminetti, had never had sexual intercourse with a man, as is proven by her own testimony and the condition of her nightgown and the sheet of the bed where they first laid. After the first night the girls were told they were ruined; there was no longer any talk of marriage, and the men told them they proposed to take them to Salt Lake City and put them in a house of prostitution. Yet the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] refers to this as a mere fornication case.

No meaner case has ever come within your knowledge. These facts are facts which were brought to the attention of the Attorney General along with many others. He says that he had forgotten the facts. I do not doubt his statement. On June 18 he telegraphed the district attorney to postpone the cases, and said that the reason he did that was because the Secretary of Labor had asked him to do it as a matter affecting official business. But the Attorney General had sent from his hotel a former telegram, on May 16, to the district attorney, directing the district attorney to take no further steps in the case until he received further orders. I do not doubt that the Attorney General desires to prosecute cases that ought to be prosecuted. What we have complained of here is that political influence has reached the Department of Justice and influenced it. Everyone knows that political influence may attempt to reach, but in this case let the Attorney General, who says that his telegram of June 18 was inspired by a telephone request from the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, tell who inspired his telegram of May 16, ordering that no further steps be taken in the case, and when he has told that and purged himself from yielding to political influence he will have absolved himself from criticism in the case.

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle have very eloquently shed tears in their voice, if not in their eyes, for the elder Caminetti in his distress over the actions of his son. The gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH] especially was very tearful. I am quite willing that you should shed tears for the elder Caminetti. Perhaps he needs them; but I shed my tears for the wife of young Caminetti, for his 5-weeks-old babe. I shed my tears for the wife of Diggs and his two young children. I shed my tears for the only daughter of the two old people, the father and mother of the Norris girl, who was debauched by young Caminetti. I shed my tears for the young Warrington girl, who was debauched by Diggs. I shed my tears for the mother of the Norris girl, now almost insane as the result of these exposures. I shed my tears for those who have been led astray, who have been debauched through fear and force. I shed my tears in behalf of the innocent, while you endeavor to protect the guilty. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I suppose inasmuch as the gentleman made no reservation of the balance of his time he does not wish to make any further remarks.

Mr. MANN. I did not have any more time or I should have used it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then the time on that side, as I understand it, is exhausted.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, before beginning my remarks I desire to say that on yesterday I called the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to an error that I thought he had inadvertently made in his statement contained on page 3243 of the RECORD, in which he attributes to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and to the Attorney General a desire, and perhaps I might infer from the language, a cooperation to suppress the publication of all the facts pertaining to the Caminetti matter, and it may also be inferred that the gentleman meant to say that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary had endeavored to prevent him from delivering his long-pent-up remarks in regards to the Caminetti resolution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman told me that he would make the proper correction in the permanent RECORD, and I suppose he will, for the gentleman well knows that if the chairman of this committee is believed, and if his public acts here in the presence of this House are to be taken as sufficient testimony, the chairman of the committee and the committee itself have persistently and insistently asked that this matter be given the fullest and freest publicity and the amplest opportunity for discussion be afforded. And, again, if the members of the Judiciary Committee, and particularly the members of the subcommittee, composed of two reputable members of the leading Republican minority faction and one reputable member of the Progressive minority faction, together with four of the minority members, are to be believed, they acquit, in their report made to this House under their solemn responsibility as Members of this body, the Attorney General in any effort, directly or indirectly, to withhold or suppress any facts, and they, more than that, told this House, in the shape of a formal report, that the Attorney General not only did not want anything suppressed, but he submitted to the committee and the House the whole file in this case, and rested upon the judgment of the committee as to how much or if all of it should be printed, expressing the desire on his part that everything pertaining to the case, everything that he had done or failed to do, should be laid before this House and the country. So the gentleman gets his facts wrong, and I presume he will correct his statements in the permanent RECORD so that they will conform to the truth.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]?

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not take very much time.

Mr. KAHN. I do not desire to take very much time, if the gentleman will permit me. My notes came to the House very late, and I did not revise them as thoroughly as I should have done. The gentleman states what is true. He has tried to have discussion—true, at the beginning, a very limited discussion—but he has asked for a discussion of these cases, and I shall be glad to set the gentleman right in the permanent RECORD.

Mr. CLAYTON. And twice since, according to my recollection, I have asked for four hours' discussion, and neither the chairman of the Judiciary Committee nor the committee nor the Attorney General is in anywise responsible for the failure to have this discussion some days ago; and I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Illinois will accept the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], in which the latter said that by no sort of cooperation or suggestion with or from the Attorney General did he interpose the objection which has been criticized by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The gentleman from Tennessee stated that what he did was of his own initiative, and I may say to this House it has never met the approval of the Attorney General.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I wish to corroborate what the chairman of the committee has said. At no time in the Committee on the Judiciary has the chairman attempted in any way to withhold anything concerning this matter from the House. What was withheld was done by the unanimous wish of the members of the Judiciary Committee. It is not my recollection that it was the suggestion of the chairman of the committee that certain parts of reports touching this case be withheld. It came at the request of some member of the committee and was concurred in by every member of the Judiciary Committee, Democrats, Republicans, and Progressive. We felt that to publish everything that was sent to us from the files of the Department of Justice would interfere with the prosecution of these cases and possibly defeat justice, in that the defendants would become aware of the exact evidence against them. I think the action of the committee in this regard was proper and wise.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his statement. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in his remarks a bit ago, referred to the French restaurants in San Francisco.

Mr. KAHN. Sacramento.

Mr. CLAYTON. Was it Sacramento? I assume the French restaurants in Sacramento are about like the French restaurants in San Francisco, and I have a very interesting pamphlet here showing what sort of disgraceful institutions those restaurants are, and I take it that no woman who regards her sense of decency and wants to hold the self-esteem of the community would go into one of those places either in Sacramento or San Francisco, as the two young women involved in this case seem to have done frequently. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is familiar with the report published in pamphlet form, to which I have referred, made by a commission of which our colleague, Mr. KENT, was a member, but I have not time to air that. I think that the exposure made in the city of San Francisco is enough to arouse the virtuous people of that city to the highest tension of indignation.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] also says that political influence has been exercised upon the Department of Justice. Mr. Speaker, I think that that is hardly a fair statement. What are the facts? The truth is the district attorney, Mr. McNab, declined to continue these cases and the Attorney General approved. This first effort at the continuance of the case was made by State Senator Caminetti, the father of one of the young men under indictment.

The Attorney General instructed Mr. McNab to proceed with the trial. Afterwards, upon the representation of Mr. Wilson, the Secretary of Labor, that he was organizing the Department of Labor and that Mr. Caminetti, sr., had recently been appointed Immigration Commissioner and his department was in a formative state, it was suggested that he would like to have Mr. Caminetti present in Washington for a brief period during the formation of his department—a reasonable request, communicated by Mr. Wilson to the Attorney General—the Attorney General, recognizing that the father, with the love of a father for a son, although it might be an erring son, would naturally want to be present at the trial, especially when that father himself was an experienced and distinguished lawyer and one of the leading citizens of the State of California, to whom Mr. McNab himself and gentlemen on the opposite side of this Chamber, including the gentleman [Mr. KAHN] and several of his colleagues, have paid high tribute. Upon that request he, the Attorney General, acceded to it. As he said in his letter to the President, it was nothing unusual. There appeared to him to be a good reason, and he agreed to a brief continuance. He frankly stated this in substance, and he also said in effect that it was impossible for him to carry in his mind all the facts and circumstances in the multitude of cases arising in the different courts throughout the country. This is the truth, and it can not be tortured into any sort of reflection upon an able, hard-working, faithful, and unterrified Attorney General.

Now, that is the sum total of political influence, so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, and so far as the facts in this case are concerned, until when? Until the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] sought to back up Mr. McNab in his sensational entrance into the political arena by furnishing him some political thunder at this end of the line. Was that for pure patriotic purposes, or was it for puny, petty, peanut politics? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The country has answered it that it is politics. The reputable newspapers of the country have said so. A few days ago the Washington Post, in an editorial which I shall put into the RECORD, said in effect that it was politics. It is politics, pure and simple. Has it not been demonstrated to be politics here on the floor of this House? Nothing but politics of a miserable, and I think I violate no parliamentary language when I say of a contemptible, nature.

Mr. Speaker, in the beginning our fathers were wise enough in constructing our Government to have three coordinate departments. In the Constitution of the United States Article I, section 1, provides that—

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in the Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Article I, section 2, provides—> * * * and (the House of Representatives) shall have the sole power of impeachment.

Article I, section 3, provides—

> The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments.

Article II, section 1, provides—

> The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America.

Article III, section 1, provides—

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

Mr. Speaker, the wisdom of the fathers in adopting this scheme of government is still respected by the American people. It was a plan that the fathers themselves, it is said, derived from the writings of that great Frenchman, Montesquieu. But wherever they got the idea, they have framed an instrument of organic government, they have put under that a government in operation, and they have carried forward for more than 125 years the most perfect and the best scheme of popular representative government—the best government that has ever been instituted upon this earth to bless mankind by its successful operation. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it is true that Congress has the right to have resolutions of inquiry passed, and it does not follow that when Congress propounds an inquiry to the legislative departments it is necessarily interfering with the business of the executive department.

But let us inquire what are the purposes of such resolutions. Such resolutions have for their object the ascertainment of an abuse, an official abuse; the ascertainment of a public necessity for legislation on some given subject. Such a resolution is proper for information to guide the legislative body in the correct performance of its duties. Such a resolution may also have for its purpose an inquiry into the official conduct of an officer of the executive department for the purpose of seeing whether that officer has been guilty of an offense or of misfeasance or malversation in office of such a degree as to warrant his impeachment.

First, Mr. Speaker, who will say that this resolution was introduced to give us any information to guide us in our legislative action here? Is there any matter pending, is there any bill introduced, is there any subject matter of complaint involved in any legislative proposition whereby this resolution sought information to aid us in the discharge of our public duty? The answer is no. Then, Mr. Speaker, on the other hand, is it for the purpose of condemning by impeachment an officer of the executive department? Oh, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], however bitter he may be in his partisanship, however misguided he may be in his sense of public duty as a part of the American Congress, and however unable he may be to rise above petty party rancor, he is still a lawyer and would not in his responsible place dare say that he can bring or has brought anything that so reflects or so tends to reflect upon the conduct of the Attorney General as to warrant summary action. So, Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that the gentleman's sole purpose is to manufacture some political campaign material for his bosom friend and supporter, McNab, out in California. Oh, I commend the gentleman for his fidelity to his friends. The gentleman himself is faithful to his friends. I do question the propriety of the gentleman's resolution here criticizing a high public officer of this Government, and with no better ground than a lot of unfounded or unfair assertions and a sort of buncombe movement, to the delight of the miserable muckrakers who sometimes inflict their dirty effusions upon a suffering public. They do this to degrade the Government in the eyes of the American people. This is as bad as outright anarchy, for anarchy is blatant and brazen. The method of the muckraker is detestable cunning and insidious insinuations.

Mr. Speaker, let us come now to this case. I shall not undertake to recite the harrowing details of the pathetic story of the woman's side of the Caminetti-Diggs case. That has been put in the press. The Judiciary Committee sought to keep out of the public press some of the facts in that case given before the grand jury; but either the gentleman from California or Mr. McNab, or possibly somebody else, gave the whole of those disgusting facts to the newspaper press, and they were printed in extenso in a recent issue of the Washington Post, not by direction of this House, not by direction of the Department of Justice, but by some one that professes love for these poor fallen women. Some unfriend procured the publication of the complete story of their shame. And whoever did it, let me say, I think the gentleman from California will live to see the time when the penitential mood will come, and he will cry out upon himself and cry out upon them, "Shame upon me and shame upon them for publishing those disgusting details."

Now, the House is familiar with what Diggs and Caminetti did. They took two women, I believe each of them 19 years old or more, who went with them voluntarily to Reno, Nev. But whether they went voluntarily or not has nothing to do with this case here charged against the Attorney General. What was done there I shall not recite; but those two young men were indicted for that in the State court, and the indictments against them are still pending in the State courts of California. And they were indicted also in the Federal courts. Why do we not hear some outcry of delay on the part of the courts of California to prosecute these men guilty of so heinous a crime? Is the State of California so impotent? Are her legal authorities so dull to the appreciation of their duties that they let criminal cases in the State court lag and linger for the lack of trial? Yet we hear no lofty declamation from the gentleman from California. We do not hear him declaiming against the impotency of State courts.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. I will.

Mr. KAHN. Can the gentleman tell the House what the indictment in the State court was for?

Mr. CLAYTON. I am informed that there are three charges pending in the State court in Sacramento County since early in March of this year.

Mr. KAHN. What are they?

Mr. CLAYTON. I am unable to tell the gentleman the exact nature of those charges.

Mr. KAHN. There is a charge of desertion of a minor child. That is the only offense that was committed in California; and I understand that those cases are to be pressed for trial as soon as possible. The indictments were found very recently.

Mr. CLAYTON. Let me complete the statement. I am informed that there were three charges pending in the State courts in Sacramento County early in March of this year. I am further informed that whereupon the State courts permitted the defendants to go on their own recognizances so as to allow the United States marshal to arrest them on a complaint filed in the United States district court in San Francisco. Thereafter they were indicted in the United States district court, as indicated in the record. I am also informed that nothing was done in the State courts after that until the request of the Attorney General to continue the cases until next term, when the State court brought in an indictment for felony on one of the charges pending therein and upon which the defendants have been arraigned.

The indictment for conspiracy found in the record upon which the case was set for trial was the only indictment in United States courts upon which defendants were arraigned until Wednesday of this week. Last Wednesday the defendants were arraigned on second indictment—United States court—the contents of which are not at hand.

It seems to be the main feature of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who spoke about the abandonment of the 5-weeks-old babe in its mother's arms, and according to his own statement he shed half a bushel of tears right down there this morning over that proposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Gentlemen on that side applaud the abandonment of a 5-weeks-old baby.

Mr. CLAYTON. They are applauding the fact that you were able to shed half a bushel of tears over it. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. You on that side can not shed tears over the abandonment of a 5-weeks-old baby. I can.

Mr. CLAYTON. We have the very ludicrous position of the gentleman from Illinois, getting down before this House and shedding tears and keeping on shedding tears. He could not make any case before this House or before the country, and, to use the Latin phrase, hinc illæ lacrimæ, "hence these tears," of which he has shed half a bushel. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] You have got no case; therefore you cry.

Mr. MANN. We have got a good case without crying.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have heard of lawyers trying to laugh cases in or out of court, and sometimes trying to cough cases in or out of court, and sometimes trying to cry them in or out. You have got no case, and you know it. You have failed on your facts. Your indictment has fallen to the ground. You are ashamed of your miserable performance, and you come here now and shed repentant tears this morning. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KAHN rose.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman from California will not be nervous, after all the time he took the other day. I have only 60 minutes, and the gentleman spoke 2 hours.

Mr. KAHN. But I yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh, I will have to do it.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman does not want to yield he need not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has yielded.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Alabama has not yet informed the House who called upon the Attorney General on the night of the 16th of May and got him to send that telegram stopping these cases. That is one of the things that my resolution tried to develop.

Mr. CLAYTON. If I were to judge some other parties in another case where intervention was sought to arrest the proceedings of the Department of Justice, I might attribute undue interference with the administration of public justice to the gentleman from California himself, for in a well-known criminal case out there, where two or three prostitutes in California, and, I believe, foreign prostitutes, were brought into this country and were being handled by the Department of Justice, the gentleman from California submitted a letter, accompanied by a pathetic letter from a lawyer out there, in their behalf. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Oh, the gentleman's resolution simply called for certain documents and papers. He did not in his resolution inquire as to who got the Attorney General or anybody else to send any telegram. You wanted the papers. That is all you called for, and you got them.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, I will.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman's constituents appeal to him to present a matter to the Department of Justice, does he refuse?

Mr. CLAYTON. No; I do not. And I may also say that I have been prosecuting attorney, and when I thought it right and proper to continue a case I did so; and you did it, and every other prosecuting attorney has done so at some time; and that is all there is in this case.

Mr. KAHN. The right of petition has not yet been obliterated.

Mr. CLAYTON. Nobody denies that. I hope the gentleman from California, if he has got any questions to ask, will confine himself to questions. Do not lose your interrogation point. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman made some statements when I was speaking, and I did not object.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want in this connection to commend to the gentleman from California something I will read from a Book that he may have heard of. I read from the Gospel according to St. Matthew, Chapter VII. When the gentleman comes to consider the Attorney General and to criticize people, he may think of himself and think of what he has done. The Scripture says:

1. Judge not, that ye be not judged.
2. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.
3. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?
4. Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye?
5. Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Search the Scriptures, follow the teachings of the lowly Nazarene, and you may yet hope to reach the dignity of a full-grown American statesman. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. I do not know why they applaud over there; I suppose it is because it is new to that side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois and all other gentlemen must first get leave to interrupt.

Mr. MANN. I was making a remark to my side companion.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman was looking directly to the gentleman from Alabama. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Sam Jones, in a sermon a long time ago, said, when he was interrupted by some miserable old unwashed sinner: "Go it, my brother, it's only the hit dog that hollers." Let the gentlemen over there holler if they want to. I will say to the Speaker that I will try to take care of myself the best I can, but let them holler. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, as to this resolution. What was done with it? It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Judiciary Committee investigated all the facts fully from start to finish. It went over every paper in the files of this case, and incidentally all the files in some cases that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] had a great deal to do with and tried to delay or defeat justice. Now, I do not criticize him for that; perhaps he thought it was his duty to do it, but he should take the beam out of his own eye before he discovers a mote in somebody else's, or somebody will say, "Thou hypocrite." [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Now, then, as to the Western Fuel case. The gentleman said something about that. As a matter of fact, in the Western Fuel case a nolle prosequi was refused, and severance was finally granted by whom? Not by the Attorney General, but by Assistant Attorney General Harr.

Mr. Speaker, let me say right here, by way of digression, that this House in the nature of things knows it is utterly impossible for the Attorney General to carry in his mind all the detail workings of that great department, with some nearly one hundred judicial districts, with that many district attorneys, with some ninety-odd district courts. It is impossible with this multitude of business for him to keep in his mind the details of all the various transactions. All he can do is to exercise over most of those cases a sort of supervision, for the country knows that since the present Attorney General has been in office he has been compelled to give most of his attention to measures of the largest national importance. He has been compelled to consider the Pacific Railroad merger. He has been compelled to consider the Tobacco Trust case. These are but few of the cases of great magnitude to which he has had to devote his time and attention.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was frank enough to say that the Attorney General could not have carried all the facts of the Diggs-Caminetti case in his mind, nor could he have carried all the facts of the Western Fuel case in his mind. But the criticism of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] leveled at the Attorney General on account of the Western Fuel case is not well taken. Mr. Harr handled that particular matter and made a severance, and is there anything unusual or horrible about that? I have here in my hand a statement given me by Mr. Harr himself, and so far as I know and believe, having come in contact with him for some years during his service in the Department of Justice, I believe Mr. Harr to be an able lawyer and a most estimable gentleman, notwithstanding the fact that he is a Republican. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I have no criticism to make of the Attorney General for retaining this Republican in office, for, strange as it may seem, in this day of the degenerate Republican Party, occasionally you can find an honest man still adhering to that old party. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I hold in my hand a memorandum of Assistant Attorney General Harr in regard to the postponement of the trial of two of the directors of the Western Fuel Co., and with the permission of the House I will insert it at this point:

Memorandum by Assistant Attorney General Harr in regard to the postponement of the trial of two of the directors of the Western Fuel Co.

My attention was first called to this case about June 14, when the Attorney General asked me to consider what Mr. J. S. Pringle had to say with reference to the matter. Accordingly I gave Mr. Pringle a hearing on the subject. He was asking that the cases as to Sidney V. Smith and Robert Bruce, two of the directors of the company, be nolle prossed, on the ground that, even assuming there was evidence of fraud on the part of those connected with the management of the company, there could be no evidence whatever connecting the two directors named, who, he said, were innocent. He stated to me what he understood to be the charges against the indicted parties; but as I had not examined the files in the case I told him to call the next day, when I could discuss the matter with him more intelligently.

Mr. Pringle came the next morning. In the meantime I had read carefully Mr. McNab's report of May 20 upon the case and observed the department's action thereon. When Mr. Pringle arrived I told him that the United States attorney's report disclosed that there was some evidence suggesting that the two directors referred to, Sidney V. Smith and Robert Bruce, might have had knowledge of the alleged frauds, and that therefore it would be impossible for me to recommend that the case as to them be nolled. Mr. Pringle then left, and I supposed that the matter was ended. I did not say anything to the Attorney General about the conclusion I had reached at that time.

A day or two later, to wit, on the morning of June 17, Mr. Pringle returned. He then showed me a copy of the San Francisco Bulletin of June 6, 1913. This, as I recall, he stated was the reason for his coming back to see me. The paper referred to contained an article about the Western Fuel Co. matter. It started with a dispatch from Washington reporting the effort to have the case as to Robert Bruce and Sidney V. Smith nolle prossed, and stating that such attempt had been unsuccessful. The article then stated that United States Attorney McNab had been shown the Washington dispatch and that he had refused to discuss it, saying that he had neither time nor the inclination to try the Western Fuel Co. case in the newspapers; that he believed all the parties indicted to be guilty, and that he would try hard to convict them. Then followed a statement as to the nature of the case and the evidence before the grand jury, which was stated at length. It was evident at once to me that this statement had been copied from Mr. McNab's report of May 20 to the Attorney General about the case, and a comparison which I made at the first opportunity after Mr. Pringle left showed that to be the fact. Mr. Pringle then proceeded to discuss the case with me in the light of the evidence as stated in this newspaper article. I did not advise him that the article was evidently taken from the United States attorney's report, although I do not doubt he assumed that it was a pretty accurate statement of the Government's case. He discussed the case with reference to the matters supposed to implicate Messrs. Bruce and Sidney V. Smith, upon the assumption that this was the evidence upon which the Government was relying. When he left I told him simply that I would discuss the matter with the Attorney General. During the day I did take up the case with the Attorney General. I called his attention to the publication of the evidence in the case in the Bulletin, manifestly taken from McNab's report, and he directed me to ask Mr. McNab to explain. I then referred to the nature of the evidence in the Western Fuel Co. case, and told him that I had reached the conclusion, upon reflecting over the matter, that the wise course to pursue, in order to avoid any possible injustice against these two directors, as to whose guilt I felt very doubtful, was to continue the cases as to them and simply try the cases of the three directors who were officers of the company and active in its management at this time, leaving the question as to the prosecution of the two directors named to be determined in the light of the developments on that trial.

The Attorney General approved my recommendation and authorized me to instruct Mr. McNab accordingly. I then prepared two telegrams—this being the afternoon of the 17th—one calling the attention of Mr. McNab to the publication in the Bulletin, manifestly taken from his report, and asking him to explain, and the other directing him to postpone the cases as to the two directors referred to. The telegram requesting the explanation as to the publication in the Bulletin was sent at once, but I held up the telegram directing the postponement over night, thinking I might receive a reply to the former telegram the next day. No telegram came from Mr. McNab on this subject on the 18th. On the evening of the 18th I had my secretary add the words "wire receipt" to the telegram directing the continuance of the cases as to the two directors. She did this, and, thinking I intended the telegram to be sent, had it sent without saying anything further to me about it. The next morning—June 19—Mr. McNab's telegram, dated June 18, was received by me. I then asked my secretary for the telegram to him which I was holding as to the continuance of the cases against the two directors, but she said that she had sent it. I told her that was all right, as I intended to send it anyhow.

Mr. Speaker, I think before we get through with this we will have the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] defending himself. Mark my words. It will not be a week from now before the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] will be getting up here either asking permission to explain his conduct or getting into the RECORD in some other way. I know prophesying is a dangerous thing, but I think he is going to have something to say about this matter in defense of himself.

In his partisan rancor and zeal he overshot the mark. He has been mixed up, as his correspondence shows, with some of the lawyers of some of these people who have been guilty of violation of the seventh commandment. I want to commend to him again to read the seventh commandment and to have nothing to do with scarlet women. Do not even write to the department appealing letters or submit appealing letters in their behalf. Let the scarlet women go the way of the unrighteous, and let the penalties of the law fall upon them. Do not transmit a begging letter of a lawyer or indorse it, and thereby ask consideration of the Department of Justice in behalf of those women who have been condemned under our immigration laws. We are trying to enforce the Mann white-slave law. We are trying to enforce the immigration law. We exclude such women, and yet you wanted them admitted to bail, and you submitted to the Attorney General—or you wanted a degree of leniency shown to them to which I do not think they were entitled, especially from your viewpoint of the Caminetti case. You want to punish everybody who has anything to do with such a case, to visit upon them not only condign punishment, but speedy punishment. The gentleman criticized the Attorney General for what he did in one case. May not the gentleman himself be amenable to criticism for interfering with the course of justice in another similar case?

Mr. Speaker, I want to read a letter of the Congressman, written from his high place. The puny little lawyer out there, the downfallen women, were all of no avail in their efforts, and they invoked the aid of a friend. They invoked the aid of a man high and mighty in power, close to the throne in the last administration, close to the fountain of justice, which, he said, should be pure and unpolluted. He goes to the fountain of justice in behalf of those miserable creatures, and he writes this letter:

House of Representatives, United States, Washington—

He was not going to let that escape the department—

San Francisco, Cal., September 6, 1912. The honorable the Attorney General, Washington, D. C. My dear sir—

Most of us say "Sir," but he said "My dear sir." [Laughter.]

I inclose letter from Thomas A. Keogh, Esq., which is self-explanatory.

I do not know any of the parties referred to in Mr. Keogh's letter, nor do I know any of the circumstances connected with the case, but I hope you may give the matter your kind attention and act in the premises in accordance with the custom in such cases.

Very truly, yours,

JULIUS KAHN.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Shame!

Mr. CLAYTON. The letter is beautifully worded. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] now may content himself. It is too hot now. The gentleman is generally amiable with me, and I hope he will be amiable to-day. So content yourself. I did not turn red in the face a single time when the gentleman was speaking. Now, he has turned red five or six times. Do not do it any more. I am afraid he will have apoplexy.

Now, listen to the letter of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]:

I do not know any of the parties referred to.

He does not know any of the parties. It is an innocent disclaimer. It may be true——

Mr. KAHN. It is true.

Mr. CLAYTON (continuing)—

I hope you may give the matter your kind attention.

Asking the kind attention of the Attorney General to the case. This seems to me an indorsement of the request made in behalf of these women who had violated the law.

With his high official indorsement, that letter goes to the Attorney General, and I shall ask leave, Mr. Speaker, to print that in the RECORD, and also the telegram from the same gentleman, dated San Francisco, October 3, 1912. It was not merely the submitting of the letters and letting it go at that that he felt his duty. Oh, no. He is not that sort of a man. He is tenacious when he starts out on a thing. So we find the gentleman from California sent this telegram:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., October 3, 1912.

UNITED STATES IMMIGRATION COMMISSIONER,
Department of Commerce and Labor, Washington, D. C.:

Friends of Louise Savart and Helene Morequa called to see whether department has taken any action on their request to be admitted to bail pending determination of appeal to United States Supreme Court from order denying writ habeas corpus. Will you kindly give matter prompt attention and advise action by wire?

JULIUS KAHN.

(October 4, 1912; 9.19 a. m.)

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, then, I shall ask to print that. Mr. Cable, Acting Secretary, answers:

(Telegram.)

OCTOBER 4, 1912.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
San Francisco, Cal.:

Question release Louise Savart and Helene Morequa on bail referred Attorney General.

BENJ. S. CABLE,
Acting Secretary.

Now, he could not get the Department of Justice to do just what he wanted and goes to the Department of Immigration and makes them do what the Department of Justice did not want done.

Let me read a memorandum from Mr. Cable, Acting Secretary of Commerce and Labor, as follows:

[Memorandum.]

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
October 15, 1912.

IMMIGRATION:

I have carefully read Mr. Harr's letter, and send it to you with the file. I do not see how I can very well refuse to release on bail the aliens in this particular case, in so much as I practically promised to do so if it were determined that I had the right. It will be difficult, perhaps, to refuse now in similar cases, but it need not necessarily result in adopting this as a general rule; and while each case will have to be decided by itself, I should say that in future we should probably follow the wishes of the Department of Justice. These three aliens may be released on bail.

B. S. C.

And another memorandum from the files of that department is as follows:

[Copy.]

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

As Mr. Cable says, this department is committed to the release of these particular aliens, and is therefore not free to conform to the wishes of the Department of Justice in these cases.

C. E.

Whom did they promise, let me ask, that they would turn down the execution of justice as the Department of Justice saw it ought to be and appeal to the Department of Labor and carry out the wishes of these people who had violated the law? Evidently the gentleman from California himself, when he defeated the Department of Justice of having its way in those cases, appealed to the Immigration Department and had his way. Now:

[Telegram.]

IMMIGRATION SERVICE, OCTOBER 15, 1912.
San Francisco, Cal.:

Release Mrs. Dubois, alias Lena du Puis; Louise Savart, alias Alphonsince Dirken; Helene Morequa, alias Mme. Delaporte; and Marie Cardonnol under bond one thousand each, pending Supreme Court decision, by direction Acting Secretary. Letter follows.

KEEFE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the matter before the House. I make it because he has only a few minutes in which to discuss the matter before the House, and he has not commenced that yet.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will see the impropriety of that observation, and I trust that this is not coming out of my time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insists on his point of order, the Chair will have to sustain it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am discussing it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it is evident that the gentleman does not intend to discuss the case before the House, I will not make the point of order.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there are——

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON]?

Mr. CLAYTON. For just a question. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 46 minutes of his 64 minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire the House to understand that the letters he has just read into the RECORD answer the question why the Attorney General, on May 16, sent that telegram?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I decline further to yield to the gentleman. The gentleman from Alabama is making the application in this case to the gentleman from California, who criticizes the Department of Justice and the Attorney General. The resolution does not call for any reason, and perhaps a resolution calling for a reason would not have been privileged. It called for the papers, and they have been produced and are now before the House. I have stated this several times. The gentleman seems not to have heard me. And the gentleman from Alabama is defending a great Democratic official; when Republican officials, placed in high positions, have departed from the line of rectitude they are defended by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. I decline to yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. CLAYTON. Of course that is a common form of horseplay. When gentlemen on the other side are getting the worst of it, it is their pleasure to inject irrelevant matters or foolish questions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes; "the gentleman from Alabama declines to yield," and again the gentleman informs you, pointing at you directly, that he will not yield to you. I do not know your name or where you are from. I hope to learn both.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama is violating a rule which every Member of long service ought to observe.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman from Alabama understands the rules equally as well as the gentleman from Illinois does, and does not violate them any oftener than he does. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will observe the rule.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House is that gentlemen must address each other in the second person, and there is good sense in the rule.

Mr. CLAYTON. If you gentlemen on that side will subside, the gentleman on this side will soon be through. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. We are all gentlemen on this side.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope that the gentlemen on that side will act as gentlemen and not interrupt the gentleman from Alabama simply because he is opposing the gentleman's bald political play here. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to put into the RECORD these letters relating to this Savart case, to which I have referred, in order to do full justice to the gentleman from California and in order that the full facts may be shown. I see the gentleman nods his approval.

Mr. MANN. They have all been read, have they not?

Mr. CLAYTON. They were not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman already has leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. CLAYTON. I wished everybody to know what I was doing. Some new, fresh gentleman on that side might object [laughter], and if there is going to be any objection I want him to object now. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], with his long experience, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], with his long experience, are unable to handle their case, and hence we find a new volunteer rushing in now and then. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Speaker, even personal malice and partisan rancor may at times overshoot itself, and it has clearly done so here. It was Assistant Attorney General Harr who advised his chief, in the interest of justice, not to try Bruce and Smith until the cases against other directors of the Western Fuel Co. had been heard, and he, too, has fallen under the ban of Mr. McNab's condemnation and is included in the newspaper campaign which Mr. McNab and his friends seem to have inaugurated against the Department of Justice.

On the 24th of June, 1913, Mr. McNab rushes into the San Francisco Examiner in a statement that Assistant Attorney General Harr had interfered with the prosecution of immoral women who had been ordered deported by the local immigration officers and had ordered certain immoral women to be admitted to bail. As usual, correspondence of Mr. McNab's, or portions of it, were furnished to the papers and liberally quoted from. I read from the San Francisco Examiner of June 24, 1913:

The French women who were admitted to bail on orders from Washington, said to have issued from Harr, were Lena du Puis, Helen Morequa, and Louise Savart. This order was made after McNab had in letters and telegrams to Harr told of the supposed attempts at bribery and had protested against every proposal of leniency in their cases. * * *

After this communication had been sent to Washington, Harr replied that after conferring with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor he had given orders that the women be admitted to bail. He prefaced his declaration with a long interpretation of the law in the case, which he construed as meaning that bail should be withheld only in "exceptionally notorious cases."

"If these cases were not notorious, I do not know what you could say about them," said McNab. "Every one of the women against whom we had proceeded were of exceptionally vicious character, and had been absolutely proven to have been engaged in immoral business, clearly in violation of the Federal statutes.

"When I was in Washington, after our campaign against these women had been blocked, I put this up to Harr as forcibly as I knew how, and told him that I thought it was an outrage to dismiss or admit to bail persons held on such charges.

"Harr has interjected himself into this case by volunteering a defense of McReynolds. If you ask who Harr is, my reply is that he is the man who has blocked our performance of our duty by overruling in summary and high-handed manner the finding of the courts and the proven testimony gathered by the immigration officials here."

So says Mr. McNab. If you ask me who Mr. Harr is, I answer that he has been for 10 years in the Department of Justice as an Assistant Attorney General appointed under Theodore Roosevelt, continued under William H. Taft, and, so far as I know and believe, subject to no criticism, except that he is a member of the Republican Party. The Democratic Party is not responsible for his appointment and I hold no brief in his defense. That might better come from those of his own political faith; but, after inspecting correspondence on file with the Department of Justice and investigating the facts in the case as referred to, I do not hesitate to denounce the attack on him by Mr. McNab as wholly false, unfounded, and malicious.

I shall ask leave to insert in my remarks at this point, without reading it, Mr. Harr's own statement of the circumstances, and a memorandum by Assistant Attorney General Graham, which are as follows:

Memorandum by Assistant Attorney General Harr.

My attention has been called to the following statement in the Sacramento Union, of June 24, 1913, in regard to certain cases that arose and were disposed of during the last administration:

"United States Attorney John L. McNab, while awaiting a reply from President Wilson to his telegram of resignation to-night, launched another broadside at Washington by exposing an indirect attempt to bribe him in a white-slave case, and by declaring that Assistant Attorney General Harr, even though advised of this attempt at corruption, overruled the judgment of the United States district court and ordered released from custody three notorious French women who had been ordered deported from the United States. Mr. McNab made the direct accusation that Harr has, for some unknown reason to himself, distinguished himself during his occupancy of office by violating a procedure of the United States courts and releasing women of notorious character from arrest and deportation orders, even when apprised of an indirect attempt to bribe the prosecutor of the cases against these women. It was declared by McNab that Harr by undue interference in cases brought by the Government against Lena du Puis, Helen Morequa, Louise Savart, Valerie Calmels, Marie Louise Calmels, Marious Calmels, Marie Cardonnel, and Pedro Garcia, the latter alleged to be a wealthy keeper of a Vallejo house of ill fame, had succeeded in blocking many efforts of the United States attorney's office here to suppress white slavery and deport prostitutes."

The statements that I ordered the release from custody of three notorious French women who had been ordered deported, and by undue interference had succeeded in blocking many efforts of the United States attorney at San Francisco to suppress white slavery and deport prostitutes, are unqualifiedly false, and are inconsistent with the records of the department and of Mr. McNab's own office, as the latter personally knows. The official correspondence between Mr. McNab and myself in regard to the cases named in the above publication shows that I was in thorough sympathy with his view that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor should not admit to bail alien prostitutes ordered deported pending the prosecution of their appeals in habeas corpus proceedings, and that I earnestly cooperated with him in endeavoring to put a stop to any such practice. It is true Mr. McNab did not agree with the department as to the authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to admit to bail pending an appeal in a habeas corpus proceeding; but this was simply a difference of opinion on a question of law, this department concurring in the view of the Solicitor of the Department of Commerce and Labor that the Secretary had the power in question. At the same time, I had earnestly cautioned the Secretary against the exercise of the power, in view of the invidious consequences that might ensue, and Mr. McNab was so advised. If any of the women referred to were admitted to bail, such action, as Mr. McNab was advised, was taken by the Department of Commerce and Labor in the exercise of its own discretion and with knowledge of the fact that the Department of Justice deprecated the exercise of such power.

Notwithstanding the difference of opinion on the question of the power of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to admit aliens to bail in such cases, Mr. McNab wrote the department expressing his appreciation of the cooperation and support rendered him by this department, through me, in this matter. The following is a copy of his letter on the subject:

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR THE
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, October 21, 1912.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to your letter of October 12, 1912, "163123-4 & 10, W. R. H.-W. C. H.," I beg to express my appreciation of your action in writing to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, urging that the right to appeal in the case of deportable aliens who have resorted to the court for relief should be exercised only in the most exceptional cases. The cases in which the honorable Secretary of Commerce and Labor has issued the order admitting to bail are about as flagrant as any that will be found in the department. These women are notorious keepers of resorts and not merely women who are occupying them. Therefore, I think it extremely unfortunate that the Secretary should have exercised his discretion in these particularly flagrant cases. However, my particular reason for feeling strongly about these cases arises from the following facts:

The class of men who interest themselves in cases of this description usually comprises saloon keepers, gamblers, and others of like ilk. These men have got in touch with every one who is even remotely acquainted with anyone in this office, and have not hesitated to throw out all manner of hints that if this office would only abandon its opposition to bail any amount of money could be had for the favor. Generally, that class of individuals deals with police courts and ordinary State courts, and I was particularly anxious to teach them a lesson by letting them understand that the Federal courts and the Department of Commerce and Labor are not responsive to any suggestion of that description. Of course, you will understand that these people do not get word to this office or to anybody in the Federal department in a form which will permit us to seize them or charge them with crime, but in a hundred different ways have caused the suggestion to be made to others and conveyed to us. For this reason, I think it peculiarly unfortunate that the department has exercised its discretion in favor of the women, and I trust that the Attorney General will not regard me as overzealous if I conscientiously and vigorously insist in each case as it comes up that bail should not be granted. The doorway is now opened to a new method of practice. All that these people desire is to secure writs of habeas corpus, have them denied, and then during the long interim between adjudication here and final decision at Washington, have the women at large.

I trust that I am not troubling you too much if I ask you to convey my reasons, as herein stated, to the honorable Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I regret that my views do not concur with yours on the legal aspect of the case. I still adhere to my opinion that the Department of Commerce and Labor has no right to admit to bail, and hope that an opportunity may some time arise in which the question can squarely be presented to the court.

Appreciating your attitude and thanking you for your support, I beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

J. L. MCNAB,
United States Attorney.

The statements of Mr. McNab as to the character of these women and the reasons for not admitting them to bail were, as Mr. McNab was advised, at once communicated by me to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor with the statement that "this department feels that the views of the United States attorney at San Francisco as to the local conditions there are worthy of careful consideration."

The matters above stated related to the cases of Lena Depuis, Helen Marequa, Louise Savart, and Marie Cardonnel. There appears to be nothing on our files about the Pedro Garcia case, and my attention was never called to that case until the publication in the Sacramento Union of the article referred to.

As to the two Calmels women, the records of the department shew that they had been ordered deported by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor along with their husbands and father, upon the ground that the women were employed in a house of prostitution, the one as a chambermaid and the other as a housekeeper, and the men on the ground that they were "receiving, sharing in, and deriving benefits from the earnings of prostitutes."

They instituted habeas corpus proceedings and brought their cases to the Supreme Court. Upon an examination of the cases, it being my duty to prepare them for argument in that court, I came to the conclusion that those against the men could not be sustained, because the records therein, including the records in the deportation proceedings before the Department of Commerce and Labor, failed to show that the women were prostitutes, but, on the contrary, indicated that they were honest women, living with their husbands, nor was there any suggestion that they had been prostitutes before their arrival in this country. In view of this state of facts, I advised the Department of Commerce and Labor that the Secretary had exceeded his authority in ordering the deportation of the men, and that it would be advisable, in order to avoid an adverse decision by the Supreme Court, to revoke the orders of deportation in their cases. I also submitted for the consideration of the Department of Commerce and Labor whether, since the evidence indicated that the women were honest, although employed in a house of prostitution, and therefore within the letter of the statute, they came within the real purpose of the statute, and whether it would not be well to revoke the orders of deportation as to them also. In this view the Secretary of Commerce and Labor concurred, and for that reason set aside the orders of deportation as to all the Calmels family, whereupon the appellants dismissed their appeals.

WILLIAM R. HARR,
Assistant Attorney General.

MEMORANDUM BY MR. GRAHAM.

As pointed out by Mr. Harr in the above statement, the cases referred to in Mr. McNab's charges against him, as reported in the Sacramento Union of June 24, 1913, arose and were disposed of during the last administration.

Mr. Harr's statement shows what scurrilous and unfounded attacks may be made upon public officers who are simply endeavoring honestly to discharge their duty.

It is interesting to note in this connection—not, however, for the purpose of making any suggestion of improper conduct on the part of the public official concerned, but simply for the purpose of showing how an entirely proper and considerate act may involve such an official in malicious attack by evilly disposed persons—that the case of two of the alleged notorious French women (Helen Marequa and Louise Savart), whom Mr. McNab is reported to have charged Mr. Harr with having improperly ordered released from custody, was first called to the attention of the department by the Hon. JULIUS KAHN, Representative from California, who has so zealously taken up the cudgel in support of Mr. McNab's scurrilous attack upon the Attorney General.

The files of this department show that Mr. KAHN, under date of September 8, 1912, transmitted to the department a letter to him from Thomas A. Keogh, an attorney of San Francisco, requesting his assistance in behalf of the two women referred to. According to the records, Mr. KAHN was advised by Mr. Harr, as Acting Attorney General, that, as the trial court had denied the writ of habeas corpus in the case of these women, under the rules of the Supreme Court the defendants could not be admitted to bail by the trial court pending their appeal, but that, as they were then in the custody of the immigration officials, it was possible the Department of Commerce and Labor would have power to act in the matter, and accordingly a copy of his letter and inclosures had been transmitted to that department for its consideration.

Now, if one were disposed to be evil-minded, and, as Mr. McNab charges, these notorious women were admitted to bail through improper influences, who would such an evil-minded person suggest as having exerted such improper influence? Of course, there is no foundation, in fact, for any such suggestion of improper influence in this matter on the part of Mr. KAHN. Every fair-minded person knows that he could have had no improper purpose in bringing the cases of these two unfortunate women to the attention of the Department of Justice, but unfortunately such are the little things upon which calumny breeds and grows and spreads and by which a man's fair character is defamed, because so many people are not fair-minded, and so many people, with political or other axes to grind, are disposed to prey upon the lust for scandal that lies in the human heart and so frequently overpowers the good therein.

It is also an interesting commentary upon Mr. John L. McNab's ideas of the proper relationship between a district attorney and the Attorney General that, under date of June 24, 1913, he wrote the department, excepting to the department's view as to the admissibility of a certain letter about which he had written the department, and stating that, although his letter was written subsequent to his resignation and could in nowise affect his future conduct, the department "might be glad to know that the United States attorneys in various districts feel that they are crippled whenever suggestions as to how they should or should not conduct cases are sent to them by the department." This statement, in view of the fact that it is the duty of the Attorney General under the law to supervise the conduct of United States attorneys, is rather curious to say the least. Of course, the Department of Justice does not ordinarily instruct United States attorneys as to the minute details of their cases, and there was no disposition to do so in the case to which Mr. McNab referred. But he had written to the department, asking that it furnish him with a letter which was in its possession for the purpose of using it as evidence, and the department felt called upon to instruct him as it did in the particular instance.

The correspondence with special reference to the two cases of Helen Morequa and Louise Savart is interesting from more than one point of view, and I ask the particular attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to it, because of the personal familiarity which he has with the facts and circumstances attending it. When we inquire how the cases were called to the attention of the department, we find that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was himself the intermediary by whom this was done. Under date of September 5, 1912, Mr. Thomas A. Keogh addressed to him a letter, which is as follows:

KEOGH & OLDS,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
San Francisco, September 5, 1912.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
Merchants Exchange Building, San Francisco, Cal.

MY DEAR SIR: There are two foreign women now confined at the immigration station at Angel Island, who were apprehended for deportation under an act of Congress with relation to aliens being in any manner connected with houses of prostitution. Both of these unfortunate creatures had been in the United States for about 12 years before the passage of the amendment of the act under which they were arrested. They were conducting the premises from which they were taken, and after the customary hearing before the immigration commissioner, the proceedings were forwarded to Washington and an order was made for their deportation. They had been admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000 pending the disposition of their cases by the Immigration Commission, and immediately upon the above order coming from Washington they surrendered themselves to the immigration commissioner for this station. An affidavit for a writ of habeas corpus was made and the court simultaneously made an order admitting them to bail in the sum of $2,000. The writ was denied and the prisoners removed to the custody of the immigration commissioner, where they have been confined for about one month. An appeal has been taken to the superior court of the United States, but no bail has been fixed pending the hearing and determination of the same. As it will undoubtedly be some time before the cases are disposed of, it certainly seems a hardship upon these unfortunate women to keep them incarcerated pending a determination of the same without bail.

It is for that purpose that I address this communication to you, soliciting whatever valuable assistance you may be able to render in the premises. The women are none too well physically and, like most of these unfortunates, become broken in health after a few years of the hardships they undergo, and that, together with their confinement, would naturally bring about a more serious state of ill health. I have been requested by several of their friends to ascertain if it were not possible to obtain an order releasing them on bail pending the determination of their appeal. Aside from that I have no interest whatever in the proceedings, and my services are gratuitous and principally from a humane standpoint of view, as I feel that it is certainly a hardship upon the women to keep them in restraint in view of the above circumstances.

You are personally acquainted with my standing in the community, both as a citizen and practitioner, and know that in all my acts I have endeavored to deal fairly and justly with all conditions and all classes.

With the aforesaid object in view and knowing you to be always willing to assist any unfortunate creature, who by reason of their lot has entered the darkened world of the abandoned, I address this communication.

The names of these two women are Helen Marequa and Louise Savart.

Thanking you for any assistance you might render, I remain,

Sincerely, yours,

THOS. A. KEOGH.

And on the 6th day of the same month Mr. KAHN transmitted it to the Attorney General with the request for his kind consideration. What followed can best be told by reading the following letters from Mr. Harr to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, under date of September 12, 1912. Mr. KAHN'S letter of transmittal is as follows:

(House of Representatives United States, Washington.)

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., September 6, 1912.

The honorable the ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose letter from Thomas A. Keogh, Esq., which is self-explanatory.

I do not know any of the parties referred to in Mr. Keogh's letter, nor do I know any of the circumstances connected with the case, but I hope you may give the matter your kind attention and act in the premises in accordance with the custom in such cases.

Very truly, yours,

JULIUS KAHN.

Here are the letters from Mr. Harr:

(163681–1.)

SEPTEMBER 12, 1912.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
San Francisco, Cal.

SIR: The department is in receipt of your letter of the 6th instant inclosing, for my consideration, a letter addressed to you by Thomas A. Keogh, Esq., an attorney in your city, in which he requests that this department take action looking to the release on bail of two women now being held for deportation by the immigration authorities for some violation of the laws respecting aliens, the execution of the order of deportation, however, being suspended until an appeal which they have perfected in certain habeas corpus proceedings instituted by them has been finally determined.

As the trial court denied the writ in the first instance, under paragraph 1 of rule 34 of the Supreme Court rules, the defendants could not be admitted to bail by the court pending their appeal. As they are now, however, in the custody of the immigration officials, it is possible that the Department of Commerce and Labor would have power to act in the matter. I have accordingly transmitted a copy of the correspondence to that department and have also written Mr. Keogh along these lines.

Respectfully,

W. R. HARR,
Acting Attorney General.

(163681–1.)

SEPTEMBER 12, 1912.

The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your information, a copy of a letter, and its inclosures, received from Hon. JULIUS KAHN, in which it is desired to have action taken looking to the admission to bail of certain women now being held for deportation by representatives of the Immigration Service of your department, the execution of the order, however, being suspended pending the determination of an appeal which it is stated these defendants have perfected in certain habeas corpus proceedings.

I have advised Mr. KAHN, and also Mr. Keogh, that as the trial court had denied the writ, under paragraph 1 of rule 34 of the Supreme Court rules, they could not be admitted to bail by the court, but that as they were now in the custody of the immigration officials, perhaps your department might be in a position to grant the desired relief, if thought proper.

Respectfully,

W. R. HARR,
Acting Attorney General.

(Inc. No. 18995.)

From Mr. Harr, on the same date, to Mr. Thomas A. Keogh, and also to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]:

(163681-1.)

SEPTEMBER 12, 1912.

THOMAS A. KEOGH, Esq.,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco, Cal.

SIR: I have received, by reference from Hon. JULIUS KAHN, your letter of the 5th instant addressed to him, in which you urge that action be taken which will result in the admission to bail of two women now being held for deportation by the immigration officials for some violation of the laws relating to aliens, it being stated that the execution of the order has been stayed until an appeal which they have perfected in certain habeas corpus proceedings instituted by them can be determined.

As the trial court, according to your representation, denied the writ, under paragraph 1 of rule 34 of the Supreme Court rules, they could not be admitted to bail by the court pending the appeal. However, as they are now in the custody of the immigration officials, it is possible that the Department of Commerce and Labor would have the power to grant the desired relief. I have accordingly transmitted a copy of your communication to that department for its action.

Respectfully,

W. R. HARR,
Acting Attorney General.

From Mr. Harr to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor on October 9, 1912:

OCTOBER 9, 1912.

The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, in reference to the release, by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, on bond, of certain alien women who are now held in custody by the immigration officers at San Francisco, together with certain inclosures and two opinions of the solicitor of your department, one dated January 21, 1909, and the other dated September 25, 1912.

It appears from the papers that these women were taken into custody and warrants of arrest issued pursuant to sections 20 and 21 of the immigration act of February 20, 1907 (34 Stat., 904, 905). After hearing, and upon due consideration of all the facts, warrants for the deportation of the aliens were issued by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Before these warrants could be executed, petitions were filed for writs of habeas corpus on their behalf, and orders were issued to show cause why the writs should not issue. On the hearing the United States circuit court refused to issue the writs and dismissed the petitions, and remanded the aliens to the custody of the immigration officers. From this order denying the writ an appeal has been taken on behalf of the aliens to the Supreme Court of the United States. The aliens now desire to be released from custody on bond under the provisions of section 20 of the act of February 20, 1907, but the United States attorney at San Francisco is opposed to such a course, on the ground that the aliens are still in a sense in the custody of the court, and that to allow them to go at large on bail would be contrary to rule 34, subdivision 1, of the rules of the Supreme Court, which provides: "Pending an appeal from the final decision of any court or judge declining to grant the writ of habeas corpus, the custody of the prisoner shall not be disturbed."

After having given due consideration to the two briefs of the Solicitor for the Department of Commerce and Labor, and to the arguments of the United States attorney at San Francisco, I have reached the conclusions: First, that the power of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to release aliens under a bond as authorized by section 20 of the immigration act is effective up to the time of the actual deportation of the aliens and is not limited to the time when the order of deportation is made. On that point it does not seem necessary to add anything to the opinion of the solicitor of your department of January 21, 1909; second, that the rule of the Supreme Court referred to above clearly indicates that the custody of the Department of Commerce and Labor shall be undisputed in cases where the petition is denied and shall be left with all the legal incidents it had prior to the application for the writ, of which one is the possibility of a release on bail by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, under section 20, aforesaid. This is necessarily so, because the writ is denied for the reason that the petitioner's own showing make out no case to justify an interference by the court with his present custody, and the only action the court would take in any event would be to remand him to the same custody. (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2, 110, 111.) I therefore agree with the opinion of the Solicitor of Commerce and Labor dated September 30, 1912, and I am satisfied that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has the power to release these aliens on bail, notwithstanding their petitions for habeas corpus and their appeals from the orders denying these petitions.

It is to be observed that the release of the aliens on bail, pending these appeals, will not conflict with any possible action by the Supreme Court.

In your letter, however, you state that you intend to act in these cases on the view that the executive authority to arrest and hold an alien in confinement for means of making deportation effective; that aliens held for deportation are entitled to their liberty so far as may be consistent with that end; and that it is no part of the duty of the department to exercise its authority in such a way as to constitute its treatment of aliens a punishment for having been found in the United States in violation of the immigration law. If you mean by this that these aliens are entitled as of right to release upon bail in every case where an appeal has been taken from an order denying a writ of habeas corpus, I am unable to concur. The denial of the writ means that the petitioner has made out no probable case for release from the custody in which he is held and that custody should not be disturbed. To hold the aliens in custody after such an order, and pending an appeal therefrom, is not a punishment of them but is merely making the law effective, and differs not at all in principle from the custody which takes place between the original hearing and the order of deportation.

Upon the hearing of the petition for a writ of habeas corpus the correctness of the finding of the immigration officials can not be questioned. Upon that point they are the final judges. The only questions which can be raised on such an application are: First, the jurisdiction of the commissioners; second, whether the hearing was such as to constitute due process of law; and, third, whether the law is constitutional. The judgment of the circuit court refusing the writ is an adjudication that there was not even probable ground for supposing that the detention of these aliens was in any respect unlawful. If, therefore, they choose to take an appeal from that order, they voluntarily subject themselves to such further detention as may be necessary pending the appeal.

The policy of permitting aliens to be released on bail pending appeal in cases of this character is one to which this department strongly objects, and I think it should only be entered upon in cases of an exceptional character. If it becomes universal, appeals will be prosecuted in all these cases merely for the purpose of delay, the aliens will be put to costs and expenses for no useful purpose, this department will be burdened with the conduct of cases of this character, and the execution of the law will be brought into disrepute. The United States attorney at San Francisco, in a telegram received to-day, states that if these parties are admitted to bail the department will be flooded with similar applications, and that the utmost these parties can desire is release during a long period awaiting decision on appeal, during which their practices are as flagrant as before. Where the case is one which admits of doubt as to the validity of deportation the United States circuit court will undoubtedly grant the writ. Where it refuses to grant the writ the only conclusion can be that the case is a frivolous one, and that the aliens' only desire is to escape the enforcement of the order of deportation during the period the appeal is pending.

Respectfully, for the Attorney General,

W. R. HARR,
Assistant Attorney General.

From Mr. McNab to the Attorney General, under date of September 27, 1912:

SEPTEMBER 27, 1912.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Recently three disreputable women, namely, Lena de Puis, Helene Morequa, and Louise Savart, were ordered deported by the immigration authorities. The action of the immigration authorities was approved by the District Court for the Northern District of California. Appeal was perfected to the Supreme Court. Bail was refused. In this respect the cases are identical with that of Marie Cardonnel, whose case you will find by referring to your letter "WRH WCH 143937-31."

A persistent effort has been made by the attorneys for these women to have them admitted to bail, despite the rules of the Supreme Court. I am not advised what arguments or facts have been presented to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor relative to the release of these women. I presume much has been made of the seeming hardship of keeping them in detention pending the long period of appeal to the Federal Supreme Court, but as I represented to you in the case of Marie Cardonnel, the only way that we can put a stop to the practice encouraged by the attorneys for these women is to relentlessly insist upon the enforcement of the rule of the Supreme Court, which forbids bail in these cases.

In this matter I have the most active and vigorous support of the immigration authorities at Angel Island. The Immigration Commissioner will, however, of course yield to the advice and follow the instructions of his superior. Yesterday I was informed that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor had wired to the commissioner here, instructing him to consent to the release of the three women above named on bail of $1,000 each. Doubtless the honorable Secretary of Commerce and Labor was under the impression that the court here had the power to release. Appeal having been perfected, jurisdiction here is of course lost. The custody of the immigration officials is purely technical and subordinate to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

I have your assurance, contained in the above-described letter of August 12, 1912, that you will oppose any attempt to have the Cardonnel woman admitted to bail. I thank you for this assurance, and I most respectfully ask that if application is made on behalf of any of the above-named three women the same resistance be offered to the motion. There would be some justification for our action in refraining from resisting bail if there was any merit in the cases presented, or if the women were women of decent character. In view of the admitted fact that they are not, and that their presence here is a menace to society, I feel that we are not only justified in resisting bail but would discourage the Immigration Service here if we were to consent to bail.

Respectfully,

J. L. MCNAB,
United States Attorney.

From Harr to Mr. McNab, under date of October 12, 1912:

OCTOBER 12, 1912.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
San Francisco, Cal:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th ultimo and your telegram of the 7th instant, both relating to certain aliens who were ordered deported by the immigration authorities, and I desire to thank you for the zeal you have shown in this matter, which the circumstances entirely justify.

After giving your telegram careful consideration, and also considering the briefs submitted by the Solicitor for the Department of Commerce and Labor, I feel convinced that the Department of Commerce and Labor has the right under section 20 of the Immigration act to release these aliens on bail at any time prior to their actual final deportation, and that the rule of the Supreme Court does not affect this right, but merely leaves the custody of the aliens as it was before, subject to all its prior legal incidents, including the right to release on bail. It is to be observed that the release of the aliens on bail pending their appeals will not conflict with any possible action by the Supreme Court.

I have, however, written to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, strongly urging that this right should be exercised only in the most exceptional cases, and submitting to him your arguments as to the evils which would ensue from the practice of releasing aliens on bail. I do not believe that in the future he will exercise this right except in very strong cases, if any, although I am under the impression that he feels himself obligated to release the particular aliens to whom you refer on account of promises he has made to that effect.

For the Attorney General,

W. R. HARR,
Assistant Attorney General.

From Mr. McNab to Mr. Harr under date of October 21, 1912:

OCTOBER 21, 1912.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to your letter of October 12, 1912, "163123-4 and 10. W. R. H. W. C. H.," I beg to express my appreciation of your action in writing to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor urging that the right to appeal in the case of deportable aliens who have resorted to the court for relief should be exercised only in the most exceptional cases. The cases in which the honorable Secretary of Commerce and Labor has issued the order admitting to bail are about as flagrant as any that will be found in the department. These women are notorious keepers of resorts, and not merely women who are occupying them. Therefore I think it extremely unfortunate that the Secretary should have exercised his discretion in these particularly flagrant cases. However, my particular reason for feeling strongly about these cases arises from the following facts:

The class of men who interest themselves in cases of this description usually comprises saloon keepers, gamblers, and others of like ilk. These men have got in touch with everyone who is even remotely acquainted with anyone in this office and have not hesitated to throw out all manner of hints that if this office would only abandon its opposition to bail any amount of money could be had for the favor. Generally that class of individuals deals with police courts and ordinary State courts, and I was particularly anxious to teach them a lesson by letting them understand that the Federal courts and the Department of Commerce and Labor are not responsive to any suggestion of that description. Of course, you will understand that these people do not get word to this office or to anybody in the Federal department in a form which will permit us to seize them or charge them with crime, but in a hundred different ways have caused the suggestion to be made to others and conveyed to us. For this reason I think it peculiarly unfortunate that the department has exercised its discretion in favor of the women, and I trust that the Attorney General will not regard me as overzealous if I conscientiously and vigorously insist in each case as it comes up that bail should not be granted. The doorway is now opened to a new method of practice. All that these people desire is to secure writs of habeas corpus, have them denied, and then during the long interim between adjudication here and final decision at Washington have the women at large.

I trust that I am not troubling you too much if I ask that you convey my reasons as herein stated to the honorable Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I regret that my views do not concur with yours on the legal aspect of the cases. I still adhere to my opinion that the Department of Commerce and Labor has no right to admit to bail, and hope that an opportunity may some time arise in which the question can squarely be presented to the court.

Appreciating your attitude and thanking you for your support, I beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

J. L. MCNAB,
United States Attorney.

From Mr. Harr to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor under date of October 29, 1912:

OCTOBER 29, 1912.

The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you that I am in receipt of a letter from the United States attorney at San Francisco in reference to the matter of allowing alien prostitutes who have been ordered deported to be released on bail pending their appeal, and I take the liberty of quoting a portion of the United States attorney's letter for your information:

"These women are notorious keepers of resorts, and not merely women who are occupying them. Therefore, I think it extremely unfortunate that the Secretary should have exercised his discretion in these particularly flagrant cases. However, my particular reason for feeling strongly about these cases arises from the following facts:

"The class of men who interest themselves in cases of this description usually comprises saloon keepers, gamblers, and others of like ilk. These men have got in touch with everyone who is even remotely acquainted with anyone of this office, and have not hesitated to throw out all manner of hints that if this office would only abandon its opposition to bail any amount of money could be had for the favor. All that these people desire is to secure writs of habeas corpus, have them denied, and then during the long interim between adjudication here and final decision at Washington have the women at large."

This department feels that the views of the United States attorney at San Francisco as to the local conditions there are worthy of careful consideration.

Respectfully, for the Attorney General,

W. R. HARR,
Assistant Attorney General.

Under the same date to Mr. McNab and from the Acting Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Mr. Cable, to the Attorney General under date of November 1, 1912:

OCTOBER 29, 1912.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY, San Francisco, Cal.:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant in reference to allowing bail to aliens who have been ordered deported and who have appealed their cases, and to advise you that I have communicated the substance of your letter to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

For the Attorney General,

W. R. HARR,
Assistant Attorney General.

NOVEMBER 1, 1912.

The honorable the ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of October 29 (WRH–163681–3), quoting a portion of a report received from the United States attorney for the northern district of California, in reference to the subject of allowing alien prostitutes who have been ordered deported to be released on bail pending an appeal from an order denying the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus.

The views of the United States attorney, together with the opinion expressed in your communication of October 9, 1912, in reference to the same subject, will receive careful consideration in connection with future cases that may arise.

Respectfully,

BENJ. J. CABLE,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. McNab tells us that Assistant Attorney General Harr directed that these women be admitted to bail, and yet he knew that, as this correspondence shows, Mr. Harr had written to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor strongly urging that this right should be exercised only in the most exceptional cases, calling his attention to the evils which would arise from the practice of it. This does not conclude the interesting documents bearing on this subject.

The good offices of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] with reference to these individuals were not exhausted when he had transmitted the letter of Mr. Keogh to the Department of Justice, for later, on the 3d of October, 1912, we find him wiring the telegram which I have already read.

The memoranda from the files of the Department of Commerce and Labor to which I have heretofore called attention speak for themselves as to these cases and make it clear beyond all possibility of dispute by any candid mind that, in the language of the memoranda themselves, the Department of Commerce and Labor was not able to follow the wishes of the Department of Justice, represented by Mr. Harr, but admitted to bail the aliens in these particular cases because it had promised to do so if it had the right.

I do not know to whom this promise was made, whether to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] or some one else; but, certainly, no matter to whom it was made it was carried out against the wishes of the Department of Justice, against the recommendations of Mr. Harr, and any statement to the contrary is false upon its face and could only have been resorted to in the effort to pile one misrepresentation upon another.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, in justice to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], that I make not the slightest insinuation against him of any improper conduct in this matter. No doubt, in communicating to the Department of Justice and to the Department of Commerce and Labor, he did no more than any other Member might have done at the request of a constituent; but how easy it would be, if malice were to be met with malice and insinuation with insinuation, to give to the entirely innocent conduct of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] in this matter a color as damaging as it would be false. In these days when the character of all public men seems a favorite subject of attack, when suspicion is equivalent to accusation, and accusation in turn equivalent to conviction, does it not behoove the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], as well as others in public life, not to join in a hue and cry lest they themselves become its victim?

I dismiss Mr. McNab and his charges against Assistant Attorney General Harr with the reading of a letter written by him on the 13th day of March, 1913. Before reading it, I ask to have it remembered that the charge against Mr. Harr has to do with things which happened in the year 1912, at which time, according to Mr. McNab, he was engaged in blocking "our performance of our duty." Compare with this eleventh-hour indignation of Mr. McNab and his present rage against Mr. Harr this letter written by Mr. McNab on the 13th day of March, 1913, which I will read.

Is it not inconceivable, Mr. Speaker, that any man should for personal aggrandizement or partisan malice exhibit himself in an attitude so bristling with untruth and inconsistency? I now read the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, March 13, 1913.

WM. H. HARR, Esq.,
Assistant Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HARR: I wish to express to you my heartiest congratulations on the victory of the Government in the recent white-slave cases.

I know full well the character of work which you performed in those actions, and I have before me your masterly brief which you prepared for submission to the court and which I have not the slightest doubt most strongly influenced them in bringing them to the conclusion which they have so sweepingly expressed.

I look back to my meeting with you in Washington with the greatest pleasure and hope that we may have an opportunity to meet frequently.

Yours, very truly,

J. L. MCNAB,
United States Attorney.

MARCH 19, 1913.

Hon. JOHN L. MCNAB,
San Francisco, Cal.

MY DEAR MR. MCNAB: Thank you very much indeed for your letter of congratulations on the victory of the Government in the white-slave cases. I appreciate your commendation and the remembrance which it indicates very highly. In addition, as the saying goes, "A little flattery now and then is relished by the wisest of men."

It was a real pleasure to meet you, and I join in the hope that that pleasure may be frequently renewed. I may add that, from the remarks that have been made about you, you made a number of friends here in Washington on your recent trip.

Yours, sincerely,
W. R. HARR.

That was just three days after this case was started.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another significant feature to this case. A news dispatch was sent out from Washington on June 20, which evidently reached San Francisco and was called to Mr. McNab's attention on the same day; for that night he made haste to send a night lettergram to the President, containing his resignation, and the President promptly accepted it. He could not have done otherwise, because Mr. McNab himself took that course. The news dispatch referred to is as follows:

[From San Francisco Examiner, June 21, 1913.]

M'NAB AND FISK ON THE TOBOGGAN—FEDERAL ATTORNEY AND POSTMASTER MARKED FOR SLAUGHTER.

WASHINGTON, June 20.

In addition to the skids which are being carefully prepared for Postmaster Arthur Fisk, of San Francisco, another set is being greased for United States District Attorney John McNab, who will be replaced by a Democrat.

No reason save that of political expediency is given for replacing McNab. He will soon receive an invitation to resign, and is expected to accept the suggestion as one of the fortunes of politics.

It is understood that a request for Fisk's resignation may be made any day, and that he and McNab will probably go out at the same time.

Gentlemen complain about McNab's "removal." Mr. McNab removed himself. He did it in a fit of passion, and the President merely says in effect, in accepting his resignation, you leave me no alternative; you wholly misunderstand the reason for the order that was given to you; you have acted hastily, you have made an undue reflection on the Department of Justice, and you peremptorily put in your resignation, and there is nothing left to be done but to accept it.

And if McNab had acted with any sense of proper decency, with a regard to the public business, he would have done as a district attorney in another State recently did, whom the Attorney General contemplated removing from office. The Attorney General wrote him a letter, which meant he was going to remove him from office for the good of the service. This district attorney wrote back a respectful reply, saying, in effect, that the court was soon coming on, that there were some cases there that he thought he could handle better than anybody else. The Attorney General let him stay there and hold that court; and I dare say, had McNab acted decently and respectfully here, he would be in charge of the prosecution of these cases in California to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He left no alternative, and I think it is really for the success of this administration and for the good of the public service that he no longer was allowed to serve under this great Democratic administration.

I read the following excerpt from an editorial appearing in the San Francisco Star of June 28, 1913, on McNab's resignation:

But—and bear this point in mind—the incidents to which McNab refers occurred in September and October, 1912, before Wilson was elected President or McReynolds could have been thought of for Attorney General.

In view of the reason given by McNab to Attorney General McReynolds and President Wilson for resigning the office of district attorney—because he was hampered in the performance of his duty—is it not "passing strange" that he did not tender his resignation in September or October last to Attorney General Wickersham and President Taft?

Surely he had as much cause to do so then as he had last week.

I now submit McNab's resignation and the President's acceptance.

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 24, 1913.

JOHN L. MCNAB, Esq.,
San Francisco, Cal.:

I greatly regret that you should have acted so hastily and under so complete a misapprehension of the actual circumstances, but since you have chosen such a course and have given your resignation the form of an inexcusable intimation of injustice and wrongdoing on the part of your superior, I release you without hesitation and accept your resignation, to take effect at once.

WOODROW WILSON.

[Telegram.]

[The White House, Washington, 11.40 a. m., 21st.]

10 WU JM 460 NL

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 20, 1913.

The PRESIDENT, Washington, D. C.:

I have the honor to tender my resignation as United States attorney for the northern district of California, to take effect immediately. I am ordered by the Attorney General, over my protests, to postpone until autumn the trials of Maury Diggs and Drew Caminetti, indicted for a hideous crime, which has ruined two respectable homes and shocked the moral sense of the people of California, and this after I have advised the Department of Justice that attempts have been made to corrupt the Government witnesses, and the friends of the defendants are publicly boasting that the wealth and political prominence of the defendants' relatives will procure my hand to be stayed through influence at Washington. In these cases two girls were taken from cultured homes, bullied and frightened, in the face of their protests, into going to a foreign State, were ruined and debauched by the defendants, who abandoned their wives and infants to commit the crime. On receipt of the Attorney General's telegram I prepared my resignation, to take effect at the conclusion of the trial of the Western Fuel directors and the J. C. Wilson stockbroker cases, both of which I had instituted and which I wished to bring to a successful conclusion before I could send my resignation. I received another telegram from the department ordering me to postpone the cases against certain defendants of the Western Fuel Co., and not to try them unless ordered by the department. In bitter humiliation of spirit I am compelled to acknowledge what I have heretofore indignantly refused to believe, namely, that the Department of Justice is yielding to influences which cripple and destroy the usefulness of this office. I can not consent to occupy this position as a mere automaton and have the guilt or innocence of rich and powerful defendants, who have been indicted by unbiased grand juries on overwhelming evidence, determined in Washington on representations on behalf of the defendants without notice to me. I seem unable to convey to the department an understanding of the serious situation in which its action will leave this office. If the department in future is to review the findings of grand juries and nullify their indictments, then this office might as well be abolished, for its functions will have ceased to exist. Neither my private honor nor sense of public duty can permit me thus to destroy the prestige of this office. With profound respect and regret that such step is necessary, I have the honor, in view of my absolute inability to agree with the department, to ask that I be, by wire, immediately relieved from duty in order that the Department of Justice may be permitted to carry out its policy in these cases without further obstruction by me.

JOHN L. MCNAB.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 24, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: Allow me to acknowledge with sincere appreciation your letter of to-day, giving me a full account of the way in which the Department of Justice has dealt with the Diggs-Caminetti and the Western Fuel Co. cases, pending in California, and transmitting the documents connected with the two cases necessary for their elucidation. I am entirely satisfied that the course you took in both these cases was prompted by sound and impartial judgment and a clear instinct for what was fair and right. I approve your course very heartily and without hesitation; but I agree with you that what we may think of what has been done does not relieve us of the obligation to press these cases with the utmost diligence and energy. I approve very heartily of your suggestion that, in the circumstances, special counsel be employed—the ablest we can obtain. I will be very glad to confer with you about the selection. I hope that you will do this without delay. I am very glad indeed that you are giving your personal attention to the immediate and diligent prosecution of the cases, which I agree with you in regarding as of serious importance from every point of view.

Sincerely, yours,
WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. J. C. MCREYNOLDS, Attorney General.

(167096–13.)

JUNE 24, 1913.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In view of the somewhat heated and sensational dispatches given to the press by United States Attorney McNab on Saturday, June 21, in connection with his resignation, and the widespread misapprehension which would naturally result thereform, I desire to lay before you the facts relating to the Caminetti-Diggs case and the Western Fuel Co. case, to which he refers.

The department was closed on Sunday, June 22, and it was not until yesterday that I had opportunity fully to acquaint myself with the contents of all the files and confer with my assistants. I send you herewith what, I am informed, are the complete files in each case, and specially request that you examine them with particular care.

DIGGS-CAMINETTI CASE.

The earliest paper in the files relating to this case is a "report made by C. Herrington," dated March 26, 1913, the pertinent part of which follows:

"Farley Drew Caminetti, a married man about 27 years of age, residing in Sacramento and connected in some clerical capacity with the State government, in company with Lola Norris, and Maury I. Diggs, a young married man of about the same age, residing in Sacramento, in company with Marsha Warrington—who, like Lola Norris, is a young unmarried girl about 19 years of age, also the age of the Norris girl—left Sacramento for Reno via Southern Pacific Co. in the early morning of March 10, 1913.

"On arrival at Reno they registered at the Riverside Hotel, Diggs under the name of C. E. Enright and wife, of Los Angeles, and Caminetti under the name of F. F. Ross and wife. They remained there one night, occupying connecting rooms. The next day Diggs, who appears to have furnished all the money, rented a cottage in the outskirts of the city from Real Estate Agents Peck & Sample, of Reno; bought a supply of provisions, coal, etc., and the party went to housekeeping. They remained there for three or four days, when they were taken into custody by Chief of Police Hillhouse, of Reno, and Chief of Police William Johnson, of Sacramento, on accusations against the men for having violated a State law.

"They waived extradition and returned voluntarily to Sacramento. To Assistant District Attorney F. F. Atkinson, of Sacramento, William Johnson, and Arthur D. Ryan, of the detective force of Sacramento, they admitted the foregoing facts, but they all claimed that their purpose was not an immoral one and that there had been no illicit carnal intercourse among any of them on the trip or after arrival at Reno.

"It appears that the young men claimed to be unhappy in their marital relations, they had become attached to these girls, and that as their intimacy had become known in Sacramento, and as one of the papers was about to print a "scandalous story," they decided that it would be best for all concerned to leave the country for a time until the affair had blown over. That after residing for the statutory period (six months) required by the Nevada law, they would secure divorces from their wives and marry these girls.

"The girls were interrogated at considerable length by Mr. Atkinson, but insisted that there had never been anything that was improper, though there had been much that was imprudent, in their relations with the young men. Some of Miss Warrington's clothes were found in the room occupied by Diggs and some of Miss Norris's clothes were in Caminetti's room.

"If the story of the girls is true, it is indeed an exceptional state of affairs.

"Caminetti is the son of a State senator, and all of the four are prominent in social life of Sacramento. A great deal of publicity was given the affair, and the friends of the wives, as well as those of the two girls, were greatly incensed against the young men.

"Informations were filed against Caminetti and Diggs, charging them with violating the white-slave traffic act. There will be a hearing before the United States commissioner the latter part of this week unless defendants waive examination, and the matter will be presented to the grand jury by the United States attorney, who requests the assistance of this office in investigating the matter, and, unless otherwise advised, I will give the matter attention."

On May 16 I wired McNab, directing him to forward me a full report and take no further affirmative action in the case until further advised. In response he wrote such a report, under date of May 21, and this reached me on the 27th. In this, which covers more than a dozen typewritten pages, he details a version of the facts, with his inference therefrom, and expresses the opinion that the case was aggravated and should be vigorously prosecuted; also that there might be attempts to interfere with the due course of justice by improper influences.

On the same date, May 27, I replied by wire, saying:

"I think proper course is for you to set the cases and proceed with them as you have planned, and you are so directed."

The matter needing no further immediate consideration, it, of course, passed out of my thoughts. This litigation is only one of a great number of cases pending in the department, some phases of which are constantly being brought to my attention for suggestions or directions, and it is utterly impossible for me to carry in my memory the details of them all.

I had no occasion to give the matter any further special consideration for some three weeks—June 18—when Secretary Wilson telephoned to me and told me of the embarrassment in which he was placed by the request from the elder Caminetti, father of one of the defendants, for leave of absence in order to attend the trial of his son. The elder Caminetti, as you know, is the newly appointed Commissioner of Immigration. The Secretary explained the exigencies of his department, which he thought imperatively required the presence here of the commissioner. He has written me a letter stating his recollection of the circumstances, and I herewith inclose it.

Impressed by Secretary Wilson's statement of his embarrassment, and desiring, of course, if possible, to relieve him, without stopping to go through the files and so refresh my recollections concerning any particular circumstances of the case, I sent the United States attorney the following telegram:

"The Secretary of Labor advises it is a matter of public importance that Commissioner of Immigration Caminetti remain at his post here. I do not now wish Government to be in position of insisting upon trial of young Caminetti and Diggs, charged with violating white-slave law, during enforced absence of the father, who is performing necessary public duties. In view of all facts, you are instructed to postpone trial of these cases until the autumn."

The postponement of a criminal case, so recently instituted as this was, is not an unusual proceeding; and it did not occur to me that any malign motive would be attributed to me. If I had anticipated that any fair-minded man, knowing the facts, would place such a construction upon this ordinary act, I would have been scrupulously careful to avoid it. It is essential, not only that the administration of justice shall be free from partiality or improper influence, but that even the appearance of such things should be avoided. I do not even hope to escape mistakes; but I am profoundly conscious that my actions are free from unworthy motives.

Mr. McNab, as United States attorney, held a position of peculiar trust and confidence, demanding the utmost loyalty to the department. If, as such an officer should do, he had availed himself of the opportunity to send a dispatch recalling my attention to the peculiar conditions which he thought rendered the proposed action inadvisable, as I had always theretofore done, I should have given earnest consideration to his suggestions, and with them before me, could have acted with the local conditions fresh in my mind. Instead of pursuing this manifestly proper course, he waited until June 20 and then published the sensational telegrams wherein he imputed base motives to me. His conduct has, of course, made it impossible for him to continue in the prosecution of this case, however desirable that otherwise might have been. Under the circumstances the only course open is to accept his resignation.

I therefore suggest an immediate conference between us for the purpose of selecting some counsel whose ability, character, and reputation are so high as to insure the proper conduct of the case, and that he be put in immediate charge, with instructions promptly and vigorously to prosecute it to a conclusion.

WESTERN FUEL CO. CASE.

This is an indictment against five directors of the Western Fuel Co., charged with participating in a conspiracy to defraud the Government on coal drawbacks. It was found in February last.

So far as I can recall, there was no occasion for me to give this case any personal consideration until April 30 last, when I received a letter from Secretary Lane, in which he inclosed one from Sidney V. Smith, a defendant, without recommendation. Mr. Smith's letter sought to show that the things complained of were done by others; that although he was a director he was not a participant in any criminal act, and that the case should be dismissed as to him.

I sent a copy of the Smith letter to District Attorney McNab, with a request for his views. On May 20 he replied, giving a review of the evidence, and expressing the view that all five of the defendants should be prosecuted. I thereupon advised the district attorney of my concurrence in his conclusion, and directed him to proceed.

Thereafter, as I recall, Mr. Pringle, a San Francisco lawyer, representing either Smith or Bruce, or both, came to see me. I turned him over to Assistant Attorney General Harr, with instructions to give the matter particular and careful attention. After considering all the facts Mr. Harr finally concluded that the just solution of the situation was first to prosecute the three who were both directors and officers of the company, and that the case against the other two should be deferred until he could examine the evidence presented and determine the propriety of further proceedings. He reported this conclusion to me. I thought it right, and in pursuance of our understanding he sent the district attorney the following telegram:

"Upon further consideration of matter, department feels grave doubt as to guilt of Sidney V. Smith and Robert Bruce, indicted in Western Fuel Co. case. In order to avoid possible injustice, you are instructed to continue case as to them until after the trial of the other three directors, who were officers of the company and active in its management. If latter are convicted, copy of proceedings at trial should be sent department, in order that it may determine what course should be pursued in regard to the two directors named. Wire receipt."

The receipt of this is one of the reasons alleged by Mr. McNab for giving out the dispatches described above and for imputing base motives to me.

I am still of opinion that the course recommended by Mr. Harr in respect of this case is the proper one to pursue. But in view of the insinuations spread broadcast by the district attorney, and for the same reasons as those stated for similar action in the Diggs-Caminetti case, special counsel should be selected to prosecute the cause under like instructions as those suggested there, and I think we should have an immediate conference for this purpose.

Respectfully,

J. C. MCREYNOLDS,
Attorney General.

(167096-13.)

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 25, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. MCREYNOLDS: In view of the published statements that influence has been brought to bear upon you through the Secretary of Labor to postpone the trial in the Diggs-Caminetti case, I desire to state to you that neither Commissioner General Caminetti nor anyone else either requested or suggested to me that I should ask you to postpone the trial.

The Department of Labor has been but recently created. It is in a formative state of organization. Congress has provided funds for the payment of the salaries of the Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Solicitor, private secretary and confidential clerk to the Secretary, and private secretary to the Assistant Secretary. Funds have not yet been provided for the other clerical help necessary for the proper organization and operation of the department. Consequently every person connected with the department has been working to his full capacity in an effort to keep up with the business. That is particularly true with regard to the Immigration Service. Any leave of absence at this time would seriously impair the service.

Before Mr. Caminetti took the oath of office he informed me that it would be necessary to ask for leave of absence in order to be present at the trial of his son. About the middle of June he again called my attention to his desire for leave of absence. I pointed out to him the difficulties we had to contend with; that the department was in a formative state; that we had large contracts for feeding the immigrants at Ellis Island and other ports of entry to consider and dispose of; that Hindu immigration to the Pacific coast via Hawaii and the Philippine Islands was becoming an acute problem which ought to be worked out at as early a date as possible; that allegations were continuously being made that Chinese were being smuggled into the United States in violation of the Chinese-exclusion laws; that the administration of the immigration laws generally would require his close application for some time to enable him to grasp the details of the methods used by the department in enforcing the law; and that, in view of these conditions, it was imperative that he should remain here for a considerable period in order that he might assist in the work in this emergency and acquaint himself with the problems we had to work out. That, then, when he went to the Pacific coast he would be in a position to inspect the various immigration stations in a manner which would give beneficial results. I then asked him if it would not be possible for him to secure a postponement of his son's trial until the next term of court, so that he could attend the trial of his son and on the same trip inspect the Immigration Service on the Pacific coast. He replied that he did not know whether a postponement could be obtained or not; and I stated to him that I would take the matter up with the Attorney General and ask for a postponement of the case, with a view to carrying out the suggestion I had made. It was pursuant to this suggestion that I called you up on June 18, stated the circumstances, and asked for the postponement, which was granted.

Respectfully, yours,

W. B. WILSON,
Secretary.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the scope of this "white-slave traffic act," as it is called in the last paragraph of the law itself. I want here to take occasion, although I may exhaust a part of my time in doing so, to say that every man in this House would profit by reading the report on the white-slave traffic act of June 25, 1910, presented by the gentleman from Illinois. It does him great credit, both as a lawyer and a statesman, and it is a valuable contribution to the legislative literature of our country. I wish I had time to read from it. I shall avail myself of the opportunity of printing the text of his report as an appendix to my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, in accordance even with the view of the gentleman from Illinois and the view of the Supreme Court, as expressed in the Florida case and in the Texas case, and in accordance with the views expressed by the former Attorney General, the present Attorney General has done nothing whereby it can with the least semblance of truth be charged that he is trying to invalidate or to nullify by inaction the success of the white-slave traffic act. I hold in my hand here memoranda prepared for former Attorney General Wickersham of cases of alleged violations of this act and his instructions with regard to the same indorsed thereon. I shall make brief reference to the cases now and will print the memoranda in full as an appendix to my remarks.

On December 12, 1911, Gertrude De Witt, 15 years old, was taken on a freight train caboose and carried to another State for a criminal purpose. Mr. Wickersham directed that the prosecution be turned over to the State authorities.

On March 21, 1912, in the case of Boyce, out in Texas, who had run away with Mrs. Sneed, the Attorney General said that was a case for the State courts, not for the Federal courts.

On June 22 James Monroe had taken Helen Gergley, a 14-year-old girl, in an automobile from St. Louis across the State line into Illinois. The facts in that case were perhaps more harrowing than in this case, for in the Diggs-Caminetti case the girls were 19 years old and they went knowing where they were going and for what purpose. This 14-year-old girl, Helen Gergley, was taken in an automobile from the city of St. Louis over into Illinois, out into the woods, and there that helpless 14-year-old child was outraged. She was of humble parentage. The man told her that he wanted her to go to his house to be the nurse for his children. Then he ran her over into another State and outraged her. Yet Attorney General Wickersham gave instructions that the State authorities be allowed to handle that case. I am not criticizing Mr. Wickersham, for whom I have high esteem.

Then there was the case of Elizabeth Maloney, on June 22, 1912, and another case of November 23, 1912, in which a man named Long, a deputy sheriff of Philadelphia, enticed Laura and Catherine McClintock, aged, respectively, 15 and 17 years, to a clubhouse on the Jersey coast and there committed with them and permitted some of his friends to commit with them acts too shameful and indecent to be named here. Yet in all these cases Attorney General Wickersham instructed that they be left for the State courts to deal with. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the critics of the present Attorney General, I have no doubt, would defend Attorney General Wickersham if he were assailed.

The editorial from the Washington Post of July 30 referred to is as follows:

THE CALIFORNIA PRECEDENT.

While Attorney General McReynolds makes it quite clear that there is to be no postponement of the Diggs-Caminetti case, and that he has not issued any instructions to the various Federal attorneys to construe the Mann "White Slave" Act only in a literal sense, it has become apparent to most lawyers that this act is being stretched to cover cases which should be handled by the States.

Such cases as the one that has stirred the resentment of all decent citizens in California should be prosecuted vigorously. The State authorities, however, and not the Federal Government should do the prosecuting. The "white-slave" act was designed to put an end to the traffic in women for immoral purposes, to prevent the importation of women from one State to another for purposes of profit.

The Federal Government, in the Diggs-Caminetti case, is virtually establishing the principle that prosecutions affecting domestic infelicities or seduction should be handled from Washington rather than by the States themselves. It would be just as logical for the Department of Justice to institute prosecutions against burglars who ply their trade in one State but dispose of their illegal profits in another on the ground that they are violating the interstate-commerce act.

If the Mann "White Slave" Act is stretched to cover such cases as the one in California it will mean a stretching of all other Federal statutes to cover purely local offenses. The prosecuting attorneys of the States and counties might then surrender all their functions to the Washington authorities.

The Attorney General is right in permitting the Diggs-Caminetti case to be tried under the "white-slave" act, for the simple reason that it has been made a political issue, and turning the prosecution over to the State authorities, within whose province the matter lies, might be misconstrued and create scandal.

Nevertheless care should be taken to avoid any further invasion of State territory, the danger being not mere usurpation of functions belonging to the States, nor costly duplication, but failure of the States to diligently prosecute certain cases on the theory that the Federal Government would attend to them later on.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that there really remains but little else to be said about this matter. For lack of justifiable facts to support the complaint made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and therefore for his lack of ability to make any argument touching the merits of this controversy, he, the gentleman from California, took occasion to say that the administration is embarrassed by want of candor. The gentleman narrows his whole case to this proposition. Let us refer to the facts: The Attorney General has been entirely candid, open, and communicative of every detail of the matter covered by the resolution. He gave every paper called for to the committee, and told a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary that he had done so and that he had no concealments to make. The committee by its unanimous report has, in substance, made this finding: Mr. McNab acted hastily and disrespectfully toward his superior officer. He himself, in a fit of passion or on account of the lure of possible political preferment and without a knowledge of the facts or without asking the Attorney General to reconsider his instructions, wired his unconditional resignation to the President. So there was no lack of candor here on the part of the present administration. The President had no alternative but to accept the resignation, and he has done so in a wise and statesmanlike utterance accepting the resignation. Great things—that is, great affairs of state—may sometimes perplex the present fearless and able Chief Executive; but neither he nor his Attorney General, who is assailed here, has done anything to embarrass the administration in the just and fair judgment of the American people.

The gentleman from California further says that all the papers in the file of the Department of Justice were not submitted to the committee. All the file papers were submitted to the committee, and a copy of the telegram, a note of which was printed in the report on House resolution 181 some days ago, has been forwarded by the Attorney General to the committee and is now embodied in the report on the pending resolution. The committee has found by its two reports, one on House resolution 181 and one on House resolution 212, that the Attorney General has furnished to the committee and to the House all the papers in his files touching this matter and every paper called for by the two resolutions.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] says that the Attorney General culled from Herrington's report. The Attorney General did no such thing. He furnished the whole of Herrington's report to the committee, and the committee furnished a part of that report to the House in its report on House resolution 181 and gave the reason why the committee did not furnish it all, the Attorney General having stated that he had no objection to the publication of all of it and left it to the committee to determine whether the publication of all of that report would be compatible with the public interest.

Thus one by one do the roses fall and the gentleman from California will be left in his moments for calm reflection to gather up these faded blossoms out of which he expected to make a blooming bouquet for his political ally, Mr. McNab. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] criticizes the Attorney General for making no memorandum of the telegram of May 16 sent from his hotel in Washington. His acting secretary, Mr. Cole, made such memorandum for him. He is hypercritical when he says that the Attorney General should have made the memorandum in his own handwriting. If the Attorney General should undertake to do all the clerical work of his department he would need a great deal of help and would not have any time to attend to the real business of his office. So this rose, so dear to the heart of the gentleman from Illinois, must likewise fade in the light of practical experience and common sense.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] fails to make any case against the Attorney General and therefore resorts to the cheap trick of pretending to weep over an abandoned babe. We have no excuse to offer for the inhuman father, and I hope that if the evidence shows his guilt he will be speedily and adequately punished. The gentleman can not divert the attention of the House from the fact that he and his colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] have utterly failed to show any ground for real criticism of the Attorney General. The truth is, that as soon as the Attorney General was reminded of the gravity of the California case he directed its trial, and I am informed the case is set for trial on the 5th of this month. What will then be done with it is for the court, where this case ought to be tried instead of having been aired here, and aired for no public good, and merely in pursuance of a political horseplay. [Applause.]

Let me say a few words on behalf of the Judiciary Committee of this House, where I have served and worked so long. Those of you who were here last Congress will bear me out that the chairman of that committee gave no aid or comfort to those who made skullduggery attacks on Attorney General Wickersham. That committee reported every resolution of inquiry directed to the Attorney General which came to it. The committee then pursued the course that it has pursued here—brought the resolution back to the House without making any mud-slinging charges.

In no case did that committee encourage skullduggery against a Republican Attorney General and in no case did that committee attempt to use whitewash. Undisturbed by political frenzy the committee has pursued the same course here. There is no mud to fling on the present Attorney General, and he needs no whitewash from that committee or from this House. This House has faith in the unanimous finding of that committee and in the unsullied character of the distinguished Attorney General. [Applause.]

Now, just a word as to the Attorney General. He is a man of character and ability and is above reproach. A former Republican administration invoked his great services in the prosecution of the Tobacco Trust, and this distinguished lawyer conducted that prosecution to a successful conclusion, so that the Tobacco Trust is not now oppressing all of the people. Down in Kentucky "where the meadow grass is blue" and where those good people raise most of the burley tobacco of the country, the farmers are selling that great product in competitive markets at a fair price and are no longer compelled, as they were compelled when the Tobacco Trust was in full sway there, to sell their product at 5 or 6 cents per pound, but are now getting, according to grade I believe, from 9 to 30 cents per pound. Down there this man, abused here by some Republicans, is revered and honored. The country cried out against the Pacific Railroad merger. This maligned Attorney General broke up that merger, and yet did not precipitate a panic by having thrown on the market some $130,000,000 of railroad securities. I print as an appendix to my remarks an account of the settlement of this case. This work stamps Mr. McReynolds not only as a great lawyer, but as a thoughtful and constructive statesman and a faithful official. [Applause.]

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] refers to the present administration. He need not be apprehensive on that score. The Democrats of the country voted last year to make Woodrow Wilson President. Every man who voted for Taft hoped and prayed that Woodrow Wilson would be elected, and every man who voted for Roosevelt likewise hoped and prayed that Woodrow Wilson would be triumphant in the last presidential contest. [Applause.] He and this Democratic House have been given the commission of the American people. This House will help make the laws of the country, and Woodrow Wilson as the Chief Magistrate will live up to his high obligations and see to it that the laws of the land, every one of them, are faithfully executed.

Those now in control of national affairs can not be deterred from their course of rectitude by the carping criticisms uttered here or elsewhere. We have and will continue to have, I hope indefinitely, a good government at Washington in the interest of all the people of our beloved country. [Applause.]

APPENDIX A.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
June 22, 1912.

I have the honor to invite your attention to two complaints of alleged violations of the white-slave traffic act, which have been brought to the attention of agents of this bureau.

1. James Monroe, an ex-convict, as the result of an advertisement, called at the home of Helen Gergley, a 14-year-old girl in St. Louis, and employed her as a nurse for his alleged twin babies. He stated that he would return for them in two or three days. He did return and took the girl from St. Louis to a point in Illinois, where they left the cars and went some distance into the woods, where he threw her upon the ground, showed her a bottle of poison, threatened her with death if she made an outcry, and raped her. He then took her back to St. Louis on a car leaving the Illinois point in the middle of the night. She immediately complained to an officer on reaching St. Louis, and the man is now a fugitive. The girl is poor, but is said to be absolutely good and pure. Her parents are poor, but entirely respectable and their reputation excellent.

The district attorney at St. Louis desires to prosecute this man in the Federal court for violation of the white-slave traffic act. Should we proceed with this investigation, or should it be turned over to the State authorities for a prosecution for rape?

Considerable data has already been gathered which will be useful in apprehending this man, and as our facilities for locating him are probably superior to those of the local authorities in Illinois, it seems to me that we may, in any event, cooperate with them in endeavoring to locate the defendant.

2. James Cartwright Rust, of this city, married, went to Chicago two years ago to obtain a divorce, met Elizabeth Maloney, now 18 years of age, a girl of excellent reputation and character, proposed marriage to her, eloped with her on January 27, 1912, took her to St. Joseph, Mich., where he secured a license to marry her from the proper officer, showed it to her, explained to her that that constituted a lawful marriage in Michigan, lived with her as husband and wife, returned with her to Chicago, in one month deserted her and abandoned his divorce proceedings. She is now in a delicate condition. Rust is in this city, or near by, and asserting his desire to marry her as soon as he can secure a divorce from his present wife. He is also endeavoring to have the girl join him, and is apparently considering joining her in Chicago. He is said to have caused trouble for other girls. One of Rust's brothers has written the girl's mother, condemning his actions and excusing him on account of his mental condition, but as to this alleged infirmity we have no information.

It appears that they arrived in St. Joseph about 9.30 p. m., too late to obtain a marriage license, and that the license was not obtained until the following morning, although they stayed at a hotel together that night.

Should this investigation be proceeded with?

Respectfully submitted.

A. BRUCE BIELASKI,
Acting Chief Bureau of Investigation.

Indorsement of Attorney General Wickersham:

1. Turn this over to the local authorities and cooperate in every way with them in bringing the man to justice. (In handwriting of Attorney General Wickersham.)

Indorsement of Attorney General Wickersham:

2. This, too, seems to be clearly a case for the local authorities. We should bring it to their attention and do everything possible to assist in the prosecution. (In handwriting of G. W. W., Attorney General.)

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,

Memorandum for the Attorney General.

I have the honor to submit herewith a letter from Special Agent Garbarino, who has charge of our office at Philadelphia, concerning the actions of one Harry Long in taking two young girls from Philadelphia to Stone Harbor, N. J. The situation seems to be very well and clearly stated in the agent's letter.

I have the honor to request your instructions as to whether or not a prosecution shall be instituted. If your decision is in the affirmative it would seem best that the proceeding should be in New Jersey.

Respectfully submitted.

A. BRUCE BIELASKI,
Acting Chief.

Indorsement of Attorney General Wickersham:

The conduct of these men was most reprehensible and deserving of punishment, but I don't think the offense is within that class the Mann Act was directed against, and therefore should not be prosecuted under it. (In the handwriting of G. W. W., Attorney General.)

White-slave matters.

A. B. BIELASKI, Esq.,
Acting Chief Bureau of Investigation, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Director of Public Safety Porter, through Lieuts. Tate and Wood, reported the following case to this office yesterday:

On Thursday, November 7, 1912, one Harry Long, a deputy sheriff in this city, took Laura and Catharine McClintock, aged 15 and 17, respectively, to Stone Harbor, N. J., saying they could spend a pleasant week at his cottage. He purchased the tickets, and on arrival there they found it was the clubhouse of the Quaker City Gun and Rod Club. A Mrs. Knox and son were the caretakers. That night Long had relations with Catharine, the youngest, and a man named Wallace, also of the sheriff's office, slept with Laura, but did not have intercourse with her. The same conditions existed Friday night. Saturday afternoon Long told the girls that a few gentlemen friends were coming from Philadelphia; he further told Laura if any of them wanted to stay with her he would see that they got money for it. That night Long would not let Catharine stay with anyone, he sleeping with her. Laura had intercourse with a man named Chick McDevitt, who offered to pay her $5, but never gave her the money, and one Sam Lane, an employee of the sheriff's office, who earlier in the evening had given her $2. Sunday some other friends came down, and they had two women with them, and one McCue offered Catharine money to stay with him. Sunday afternoon, about 20 minutes before train time, the girls said they were going to return to Philadelphia, which they did, alone. Long gave Catharine $5 for expenses.

I have interviewed both girls, one of whom is detained in the house of detention, and the other in the Magdalen Home; their stories agree. I further learned that their mother works out at service, and for the past two years they have been living with friends; that they were both seduced about a year ago by a young man named Riley; that since then they have from time to time had immoral relations with other men; Catharine was employed as telephone operator until they found she was too young, and then she was discharged.

Laura has worked at different places up to three months ago; as a result of a quarrel with Mrs. Harmon, with whom they lived, they left home about two weeks ago.

Catharine will be 16 next February, but looks to be about 18; Laura will be 18 in April—looks about 20.

While it appears that Harry Long has violated the Federal white-slave act, District Attorney Swartley has advised against prosecution, taking Judge McPherson's interpretation of the act as his reason, believing that one should not be prosecuted unless he traffics in the girls, sending them from house to house for purpose of prostitution; that Congress never intended that cases of immorality of such character as described above should be prosecuted in Federal courts.

In talking with Commissioner Finch over long distance this morning, he was of opinion that the case should be taken up in Federal courts. I immediately went to Commissioner Craig and explained the case, saying I would have it tried in the district of New Jersey. However, as defendants' witnesses were here he suggested the case be taken up in this district, whereupon I called on Assistant Douglas, who later took up case with Mr. Swartley with result as above. Personally saw Mr. Swartley later in day, and he advised against taking up case, as did Mr. Brinton.

All of persons involved are county officials. Long is a man past 50, as is Wallace, the youngest being McDevitt, who is about 38.

Will you advise me by wire in morning what further I should do in the matter—whether to take it up with United States attorney in New Jersey or the local prosecutor of Cape May County?

These week-end frolics of politicians at their favorite club houses along Jersey coast, generally taking prostitutes along, are quite frequent, but it certainly is overstepping the mark when youngsters like above are subjected to such treatment, notwithstanding they are immoral girls.

I am satisfied a prosecution in this district would be unsuccessful, in view of attitude of district attorney's office. We might fare better in the district of New Jersey. I doubt if the local prosecutor of Cape May County would get any results. If nothing else, as suggested by Mr. Brinton, I can put the matter up to Sheriff Acker, who no doubt would discharge the employees involved in this affair.

Very truly, yours,

(Signed) FRANK L. GARBARINO,
Special Agent.

(Not to be released until and unless advised of the anticipated action at St. Paul on Monday, June 30, about 10 a. m.)

APPENDIX B.

United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. and others.

To-day at St. Paul, Minn., the Union Pacific Railroad Co. and the Oregon Short Line Railroad Co. presented to the United States judges another petition wherein in substance they propose the following new plan for disposing of the $126,000,000 of Southern Pacific Railroad

Co. stock which in December last the Supreme Court decreed was unlawfully held by them:

1. They withdraw the plans heretofore proposed. These had been objected to by the Attorney General.

2. They ask permission to sell $38,292,400 of such Southern Pacific stock to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and to accept in exchange $42,547,200 Baltimore & Ohio Railroad stock, this being all of such stock owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. or any of its subsidiaries.

3. A trust company shall be appointed to receive and hold as custodian and depositary of the court and subject to its further orders and decrees the remaining $88,000,000 of said Southern Pacific stock which petitioners will then hold; and that they must also assign to the trustee the unpaid dividends thereon, commencing with the one due April 1, 1913. This stock will be registered in the name of the trustee, but can not be voted except by direction of the court.

4. Prior to November 1, 1913, the petitioners shall offer pro rata to all stockholders of the Union Pacific Co. the right to subscribe to certificates of interest to be issued by the trustee representing the Southern Pacific shares transferred to it, together with any accumulated dividends thereon, at a price which they shall specify, payable $25 per share at the time of subscription, remainder within a year, with 6 per cent interest. Negotiable receipts shall be given for part payments. Neither the petitioners nor anyone acting for them shall acquire any of such certificates; but, if necessary, any underwriting syndicate may be formed to take any not subscribed for by the stockholders.

5. The trustee shall execute and issue negotiable certificates, according to a prescribed form, representing the shares transferred to it, upon full payment of the subscription price. The holder of a full-paid certificate may, at any time prior to January 1, 1916, by presenting and surrendering the same to the trustee, receive the number of shares of Southern Pacific stock represented thereby, together with all dividends declared thereon, beginning with that of April 1, 1913 (but without interest), but only upon the express condition that he make an affidavit in the form prescribed showing in substance that he does not own in his own right any shares of the capital stock of the Union Pacific Railroad, that he is making the application in good faith in his own right, and that he is not acting for or on behalf of any stockholder of the Union Pacific Co., or in concert, agreement, or understanding with anyone seeking to control the Southern Pacific Co. in the interest of the Union Pacific Co.

6. The trustee shall pay over to the petitioners from time to time the money received for the beneficial certificates, and shall collect all dividends due or to become due upon the stock in its hands.

7. If after January 1, 1916, any certificates of interest remain outstanding the court may direct the trustee to sell the stock represented thereby and pay the proceeds to the lawful holders. The trustee shall become a party to the cause and shall at all times be subject to its orders and decrees. Any party may, whenever so advised, apply to the court for such further orders or decrees as may be necessary fully to carry into effect the decree of the Supreme Court. Provision will be made requiring the trustee to report to the court at frequent intervals, and likewise upon request to the Attorney General of the United States.

In response to the petition the Attorney General filed the following reply:

In the District Court of the United States for the District of Utah.

The United States of America, complainant, v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., and others, defendants.

REPLY OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE PETITION AND THIRD AMENDED PLAN OF THE ABOVE-NAMED DEFENDANTS.

On behalf of the United States, I respectfully submit the following reply to the petition filed June 30, 1913, by defendants Union Pacific Railroad Co. and Oregon Short Line Railroad Co. wherein they withdraw all pending plans heretofore presented and propose a third amended plan for disposing of the Southern Pacific Co.'s stock owned or held by them in violation of the antitrust act, as adjudged by the Supreme Court in a decision rendered December 2, 1912.

I.

The proposed sale to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. of 382,924 shares ($38,292,400) of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Co. now owned or controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Co. (being about 14 per cent of the total capital stock of the Southern Pacific Co.) in exchange for 425,472 shares ($42,547,200) of the capital stock of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., now owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. (being all of such stock held by the latter and 20.04 per cent of the entire share capital of the Baltimore & Ohio Co.), obviously goes far to separate the Southern Pacific Co. from the Union Pacific Co., and to that extent breaks up the particular unlawful combination between them assailed in the original bill and now before the court for dissolution. Moreover, it divests the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. of a large amount of the capital stock of an active competitor—the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co.—and thereby remedies a highly objectionable condition. So far as I am able to ascertain, such exchange would not result in creating any new combination in restraint of trade nor any other condition in violation of existing law.

Should the exchange be made, the Union Pacific Railroad Co. would then own 38.66 per cent of the capital stock of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. would own 14 per cent of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Co.

Since the proposed exchange would be a substantial step in the dissolution of the particular unlawful combination now under consideration, and at the same time would destroy the stockholding relation between two other actively competitive systems—the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore & Ohio—and since no new conditions contrary to existing law would result therefrom, I think the court may properly grant leave to make it, subject to the condition hereunder stated.

While the lines of the Pennsylvania system appear to be noncompetitive with those of the Southern Pacific system, and the lines of the Union Pacific system noncompetitive with those of the Baltimore & Ohio system, it is manifest that the Pennsylvania lines and the Southern Pacific lines do not connect so as to form a continuous route, nor do those of the Union Pacific and the Baltimore & Ohio.

Furthermore, while at present no Federal law forbids one railroad company from owning stock in another noncompetitive line, Congress may hereafter deem it advisable to change the national policy in that regard; and the courts may interpret existing laws so as to give them meanings different from those now accepted.

Wherefore, in order that any future legislation by Congress on the subject of the holding of stock by one railroad in another, and also all existing laws, may certainly apply to the holdings which the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Union Pacific Railroad Co. would acquire by the proposed exchange, said exchange should only be permitted subject to the following express condition, in substance:

That such permission shall not be taken or construed as affecting the obligations, powers, rights, or duties under either present or future laws of any person or corporation not a party to this cause, nor be taken or construed as an adjudication that any party hereto has the right to acquire or hold the shares of stocks so sold or exchanged, nor as an exemption of any such party in respect of such acquisition or holding, from the operation of any law now in force or which may hereafter be enacted.

Not only would this proviso leave unobstructed the power of Congress hereafter to legislate in respect of the stocks or transactions in question, but if any illegal conditions should result from the proposed exchange of stocks under existing law the Government could freely assail it, if so advised.

II.

I think the court with propriety may approve of the provisions contained in the aforesaid third amended plan for the disposition of such shares of the Southern Pacific Co. owned or controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Co. as shall remain after the proposed sale of 382,924 shares to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and of its entire holdings if such sale be not consummated.

These provisions put the disposition of such shares under the direction of the court. The proposal is to transfer them to a trust company, which shall become a party to the proceeding and in effect an arm of the court. The trustee has no power to vote the shares except when and as directed by the court. Union Pacific stockholders will be entitled to subscribe for certificates of interest issued by the trust company representing the shares in its custody, payment to be made either in full at the time of subscription or $25 per share then and the remainder within 12 months, with interest at 6 per cent. But the holders will have no voting rights and will receive no dividends until their certificates are converted into stock of the Southern Pacific Co., and such conversion can only be made upon affidavit that the applicant owns no shares of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. and is not acting for or on behalf of any stockholder thereof, or in concert, agreement, or understanding with any other person, firm, or corporation for the control of the Southern Pacific Co. in the interest of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., but in his own behalf in good faith. Further, the holders of such certificates can receive no interest on the dividends collected and held by the trustee.

At monthly intervals the trustee is required to report to the court the names of all persons, firms, or corporations who shall have converted such certificates into shares of stock of the Southern Pacific Co. where the conversions involved more than 100 shares, and the Attorney General may require of the trustee any other information relating to the carrying out of the plan.

If by January 1, 1916, the certificates of interest have not been converted by persons not Union Pacific stockholders into shares of the Southern Pacific Co., the court may order the sale of the Southern Pacific shares represented thereby.

These provisions seem well designed to bring about a distribution of the shares of the Southern Pacific Co. unlawfully acquired and controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Co. among persons not stockholders of the latter and thus effectually dissolve the unlawful combination. If they unexpectedly fail the disposition of the stock will remain subject to the further order of the court.

III.

I suggest that before approving the plan now proposed the court should direct that it be published, and that all who may be interested, whether parties to the cause or not, be given opportunity to present any objections which they regard as worthy of consideration.

J. C. McREYNOLDS,
Attorney General.

JUNE 28, 1913.

If the court sees fit to hear any persons who may wish to present objections, some time—possibly not very long—will elapse before a final decree can be entered. If, however, the court thinks that it is already sufficiently advised, it may act promptly. In either event, if the plan be approved, a carefully drawn decree will be entered to carry its general purposes into effect.

The Attorney General thinks the indications are favorable for a successful solution of the very difficult situation which has necessitated such protracted consideration. The plan now proposed would destroy the domination of the Pennsylvania Railroad in the affairs of the Baltimore & Ohio system, leaving the latter free to serve the interests of those along its lines; and it provides what appears to be a feasible method for bringing about a distribution within a reasonable time of the Southern Pacific Co.'s stock unlawfully held by the Union Pacific amongst persons who are not stockholders of the latter. The success of the plan would insure a real dissolution of the unlawful combination which the court condemned. Carefully guarded language will make it sure that the resulting relationship between the Union Pacific and the Baltimore & Ohio on the one side and between the Pennsylvania and the Southern Pacific on the other will be subject to all provisions of present and future law; and if at any time the Government should regard the same as unlawful there will be nothing to prevent a proceeding in courts which may be determined upon the merits.

If present expectations concerning subscriptions to the beneficial certificates should not be realized within four months, the court may make such further orders as seem proper for the disposition of any unsubscribed stock, and in the meantime the court will hold the matter within its complete control.

APPENDIX C.

[House Report No. 47, Sixty-first Congress, second session.]

WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC.

(December 21, 1909.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.)

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 12315:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12315) to regulate and prevent the transportation in interstate and foreign commerce of alien women and girls for immoral purposes, and for other purposes, begs leave to report the bill back, with sundry amendments, with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The following amendments to the bill are recommended:

On page 2, line 9, strike out the words "or evidence of the right to" and insert, after the word "transportation," in line 10, the words "or evidence of the right thereto."

On page 5, in line 7, after the word "procuration," insert the word "of."

On page 6, in line 16, strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or."

On page 7, lines 2 and 3, strike out the word "conclusively." Page 7, in line 7, after the word "include," insert the words "the District of Alaska." Page 7, line 9, strike out the word "impart" and insert in lieu thereof the word "import."

Amend the title so that it will read as follows: "A bill to further regulate interstate and foreign commerce by prohibiting the transportation therein for immoral purposes of women and girls, and for other purposes."

POLICE POWERS OF THE STATES NOT INTERFERED WITH.

It is not the purpose of the bill to interfere with or usurp in any way the police powers of the States. The bill reported does not endeavor to regulate, prohibit, or punish prostitution or the keeping of places where prostitution is indulged in. The prohibition of prostitution and other immoral practices and the punishment of the practice of prostitution or the keeping of houses of ill-fame, or other immoral places, in the several States, are matters wholly within the powers of the States and the Federal Government has no jurisdiction over those subjects. On the other hand, it has been shown in the investigation relating to the "white-slave traffic" that persons engaged in that business in some of the large cities felt quite free to engage in the traffic as between the States, when they hesitated about engaging in the traffic wholly confined to one State.

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL.

Most of the provisions of the bill are based upon the power of Congress over interstate and foreign commerce. In the second section of the bill it is made a crime for anyone to knowingly transport in interstate or foreign commerce any woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution, or for the purpose of inducing, enticing, or compelling a woman to become a prostitute; and in the same section it is also made a crime for anyone to knowingly procure a ticket to be used by a woman in interstate or foreign commerce going to a place for the purpose of prostitution, whereby such woman shall be actually transported in interstate or foreign commerce, or in any Territory, or the District of Columbia.

Section 3 of the bill makes it a crime for any person to knowingly persuade, induce, entice, or coerce any woman or girl to go from one State to another for the purpose of prostitution, and who shall thereby knowingly cause such woman to go or be transported as a passenger upon the line of any common carrier in interstate or foreign commerce.

Section 4 applies only to a girl under the age of 18 years, and is practically the same as section 3, except that it makes a higher penalty apply to the crime of leading a girl under 18 to become a prostitute and transporting her in interstate commerce for that purpose. The provisions of section 2 of the bill make the crime, first, to knowingly transport, and, second, to knowingly furnish a passenger ticket for transportation for the purpose of prostitution, when accompanied by the use of such ticket in interstate or foreign commerce. Section 3 makes the crime to knowingly persuade, induce, entice, or coerce a woman into prostitution, and thereby cause her to go and to be carried or transported as a passenger in interstate or foreign commerce.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND THE TERRITORIES.

All of the provisions which make the crime depend upon transportation in interstate or foreign commerce are made applicable to the District of Columbia, the Territories and possessions of the United States, including the Panama Canal Zone, without regard to the crossing of District, Territorial, or State lines, and apply within the Territories to the same extent as they apply in cases outside of the Territories in interstate or foreign commerce.

PENALTIES.

The penalties provided by the bill are a fine of not more than $5,000 and imprisonment for not more than 5 years, except that the penalty where the girl is under 18 years of age is not to exceed $10,000 fine and imprisonment not to exceed 10 years; and it is provided that prosecution may be in any district where the violation was committed, or from, through, or into which the woman is carried contrary to the provisions of law.

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT.

Section 6 of the bill is based in part upon the right of Congress to regulate foreign commerce and in part upon the right to legislate in furtherance of an international treaty. The United States in 1908 became a party to an international agreement for the suppression of the white-slave traffic, and section 6 makes certain provisions to aid in carrying out by the United States the international agreement. It provides that the Commissioner General of Immigration is designated to receive and centralize information concerning the procuration of alien women with a view to their debauchery, to receive their declarations, establish their identity, ascertain from them who induced them to leave their native countries, and to exercise supervision over them. It also provides that every person who shall knowingly keep or harbor in any house of prostitution any alien woman within three years after she shall have entered the United States shall file with the Commissioner General of Immigration a statement concerning such woman, and if such keeper shall fail to file such statement within 30 days, then he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to $2,000 fine and two years' imprisonment. If the keeper furnishes the statement, the woman under the immigration law will be deported in accordance with existing law. If the keeper fails to furnish the statement, the keeper will be punished.

AS TO THE VALIDITY OF THE PROPOSED ACT.

A careful examination of the Constitution, the authorities, and the decided cases seem to show that the provisions of the bill, dependent upon the commerce clause of the Constitution, come within the power of Congress and are constitutional.

It is no longer open to question that the transit of individuals from State to State is interstate commerce. The statement in Mayor v. Miln (11 Pet., 102) that persons are not the subject of commerce was overruled in the Passenger cases (7 How., 429, 432, 436) in the opinion of Justice Wayne, holding that the statement to that effect in the Miln case was dictum and was not adopted by the majority of the court. (See further, Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S., 692; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S., 196; Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co., 117 U. S., 34; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S., 204.) Indeed the mere transit of persons arriving at our ports of entry is without reference to traffic the subject of congressional regulation, because it is commerce. (Head Money cases, 112 U. S., 580; Nishimura Ekiu v. U. S., 142 U. S., 651.) The same must be true of the transit of persons from State to State, assuming that foreign commerce is the same as interstate commerce, with the exception of the locus in quo.

Congress, therefore, having the power to regulate the transportation of persons in interstate commerce, it remains to be considered whether or not the proposed regulation is concerning a matter directly connected with interstate commerce or only remotely connected with it. In determining this the same tests are applicable as those which are pertinent in considering the transportation of property in interstate commerce. As stated in the Lottery cases (188 U. S., 321, 357):

"As a State may, for the purpose of guarding the morals of its own people, forbid all sales of lottery tickets within its limits, so Congress, for the purpose of guarding the people of the United States against the 'widespread pestilence of lotteries' and to protect the commerce which concerns all the States, may prohibit the carrying of lottery tickets from one State to another. In legislating upon the subject of the traffic in lottery tickets, as carried on through interstate commerce, Congress only supplemented the action of those States—perhaps all of them—which, for the protection of the public morals, prohibit the drawing of lotteries, as well as the sale or circulation of lottery tickets, within their respective limits. It is said, in effect, that it would not permit the declared policy of the States, which sought to protect their people against the mischiefs of the lottery business, to be overthrown or disregarded by the agency of interstate commerce. We should hesitate long before adjudging that an evil of such appalling character, carried on through interstate commerce, can not be met and crushed by the only power competent to that end. We say competent to that end, because Congress alone has the power to occupy, by legislation, the whole field of interstate commerce. What was said by this court upon a former occasion may well be here repeated: 'The framers of the Constitution never intended that the legislative power of the Nation should find itself incapable of disposing of a subject matter specifically committed to its charge.' In re Rahrer, 140 U. S., 545, 562.) If the carrying of lottery tickets from one State to another be interstate commerce, and if Congress is of opinion that an effective regulation for the suppression of lotteries, carried on through such commerce, is to make it a criminal offense to cause lottery tickets to be carried from one State to another, we know of no authority in the courts to hold that the means thus devised are not appropriate and necessary to protect the country at large against a species of interstate commerce which, although in general use and somewhat favored in both National and State legislation in the early history of the country, has grown into disrepute, and has become offensive to the entire people of the Nation. It is a kind of traffic which no one can be entitled to pursue as of right."

Certainly in the case of lotteries there is nothing harmful in the mere transportation of the pieces of paper. The injury resulted from the connection which existed between those tickets and the entire scheme of the lottery. It was the purpose for which the tickets were used which made them an instrument of injury to the public.

The sections above proposed have been so drawn that they are limited to cases in which there is the act of transportation in interstate commerce of women for purposes of prostitution. The use of interstate commerce in sending prostitutes from one State to another in connection with this traffic in women would seem to be as directly connected with interstate commerce as the sending of tickets from one State to another in furtherance of the operation of a lottery. It is true the act of prostitution is not committed in connection with the interstate transportation nor was the drawing in connection with the lottery a part of interstate commerce.

The sections proposed do not amount to an interference with the police power of the State. The simple test, as pointed out in the Rahrer case and in the Lottery cases, is whether or not the State, in the exercise of its police power, could have prohibited the things at which the act is aimed. Manifestly a State could not enact that a person who induced a woman to go from one State to another for purposes of prostitution should not aid or assist in her transportation from one State to another, or that the common carrier should not transport the prostitute. To do so would be a plain attempt to regulate interstate commerce. (Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S., 100.) Where the subject upon which Congress can act in the exercise of the power to regulate commerce is local in its nature or sphere of operation, such as harbor pilotage, the construction of bridges over navigable rivers, the erection of wharves, piers, and docks, which properly can be regulated only by special provision adapted to their localities, the State can act until Congress interferes and supersedes its authority. Where, however, the subject is national in its character, and demands and requires uniform regulation, and affects all the States, such as transportation between the States, including the importation from one State to another, Congress alone can act on it and provide the needed regulation. (Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 125 U. S., 465, 567.)

The rule just stated with reference to the transportation of property of course applies to the transportation of persons. The subject matter of the legislation being, therefore, one over which the States have no control, it must be, as pointed out above, within the domain of proper Federal legislation.

HISTORY OF THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE LAW.

The history of the development of the law forbidding the importation of alien women for purposes of prostitution is as follows:

The first provision relating to this subject was contained in the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L., 477; also 1 U. S. Comp. Stat., pp. 1286–1287), as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the importation into the United States of women for the purposes of prostitution is hereby forbidden; and all contracts and agreements in relation thereto, made in advance or in pursuance of such illegal importation and purposes, are hereby declared void; and whoever shall knowingly and willfully import or cause any importation of women into the United States for the purposes of prostitution, or shall knowingly or willfully hold or attempt to hold any woman to such purposes, in pursuance of such illegal importation and contract or agreement, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not exceeding five years and pay a fine not exceeding $5,000."

Section 5 of the same act also contained the following:

"That it shall be unlawful for aliens of the following classes to immigrate into the United States, namely, * * * women 'imported for the purposes of prostitution.'"

The foregoing provision was superseded by section 3 of the act of March 3, 1903, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States" (32 Stat. L., 1213; also 1905 Suppl. to U. S. Comp. Stat., p. 276), which provides as follows:

"That the importation into the United States of any woman or girl for the purposes of prostitution is hereby forbidden; and whoever shall import or attempt to import any woman or girl into the United States for the purposes of prostitution, or shall hold or attempt to hold any woman or girl for such purposes in pursuance of such illegal importation shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not less than one nor more than five years and pay a fine not exceeding $5,000."

It is to be observed that the provision in question underwent several important changes in the reenactment, as follows:

First. The old act covered the importation only of "any woman." The new act was extended to cover "any woman or girl."

Second. The clause in the old act declaring void contracts or agreements in relation to importing women for the purposes of prostitution was omitted in the new act.

Third. The old act used the language "knowingly and willfully" import and "knowingly and willfully" hold or attempt to hold any person in pursuance of such illegal importation, etc. The new act eliminated the "knowingly and willfully" and made it an offense to import or to hold or attempt to hold any person in pursuance of such illegal importation.

Fourth. The penalty in each act was the same.

Both of the foregoing provisions were superseded by the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States" (34 Stat. L., 898; 1907 Suppl. U. S. Comp. Stat., 392), as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the importation into the United States of any alien woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose is hereby forbidden; and whoever shall, directly or indirectly, import or attempt to import into the United States any alien woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, or whoever shall hold or attempt to hold any alien woman or girl for any such purpose in pursuance of such illegal importation, or whoever shall keep, maintain, control, support, or harbor in any house or other place for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose any alien woman or girl within three years after she shall have entered the United States shall in every such case be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned not more than five years and pay a fine of not more than $5,000; and any alien woman or girl who shall be found an inmate of a house of prostitution or practicing prostitution at any time within three years after she shall have entered the United States shall be deemed to be unlawfully within the United States and shall be deported as provided by sections 20 and 21 of this act."

The changes introduced into the new provision worthy of note are as follows:

First. The new law forbade the importation of any alien woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution and added the clause "or for any other immoral purpose."

Second. The new law added the words "directly or indirectly" in the clause "and whoever shall, directly or indirectly, import or attempt to import," etc.

Third. The new law added the following important and also absolutely new provision: "Or whoever shall keep, maintain, control, support, or harbor in any house or other place for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose any alien woman or girl within three years after she shall have entered the United States."

Fourth. The new law added to the section express authorization for the deportation of any alien woman or girl in the following language: "Any alien woman or girl who shall be found an inmate of a house of prostitution or practicing prostitution at any time within three years after she shall have entered the United States shall be deemed to be unlawfully within the United States and shall be deported as provided by sections 20 and 21 of this act."

SUPREME COURT DECISION CONSTRUING SECTION 3 OF THE ACT OF FEBRUARY 20, 1907.

Section 3 of the act of February 20, 1907, has received the consideration of the Supreme Court in two cases.

In the first case, that of the United States v. John Bitty (208 U. S., 393), the Supreme Court held that a foreign woman being brought to the United States as the personal, private mistress of a man living here was being imported "for other immoral purposes," and that, therefore, the importer was subject to the penalty of the statute and the woman to deportation.

This decision is not pertinent to the phase of the subject under discussion, and is mentioned only in passing.

The second case was that of Joseph Keller v. United States (213 U. S., 138). In the Keller case the Supreme Court was called to pass squarely upon the constitutionality of that portion of the provision in question which made it an offense to harbor or maintain for the purposes of prostitution any alien woman or girl within three years of her entry into the United States. The exact language of the provision in question is as follows:

"Or whoever shall keep, maintain, control, support, or harbor in any house or other place, for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose, any alien woman or girl within three years after she shall have entered the United States, shall, in every such case, be deemed guilty of a felony, etc."

The opinion of the court (attached hereto as Appendix C) was delivered by Mr. Justice Brewer. Mr. Justice Holmes delivered a dissenting opinion (attached hereto as Appendix D), which was concurred in by Justices Harlan and Moody.

The case was a typical case of "harboring" exclusively. The uncontradicted testimony was to the effect that the woman, Irene Bodl, came to this country in November, 1905; that she remained in New York until October, 1907; then came to Chicago and went into a house of prostitution in South Chicago, which the defendants purchased in November, 1907, finding the woman then in the house; that she had been in the business of a prostitute for only a few months prior to the trial of the case, in October, 1908, and that the defendants did not know her until November, 1907.

The question of the power of Congress to enact a law for the punishment of anyone "harboring" an alien woman within three years of her arrival, regardless of whether or not she was a prostitute voluntarily or had entered that state against her will, was squarely presented by the facts in the case. The court held that Congress was without power to pass such a law, its position appearing from the statement contained in the following paragraph from the opinion of the court:

"While the keeping of a house of ill fame is offensive to the moral sense, yet that fact must not close the eye to the question whether the power to punish therefor is delegated to Congress or is reserved to the State. Jurisdiction over such an offense comes within the accepted definition of the police power. Speaking generally, that power is reserved to the States, for there is in the Constitution no grant thereof to Congress."

Bearing in mind the facts in this case—namely, that so far as appeared in the case presented the defendants had nothing whatever to do with the importation of the woman in question; that so far as they were concerned she was not in a house of ill fame against her will; and that she was an inmate of the house when the establishment was purchased as a going concern—the following suggestions of the court, contained in the opinion with reference to the conclusion the court might have reached had the facts been different, are important: For instance, the court says, page 144:

"It is unnecessary to determine how far Congress may go in legislating with respect to the conduct of an alien while residing here, for there is no charge against one; nor to prescribe the extent of its power in punishing wrongs done to an alien, for there is neither charge nor proof of any such wrong. So far as the statute or the indictment requires, or the testimony shows, she was voluntarily living the life of a prostitute, and was only furnished a place by the defendants to follow her degraded life."

Also on page 147, the court says:

"The question is, therefore, whether there is any authority conferred upon Congress by which this particular portion of the statute can be sustained. By section 2 of Article II of the Constitution power is given to the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, but there is no suggestion in the record or in the briefs of a treaty with the King of Hungary under which this legislation can be supported."

The Government stated in its brief these two propositions:

"The clause in question should be held valid because it relates to and materially affects the conditions upon which an alien female may be permitted to remain in this country and the grounds which warrant her exclusion. * * *

"The validity of the provision in question should be determined from its general effect upon the importation and exclusion of aliens."

The court then, without stating whether or not either of these propositions was well taken, dismissed them with the statement that "the act charged has no significance in either direction."

In considering the decision of the Supreme Court in the Keller case attention is especially called to the fact that in the opinion the court made the following suggestions:

"By section 2 of Article II of the Constitution, power is given to the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, but there is no suggestion in the record or in the briefs of a treaty with the King of Hungary under which this legislation can be supported."

It is manifest that this is a most pregnant suggestion. A showing that the legislation in question was supported by a treaty could not be made at that time, however, for the reason that at the time of the enactment of the legislation the United States was not a party to the international agreement covering the subject. In fact, this Government did not adhere to the international agreement until a date subsequent to the commission of the offense charged against Keller.

In this connection the chronology of events is important. The existing statute on the subject of the importation of alien women for immoral purposes is contained in section 3 of the act approved February 20, 1907. The alleged illegal act of which the defendant stood convicted was the harboring of an alien woman on June 1, 1908. The United States did not become a party to the international agreement for the repression of the trade in white women until June 15, 1908, at which time this Government adhered to the agreement by virtue of a proclamation issued by President Roosevelt. It appears, therefore, that the statute in question became a law, and the offense involved was committed, previous to the date on which this Government became a party to the international agreement.

So far Congress has not enacted legislation to insure the carrying out of the provisions of the treaty in question.

The following clearly appears from an analysis of the Supreme Court decision above mentioned:

First. That Congress may properly enact legislation affecting the conduct of an alien while residing here for a period of at least two or three years after the alien's arrival.

Second. That Congress may provide for the punishment of wrongs done to an alien during the probationary period—that is to say, the Supreme Court intimates very broadly that Congress has the power to enact a law making it an offense to "harbor" for immoral purposes, by force or against her will, an alien woman or girl within the limited period referred to.

Third. That in the carrying out of a treaty obligation Congress has the authority to pass an act making it an offense to harbor an alien woman or girl for immoral purposes, even in the absence of a showing that force or restraint is used—that is to say, in the decision above referred to the Supreme Court suggests that a different conclusion might have been reached under the very clause then under consideration had it appeared that the provision in question was the carrying out of a treaty agreement.

EXISTING LAWS.

Section 3 of the act of February 20, 1907 (34 Stat., 898; also 1907 Suppl. U. S. Comp. Stat., p. 392), is as follows:

NOTE.—The italic portion of the following section is the portion which was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in the Keller case:

"That the importation into the United States of any alien woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose, is hereby forbidden; and whoever shall, directly or indirectly, import, or attempt to import, into the United States, any alien woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose, or whoever shall hold or attempt to hold any alien woman or girl for any such purpose in pursuance of such illegal importation, or whoever shall keep, maintain, control, support, or harbor in any house or other place, for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose any alien woman or girl, within three years after she shall have entered the United States, shall, in every such case, be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned not more than five years and pay a fine of not more than $5,000; and any alien woman or girl who shall be found an inmate of a house of prostitution or practicing prostitution, at any time within three years after she shall have entered the United States, shall be deemed to be unlawfully within the United States and shall be deported as provided by sections 20 and 21 of this act."

Section 2 of the same act provides as follows:

"That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States; * * * prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose;" * * *.

"THE WHITE SLAVE TRADE."

A material portion of the legislation suggested and proposed is necessary to meet conditions which have arisen within the past few years. The legislation is needed to put a stop to a villainous interstate and international traffic in women and girls. The legislation is not needed or intended as an aid to the States in the exercise of their police powers in the suppression or regulation of immorality in general. It does not attempt to regulate the practice of voluntary prostitution, but aims solely to prevent panderers and procurers from compelling thousands of women and girls against their will and desire to enter and continue in a life of prostitution.

The evil, as a present day existing evil of widespread dimensions which has arisen, has been given careful attention by the representatives of most of the civilized nations of the world, and has been made the subject of an international agreement. Thousands of public-spirited citizens have combined in various National and State organizations for the purpose of lending their aid in its suppression. The white-slave trade has been so prevalent that prosecuting officers, both State and Federal, even under inadequate and insufficient laws, have been able to secure many notable convictions. It is an evil which many State legislatures have attempted to regulate within the past two or three years by means of the enactment of State statutes. Inasmuch, however, as the traffic involves mainly the transportation of women and girls from the country districts to the centers of population and their importation from foreign nations, the evil is one which can not be met comprehensively and effectively otherwise than by the enactment of Federal laws.

Investigations conducted by Government agents disclose the fact that a national and international traffic exists in the buying, selling, and exploitation of women and young girls for immoral purposes. This traffic has come to be known the world over as "the white-slave trade." It is referred to by the Paris conference as "the trade in white women."

There are few who really understand the true significance of the term "white-slave trade." Most of those who have given only a casual thought to the subject have the impression that women who lead immoral lives in public houses are there voluntarily, either because they are attracted by the excitement of such a life or because they have found it an easy way of earning a living. In many cases such is not the fact. The results of careful investigation into this subject disclose the fact that the inmates of many houses of ill fame are made up largely of women and girls whose original entry into a life of immorality was brought about by men who are in the business of procuring women for that purpose—men whose sole means of livelihood is the money received from the sale and exploitation of women who, by means of force and restraint, compel their victims to practice prostitution. These investigations have disclosed the further fact that these women are practically slaves in the true sense of the word; that many of them are kept in houses of ill fame against their will; and that force, if necessary, is used to deprive them of their liberty.

The characteristic which distinguishes "the white-slave trade" from immorality in general is that the women who are the victims of the traffic are unwillingly forced to practice prostitution. The term "white slave" includes only those women and girls who are literally slaves—those women who are owned and held as property and chattels—whose lives are lives of involuntary servitude; those who practice prostitution as a result of the activities of the procurer, and who, for a considerable period at least, continue to lead their degraded lives because of the power exercised over them by their owners. In short, the white-slave trade may be said to be the business of securing white women and girls and of selling them outright, or of exploiting them for immoral purposes. Its victims are those women and girls who, if given a fair chance, would, in all human probability, have been good wives and mothers and useful citizens.

The preamble of an existing international agreement on this subject states that the several governments, "being desirous to assure to women who have attained their majority and are subjected to deception or constraint, as well as minor women and girls, an efficacious protection against the criminal traffic known under the name of trade in white women ('traite des blanches'), have resolved to conclude an arrangement with a view to concert proper measures to attain this purpose."

It is the purpose of the proposed laws, in so far as it may be possible for Congress to do so, to protect women and girls against this criminal traffic by providing for the punishment of those engaged in that traffic and by regulations established by the act.

Extensive investigation by government commissions and prosecuting officers in various parts of the country disclose the fact that in many cases involving women and girls imported into this country, and those transported from one State to another, the procurers resort to all of the means and devices known to the criminal classes to accomplish their purposes. Liquor, trickery, deceit, fraud, and the use of force are resorted to by the procurer to place the girl under his power. In some cases those who have been induced to come to the large cities are first introduced to the house of prostitution under the influence of liquor; in others, the procurer enters into a pretended marriage with his victim; in many cases involving the importation of women and girls from abroad and their transportation from one State to another the inducement is the promise of legitimate employment with handsome compensation. Hundreds of men in large cities live from the earnings of the victims of the white-slave trade, and in many instances the more extensive of international procurers live in affluence. The books kept by a notorious importer of French girls, who was arrested in Chicago a few months ago, disclosed his earnings for the year previous to his arrest, largely from his importation and wholly from his exploitation of girls, to have been more than $102,000.

The investigations into this subject conclusively show the fact that for some time after they are first unwillingly forced to take up a life of prostitution many of the victims would at once abandon it were it possible for them to do so. The facts are that in order to insure her continuance in the degraded life, to which she has unwillingly been forced to submit, the procurer has resort to physical violence and the maintenance of a system of surveillance which makes her, to all intents and purposes, a prisoner. Obviously the portions of the act which require the proprietor of a house of ill fame to report to the Federal authorities concerning the arrival in the establishment of an alien woman or girl would, at least so far as concerns aliens, make unlawful detention practically impossible.

The national and international importance of suppressing this criminal traffic is clearly shown by reference to the treaty, the preamble of which is given above, and reports of governmental officers and others on the subject.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in his annual report for 1908, page 18, refers to the matter in the following terms:

"It is highly necessary that this diabolical traffic, which has attained international proportions, should be dealt with in a manner adequate to compass its suppression. No punishment is too severe to inflict upon the procurers in this vile traffic."

The act of February 20, 1907 (sec. 29), created an immigration commission, the membership of which was to consist of three Senators, three Members of the House of Representatives, and three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States. In a preliminary report submitted February 27, 1909 (Doc. 1489), the commission says:

"The commission has made an extensive investigation into the question of the importation and harboring of women for immoral purposes. The results show that many women are being regularly imported under conditions which often amount to absolute slavery.

* * * * * * *

"It is believed that as a result of this investigation the commission will be able to make recommendations which will put a very decided check upon this horrible traffic, if, indeed, it will not practically break it up entirely."

THE TRAFFIC IS SYSTEMATIC AND EXTENSIVE.

Governmental investigations which have been conducted disclose the fact that the importation of women and girls from foreign countries has been systematic and continuous, and has not been limited to isolated and accidental cases. The facts in connection with investigations conducted by the district attorney at Chicago may be taken as typical of the situation in many other cities.

At the time of the arrest of several notorious French importers in Chicago a large amount of correspondence and other documentary evidence fell into the hands of the authorities. This evidence showed beyond a reasonable doubt that there was in existence an organized system, or syndicate, having for its purpose the importation of women from foreign countries to Chicago and other cities in the United States for immoral purposes. This syndicate had headquarters and distributing centers in New York, Chicago, Omaha, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, and Nome, Alaska.

It is conservatively estimated, from an examination of the data and information at hand, that the syndicate has imported annually during the preceding 8 or 10 years on an average of about 2,000 women—largely French. It also appears that the syndicate regularly sent agents to Europe to procure girls, at stated prices, to be brought to the United States, where they were placed at the disposal of the keepers of houses of prostitution. The usual method employed in evading the immigration officers at the ports of entry was to pass the women as the wives or sisters of the procurers with whom they arrived.

One of the chief members of this syndicate was the Frenchman Alphonse Dufaur, who was the defendant in six indictments, in the Chicago district, charging him with harboring alien women in violation of the existing law. Dufaur and his wife subsequently forfeited bonds in the sum of $25,000 and became fugitives from justice.

Another active importer and procurer was Henry Lair, who operated establishments in Chicago and San Francisco. One of Lair's agents was a man named Louis Paint, who some time ago was convicted of importing in New York and who is now serving a sentence of four years in the penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., for importing women for Lair. On the recent trial of Lair, in Chicago, Paint testified that he had been given $800 by Lair and told to go to Paris for the purpose of procuring two girls for Lair's establishment in Chicago. Lair was convicted and sentenced by Judge Landis to serve two years at hard labor in the penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth and to pay a fine of $2,500.

Various arrests have been made in the Chicago district which disclose the existence of a traffic in girls from Hungary, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Great Britain, and other countries.

In this connection it is of interest to note the profits realized by those engaged in the importation of alien women for the purpose of prostitution. For this purpose the information in the possession of the Government, as the result of prosecution against the French procurer Dufaur, which is definite and accurate, may be taken as typical of the remunerative character of the traffic. The books of account kept by Dufaur show that his income, from his establishment in Chicago, realized largely as a result of his success as an importer, was, for the 12 months immediately preceding his arrest, upward of $102,000. These books also show that during the month of May, previous to his arrest, the earnings of one girl, a recent importation, were $723. In almost every instance which has come to the attention of the authorities the girls who were imported from France by the French syndicate were compelled to turn over every day to the proprietor of the establishment in which they were detained all their earnings. They were usually allowed only enough to purchase the clothing necessary to make them attractive to frequenters of the place.

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT FOR THE REPRESSION OF THE TRADE IN WHITE WOMEN.

A project of arrangement for the suppression of the white-slave traffic was, on July 25, 1902, adopted for submission to their respective Governments by the delegates of various powers represented at the Paris conference for the repression of the trade in white women.

The stipulations of this project of arrangement were confirmed by preliminary agreement signed at Paris, May 18, 1904, by the Governments of Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, France, Great Britain, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Russia, Sweden, Norway, and the Swiss Federal Council.

By its resolution of March 1, 1905, the Senate of the United States advised and consented to the adhesion by the United States to the said project of arrangement, and therefore, on June 6, 1908, the President announced the adherence on the part of this Government to the project, and this adherence was on June 15, 1908, covered by the proclamation of the President. This treaty was published in pamphlet form by the State Department as Treaty Series, No. 496, and a complete copy is attached hereto as Appendix B. The preamble of this agreement recites that the various Governments, being desirous to assure to women who have attained their majority, and are subjected to deception or constraint, as well as minor women and girls, an efficacious protection against the criminal traffic known under the name of trade in white women—"traite des blanches"—have resolved to conclude an arrangement with a view to concert proper measures to attain this purpose.

The terms of the agreement as set forth in the various articles are as follows:

"ARTICLE 1. Each of the contracting Governments agrees to establish or designate an authority who will be directed to centralize all information concerning the procuration of women or girls both in a view to their debauchery in a foreign country; that authority shall have the right to correspond directly with the similar service established in each of the other contracting States.

"ART. 2. Each of the Governments agrees to exercise a supervision for the purpose to find out, particularly in the stations, harbors of embarkation, and on the journey, the conductors of women or girls intended for debauchery. Instructions shall be sent for that purpose to the officials or to any other qualified persons, in order to procure, within the limits of the laws, all information of a nature to discover a criminal traffic.

"The arrival of persons appearing evidently to be the authors, the accomplices, or the victims of such a traffic will be notified, in each case, either to the authorities of the place of destination or to the interested diplomatic or consular agents, or to any other competent authorities.

"ART. 3. The Governments agree to receive, in each case within the limits of the laws, the declarations of women and girls of foreign nationality who surrender themselves to prostitution, with a view to establish their identity and their civil status and to ascertain who has induced them to leave their country. The information received will be communicated to the authorities of the country of origin of the said women or girls, with a view to their eventual return.

"The Governments agree, within the limits of the laws and as far as possible, to confide temporarily and with a view to their eventual return, the victims of criminal traffic, when they are without any resources, to some institutions of public or private charity or to private individuals furnishing the necessary guaranties.

"The Governments agree also, within the limits of the laws, to return to their country of origin, those women or girls who ask their return or who may be claimed by persons having authority over them. Return will be made only after reaching an understanding as to their identity and nationality, as well as to the place and date of their arrival at the frontiers. Each of the contracting parties will facilitate the transit on his territory.

"The correspondence relative to the return will be made, as far as possible, through the direct channel.

"ART. 4. In case the woman or girl to be sent back can not pay herself the expenses of her transportation and she has neither husband nor relations nor guardian to pay for her the expenses occasioned by her return, they shall be borne by the country or the territory of which she resides as far as the nearest frontier or port of embarkation in the direction of the country of origin, and by the country of origin for the remainder.

"ART. 5. The provisions of the above articles 3 and 4 shall not infringe upon the provisions of special conventions which may exist between the contracting Governments.

"ART. 6. The contracting Governments agree, within the limits of the laws, to exercise, as far as possible, a supervision over the bureaus or agencies which occupy themselves with finding places for women or girls in foreign countries."

Articles 7, 8, and 9 provide for the adhesion of the nonsignatory States, that the present arrangement shall take effect six months after the date of the exchange of the ratifications, and for the formalities attending the ratification and exchange of the agreement, respectively.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired, and all time has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now move that House resolution 212 do lie on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 93 ayes and 57 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Tuesday, August 5, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a draft of a bill for the amendment of section 2965, Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to charges to be paid on unclaimed goods in the hands of collectors of customs (H. Doc. No. 169); to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Public Printer, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $11,147.10 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to meet expense of handling and disposing of the waste paper from the various departments of the Government in Washington (H. Doc. No. 170); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of appropriation for relief and transportation of destitute American citizens in Mexico (H. Doc. No. 171); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2319) authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to Spain, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 37), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2318) authorizing the appointment of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to each Paraguay and Uruguay, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 38), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, from the Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers, to which was referred the letter of the Secretary of Commerce (H. Doc. No. 128), transmitting a schedule of useless executive documents in that department, submitted a report (No. 40) thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 2, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have here a telegram which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the telegram.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

LOS ANGELES, CAL., August 1, 1913.

Senator JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Municipal League of Los Angeles, of 600 representative taxpayers and citizens, protests against the provision in the income-tax act whereby all the inspectors, agents, collectors, etc., employed in that work are to be exempt from civil service and are under the old spoils system. This is the most serious attack on the efficiency of public service made in recent years, and we are at a loss to understand how it can be contemplated by an administration pledged to progressive modern government. Will you please present this protest to Senate Committee on Finance.

FRANK SIMPSON, President.
H. S. RYERSON, Acting Secretary.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply wish to say with reference to the telegram that the provision, as I now remember it, is almost entirely an exact copy of the provision dealing with the same subject in the denatured-alcohol act passed only a few years ago.

Mr. WORKS. Does the chairman of the committee understand that it has the effect stated in the telegram to take these employees out of the civil service?

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply wish to make the statement that it was taken from the denatured-alcohol act. As that act does, it provides that certain employees may be appointed for two years without reference to the rules of the civil-service law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—PARCEL POST.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege, and ask to have read at the Secretary's desk a letter which I have just received.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE FARMINGTON TIMES-HUSTLER,
Farmington, N. Mex., July 26, 1913.

Hon. NATHAN P. BRYAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have just been reading in the papers reports of your efforts to cripple the parcel post. I would like to inquire of you in whose interest you are working. You are supposed to represent the people of Florida directly and the people of the United States indirectly. Do you believe that in increasing the efficiency of the parcel post an injury is being done the whole people? If not, then are you truly representing those you are paid your salary to do?

You call yourself a Democrat, and so do I. My idea of Democracy is to have the Government do that which will be of greatest benefit to the greatest number, having a care, of course, not to encroach on the ethical rights of the minority in so doing. The parcel post is doing this very thing, and we of "the common herd" clearly understand and feel this, and we will hold to strict accountability any representative of ours who attempts to injure us in the interest of the express companies, which have robbed us so unmercifully in the past. We know that the escape from express robbery lies through the extension of the parcel post to the 100-pound limit, just as Postmaster General Burleson suggests, and we further know that the Congressman or Senator who opposes this, whatever his pretext, is working for special interests and not the public good.

THOMAS WM. BUTLER.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I also send to the desk and ask to have read a clipping from the De Land News, a newspaper in my State, under date of July 30.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the De Land News, July 30, 1913.]

The News does not doubt the patriotism or the sincerity of Senator NATHAN P. BRYAN, of Florida, but if Senator BRYAN had ever had much experience with express companies and rates we doubt if he would have introduced his resolution in the Senate to prevent the Postmaster General from enlarging the service of the parcel post. Senator BRYAN, who uses postal franks like all Members of the Senate, probably does not know that the express companies are now "real good" in comparison to their acts before the passage of the parcel-post law. The News hopes that the parcel post will be enlarged from time to time so that it will soon be doing all the business now handled by the express companies; that there will eventually be only two classes of freight traffic—parcel post and actual freight. The express traffic has been only a wart on the hand of business. It was inaugurated to give the transportation lines a chance to charge a little more for the service for which they were supposed to be organized. Senator BRYAN is probably hearing from his constituents by this time.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, both the letter and the clipping from the paper evidently refer to some item sent out by the Associated Press or some other press association. I did not see the article that went out, but the letter is a fair sample of some I am receiving.

Of course, the newspaper is mistaken if it supposes that Senators can send parcel-post packages under the franking privilege.

Mr. President, I had never thought that it would fall to my lot to rise to a question of personal privilege. It so happens, however, that the action I have taken with reference to a certain paragraph in the Post Office appropriation act of August 24, 1912, has been referred to, and that the Postmaster General, assuming to act under the authority of that act of Congress, has made certain changes in the weight limit and the rates of postage.

Mr. President, I was opposed to the insertion in the Post Office appropriation bill of the paragraph under which the Postmaster General undertakes to make these changes. That paragraph was not written into the law by either House of Congress; it was inserted by the conferees. I think no man can read it without coming to the conclusion that it was drawn without much deliberation, because the language is so involved that it would hardly be fair to say that the conferees with much time would have made so important a change and expressed that change in language so clumsy. That language is as follows:

The classification of articles mailable, as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability under this act, if the Postmaster General shall find on experience that they, or any of them, are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission after investigation, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions, or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

During the same Congress I introduced a bill to repeal that provision. It goes without saying that I did so without reference to who the new Postmaster General would be, because the bill was introduced before that fact was known even to the present Postmaster General himself. It expressed my idea that the place for legislation is in the legislative branch of Congress, and that I was unwilling to turn over to a single individual the great rate-making power assigned to him by this provision.

At the beginning of the present session of Congress I reintroduced the bill. Of course, Senators understand that our attention has been devoted almost exclusively to tariff legislation. Again, it was urged that no change would be made; that the Postmaster General could only act "on experience," and that the parcel post had been in operation only since the 1st of January. It was also urged that he could only make the change with the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission could only give its consent after it had made an investigation. It was further supposed that the Interstate Commerce Commission could not very well reduce the postal rates and leave the express rates where they are.

But, Mr. President, all those things have taken place. Congress in the same identical bill which enlarged the parcel post provided for a joint committee of the two Houses to further consider the question of the parcel post and ascertain whether or not it could be enlarged and extended. The chairman of that committee is the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW]. Another member is the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and I have had the honor to serve as the other member of the committee on the part of the Senate.

On the 6th of March last the chairman of the committee wrote a letter to our own department, and he wrote a letter to be presented to the principal countries of the earth which have a parcel post. He heard from all the other countries, but had received no reply to his letter from the Postmaster General of his own country, within half a mile of the office of the joint commission, until after the order making the changes had been issued by him.

So, Mr. President, it was hardly to be supposed that a change would be made without communicating with the committee; or to state it in another way, if the Postmaster General could not give the information asked for by the committee he would hardly be in a position to make a change in the rate and in the weight limit.

I wish to be fair to the Postmaster General and to say that he stated before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that the information asked for was hard to obtain, and it would be given to us the day after the order was issued; and it was.

That may be so, Mr. President. I can easily understand that a new man taking charge of a great department has many things to contend with; but the joint committee to consider the reduction of railway mail pay has been working continuously in an effort to make it possible to lower rates and to put them, if possible, on a self-sustaining basis. The chairman of the joint committee was the former chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, former Senator Bourne, who had devoted a whole year to the study of the parcel-post system before these rates were put into effect by Congress. He heard nothing from either the Postmaster General or the Interstate Commerce Commission. The bill I introduced to repeal this section was referred by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate to the Postmaster General for his opinion upon it on April 19, 1913. Neither had that committee been informed of the position the department would assume with reference to that bill.

I was astounded when I saw in the newspapers that an order was about to be issued raising the weight limit from 11 to 20 pounds and materially reducing the rate of postage. The committee invited the Postmaster General and the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission to appear before it. I ought to say when I saw that statement in the newspaper, out of an abundance of caution I put my bill into the shape of a joint resolution, because I was informed that under the rules of the other House a joint resolution could be taken up without reference to a committee. It appeared at that hearing before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that the matter was presented by subordinates to the Postmaster General on June 17 of this year; that he considered it along with his other duties until June 26; and he approved the change and transmitted his approval to the Interstate Commerce Commission on June 29, so that they could give their consent. The Interstate Commerce Commission gave their consent to the promulgation of the order on July 7. The Postmaster General considered, only for nine days, this subject that had received the consideration of a committee of the Senate for a year. The Interstate Commerce Commission gave a like time to its consideration, if they devoted all of the time they had the matter before them to a study of it. The Postmaster General, however, rather apologized for not having acted earlier than the 26th of June, and gave to the committee his reasons for that.

Another order was issued, to which I object, and it goes back to the proposition that legislation had better be enacted by the legislative branch of this Government. In this parcel-post law was a provision that a distinctive stamp should be used. The purpose of that was to find out by actual experience the revenue derived by the operation of the parcel post, so that we might in a measure hereafter know what the receipts amounted to, and then we would not have to estimate both expenditures and receipts. Of course, even with a distinctive stamp, we would still have to estimate the expenditures, but that would be comparatively easy, because statistics show that the receipts of the Post Office Department have increased during the last 10 or 12 years on an average 7 per cent. Then, with further increase in expenditures, we would have known that it was due to the parcel post, because there was no other and further addition to mail matter.

The Postmaster General bases his right to make that change on the words in this paragraph, "condition of mailability." He did that without reference to the solicitor of the department; without taking legal advice upon it. It is difficult to construe exactly what that paragraph means; but my understanding, on reading the whole section, is that "condition of mailability" refers to one of three things: First, the size of the package, which can not be greater than 72 inches in length and girth combined; second, to the form or kind of matter likely to injure persons in the postal employ or to damage the mail equipment; or, third, to mail matter not of a character perishable within the period reasonably required for transportation and delivery. So I doubted his right to make that change. I doubt it now.

Further, that could not be made except on experience. There had been by the former Postmaster General but two months' experience with the parcel post. On the 6th of March the Postmaster General, on two days' experience, said he would not prohibit the delivery of packages which had on them the ordinary stamp; and in June the distinctive stamp provided for by act of Congress was abolished. So now we can not know, except by estimate, either the revenues of the Government or the expenditures of the Government in this branch of the service.

Mr. President, if this order lowering the rates and increasing the weight limit shall produce a deficit, it will be much more difficult to find it with the only means of ascertaining the revenues the Government derives stricken out of the law by departmental order.

I am rather inclined to believe that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], who has studied this matter for a year, could have explained to the Postmaster General why the mail-order houses of Chicago would like to have the distinctive stamp abolished. They receive pay for packages in ordinary stamps; they can not use those stamps in remailing the packages with the requirement standing that a distinctive parcel-post stamp must be used; they have to sell those stamps at a discount; and so, of course, they would be interested in having the distinctive stamp abolished in order that they could use the ordinary stamp in mailing back to their customers the articles desired.

I do not know whether or not the rates established in this new order will be self-sustaining. I do not claim to have that intimate knowledge of rate making to enable me to assert that they will or will not; but I do know that they will not be self-sustaining if the cost of transportation is the same in August, 1913, as it was in August, 1912, because the same department gave figures to the committee which would show a loss under these rates. Under the figures given before the law was enacted, it would cost the Government 29.88 cents to deliver a 20-pound package 150 miles away, while under the Postmaster General's order the Government will receive 24 cents for the transportation of such a package, a net loss of nearly 6 cents.

We were told that it costs 3 cents for the first pound and 20 per cent additional for each additional pound for handling packages. That would make a 20-pound package cost 14.4 cents for the handling. We were told that it cost 2.58 mills for the transportation of 1 pound 50 miles under the rates the Government pays to the railroads. Then it would cost 15.4 cents freight and transportation; and if you add the handling cost to the transportation cost it will show the loss above stated.

There is another most peculiar thing in this order, which I believe will result in one of two things: Either in the raising of the rates affected by the order issued or a reduction in the next zone, and when you reduce in the next zone you will have to reduce in the one next to that, and when you carry the package beyond the third or fourth zones it is admitted that the Government will lose money. Our profit must be made in short hauls. The express companies have been giving the long haul to the Government all these years because of that very fact.

Under the law as drawn an 11-pound package could be sent in the first zone, 50 miles approximately, for 35 cents, and in a zone of 150 miles for 46 cents. In the next zone an 11-pound package would be carried by the Government for 57 cents. Now the Postmaster General imposes a charge of 24 cents for 20 pounds and consolidates the first and second zones. Therefore a 20-pound package can be sent 150 miles for 24 cents.

As I have said, I do not know much about rate making, but I never before heard of anybody who claimed that the sum of two local rates ought to be less than the through rate; and yet I undertake to say that, under this provision, the shipper of a parcel-post package weighing 20 pounds can send it 150 miles to the end of the second zone established by law, and then reship it another 150 miles for another 24 cents. Then, what have you? You have the Government carrying a 20-pound package, and required to handle it an additional time, 300 miles for 48 cents, and you charge on this through rate for an 11-pound package 57 cents. If, then, a man wanted to divide his 20-pound package, which he could not send by through shipment to the third zone because of the weight limit, he would put 11 pounds in one package and 9 pounds in another. He would have to pay $1.04 for 20 pounds on a through rate, but the Postmaster General will now allow him to ship twice on the local rates for 48 cents, a difference of 56 cents. It seems to me, Mr. President, that that would be a sufficient inducement to a man to ship twice, because by so doing he would save over half a dollar on each 20-pound shipment.

Mr. President, I hold no brief for the railroad companies or the express companies. I do not know a single gentleman financially interested in either who voted for me when I was a candidate for the United States Senate. All of them I have heard of were opposing me, as they had a right to do.

I have never considered that the proper scope of the parcel post is to raise the weight limit to a hundred pounds, as suggested by the gentleman who wrote the letter and as was suggested in conference in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I know it was argued and presented to the committee a year ago, when it was making up the Post Office appropriation bill, that we ought to pay the express companies $40,000,000 for their franchises and take over their business. We would have as little use for their franchises as a city would have use for a franchise for doing an electric-light business or furnishing water to its own inhabitants. I have said that I could not understand the economic necessity for an express company and that I believed railroad commissions and commerce commissions, National and State, should not take into account in fixing rates the money the railroad companies pay to the express companies, because that is simply an inducement to take out a part of their earnings and deliver them to a separate corporation in order that these earnings may not be taken into consideration in the fixing of railroad rates.

I believe the transportation companies, the railroads, ought to be made to do the transportation business of the country. If they farm it out that is their business, and not the business of the State or the Government. But will some gentleman who criticizes me, and charges me with working in the interests of the railroad companies, show me how this order of the Postmaster General damages them in the slightest degree?

Ordinarily, when a railroad rate is lowered, it affects the railroad company, but not when the Government lowers a rate of the parcel-post system. Instead of paying less than we did when this law was enacted, we pay 5 per cent more, because of the additional freight that would be carried by the railroads. If the Government wants to carry this mail at a loss and pay the railroads the same rate, I do not see how it can be argued that a reduction of the rate injures the railroad companies. It can not do it.

It seems to me it must be self-evident, however, that we can not compel the railroad companies to carry the mails at a loss to them. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that they are entitled to earn a reasonable return upon their investment. I would not be unfair or unjust to them. If we can not compel them to carry the mails at less than cost—and we can not, and ought not—how can the Government take the place of the railroad, and carry cheaper than the railroad company can?

It is a fact, as shown by the Hughes Commission, that the Government loses 7.39 cents per pound on second-class mail matter. That is the reason we can not have 1-cent postage for letters; yet this reduction, except as to the first pound, is as low as that. Will somebody figure out how it is that we have to carry second-class mail matter, newspapers and magazines, at a loss of 7.39 cents a pound, and yet we can carry fourth-class mail matter, more bulky, at 1 cent a pound and make a profit, and pay the same rate to the railroads for the carriage of both? It is less trouble to deliver newspapers and magazines than it will be to deliver 20-pound packages over the rural routes of this country.

Mr. President, I understand that the object of gentlemen who urge this legislation is to increase the weight limit to 100 pounds. I can not understand, however, how the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, without an investigation, can certify that it is for the best interests of the Government to carry these parcels at this price, nor why he believes the Government will make money by it, and yet allow the express rates to stand as they are to-day. If the Government can do that, the express companies can carry parcels at as low a rate; yet the Interstate Commerce Commission spent 20 months and $200,000 in an investigation of express rates, and has not reduced them.

Another thing, Mr. President, the rates established by law are lower than the rates charged by express companies. I ask permission to insert in my remarks, without reading, a table showing the rates charged under the present law, before it shall be changed by the Postmaster General, and the rates charged by express companies from 100 to 1,000 miles.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission will be granted.

[1] If prepaid.

Mr. BRYAN. In every instance the rates established by parcel post are lower than the rates established by the express companies, except for 10-pound packages going 100, 200, 400, and 500 miles and 11-pound packages going the same distance; and in those instances there is nowhere a difference of more than 5 cents for an 11-pound package. Yet the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission admits that the Government pays more money to its employees than the express companies do. The figures given to me by the former Senator from Oregon, Mr. Bourne, are that the express companies pay an average of $45 per month and the Government pays an average of $97 per month. Besides this, the Government pays more money for the transportation of its mail than the express companies pay for the transportation of their freight.

If these rates are successful, I shall be pleased. I do not believe they will be, however; and I suppose in the performance of a public duty I ought to say so before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. If they be not successful, we shall face a very heavy deficit.

A former Postmaster General issued an order under which the Government carries the mail by freight. The present Postmaster General, if he continues this to 100 pounds, as he thinks he will, will carry freight by mail. If this thing keeps up, pretty soon people will have to go to the freight office to get their mail and to the post office to get their freight.

The papers have stated that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has indefinitely postponed a resolution I introduced. I think the rules will permit me to state that I prepared a resolution, not affecting the order issued but providing that no more orders should be issued changing the rates of postage, the zones, or the weight limits. My understanding of the committee's action is that the resolution was not indefinitely postponed, but that action on it was deferred. I would vote for it to-day.

I did not intend, after the committee took that position, to have anything to say about the matter. I was unwilling, however, to remain quiet under these statements. I think I am within the limits when I say that the Postmaster General did not wish the committee to take any action upon the resolution, because it might be a reflection upon the order issued by him. Sooner or later the matter will again come before Congress, and whenever it does come I do not hesitate to say that I shall vote to take away from any one man the power to make these important changes, and that I shall go as far as any man to make reasonable, fair reductions by act of Congress. I do not think any disposition has been shown by any of the committees not to make reductions wherever they can be made; but we were under the impression that perhaps it would be better to act after investigation than to act first and then have the investigation.

Mr. President, these are the reasons for the conclusion I reached. It may be that my conclusion is wrong, but, nevertheless, it is honestly entertained.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I was surprised when I heard read the letter which was sent to the desk by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. I was surprised that the action he has taken should be construed as it was by the writer of the letter.

It has been my great pleasure to serve on a number of committees with the Senator from Florida, and I have never in my experience in public life found a man more devoted to the public interests and freer from the control of any sinister influence. The fact that he saw fit to introduce a resolution that would take from an executive officer the power to change existing law does not justify any allegation that he is endeavoring to serve some special interest. The fact that he opposed the changing of the rates on parcel-post matter until the committee of which he is a member should have completed an investigation, which it was charged by Congress to make, is certainly to his credit.

The difficulty in changing the rates which the parcel-post law now provides is that the Postmaster General can reduce his income, but he can not reduce his expenses. The law fixes a certain rate which the Government pays the railroads for handling the mails. That rate can not be changed by the Postmaster General. Any reduction in postal rates simply reduces the revenues of the Government, and leaves the revenues of the railroads from the Government the same.

In changing an express rate the Interstate Commerce Commission faces a different situation. The railroads get a percentage of the gross receipts of the express companies as their compensation for handling the express business, the percentage being approximately 50 per cent. Therefore, when the Interstate Commerce Commission reduces an express rate it also reduces the amount the railroad receives for handling the express matter. The reduction is shared equally by the railroad and the express company. When the Postmaster General reduces a parcel-post rate all of the reduction comes from the Government, and none of it from the railroad.

Like the Senator from Florida, I was surprised when I learned that the Interstate Commerce Commission had authorized the reduction of postal rates on parcel-post business far below those charged by the express companies, and had left the express rates as they are, much in excess of those which the Government charges. If the Interstate Commerce Commission, after expending more than $200,000 and devoting two years' time to an investigation of the express business, had reduced express rates, it would have taken from the railroads a part of their profits for handling express business. It has not yet undertaken that service to the public, however, but with an investigation of nine days it can authorize the reduction of the rates on parcel-post matter to a point far below the express rates. By such a reduction it does not in any degree affect the compensation of the railroads, while the reduction of express rates would. If we lose money through this order of the Postmaster General, the Government pays the bill, not the railroads.

I have made this statement because I think it is due the Senator from Florida that the Senate and the public should understand what he was undertaking to do, namely, to protect the revenues of the Government. If we could reduce parcel-post rates, as, in my judgment, we could in the first and second zones, as created by the law, we should first undertake to reduce the rates of pay which the railroads receive. The two operations ought to go together and ought to be considered at the same time, and ought to become effective at the same time. Unfortunately, however, whatever might have been the desire of the Postmaster General as to the compensation of the railroads, he has no power to reduce his payments to them. He can only reduce his receipts, and there is no doubt but that for the second zone the rates he has established will result in loss to the Government, but not to the railroads.

DOCUMENT ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask to have published as a public document Senate joint resolution No. 1, with the report of the Committee on Woman Suffrage upon it, and a part of the RECORD of Thursday's proceedings with reference to the receipt of the petitions by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the last statement made by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In the RECORD of Thursday's proceedings the addresses that were delivered when petitions were received in support of Senate joint resolution No. 1.

Mr. SMOOT. I dislike to have to call the attention of the Senator to it, but when I do he will understand it. Under the rules when an address is delivered in the Senate or in the House it is never published as a public document. That rule has been adhered to strictly in the past and I believe it ought to be in the future, because if it were otherwise a Representative or a Senator could deliver an address, have it printed as a public document and at public expense, and sent to his district or State in a campaign or at any time he might desire.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This document will not be made up entirely of the proceedings in the Senate on Thursday. It embraces the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution and the report of one of the Senate committees thereon, and in addition the addresses which were delivered in the Senate on Thursday.

I may say that this is not my suggestion, but it is made at the request of the ladies who presented the petitions, and the document has been prepared entirely by them. If the Senator from Utah objects, it is all right.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not want the Senator——

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire if there is a rule on the subject?

Mr. SMOOT. No Senate rule, but there is one by the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has it been printed?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether it has been printed or not, but it has been strictly adhered to in the past. I could call the attention of the Senate to Representatives who have delivered speeches in the House and Senators who have delivered speeches in the Senate, and asked that they be printed as a public document.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I ask the Senator a question? He speaks of a rule. Is it one of the standing rules of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a rule of the Joint Committee on Printing of the House and Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. SMOOT. Of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But not a rule of either House of Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. Not a rule of either House of Congress.

I am rather in sympathy with the desire to print the remarks in connection with the joint resolution. There is no objection at all to printing the joint resolution and there are no objections at all to printing the report of the committee, but to print the speeches would be simply printing as a public document speeches that were delivered in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I want to get this matter clearly in my mind, if possible. A Senator can have a reprint of what was said the other day and send it out under his frank. What difference does it make? If this is a public document, he has to pay for the printing of additional copies to send out, if he desires to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, a Senator can do that by paying for it, but that is not what this request is. The Government of the United States will pay for this printing.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the Government of the United States will pay for a few hundred copies.

Mr. CLAPP. A Senator can not get a reprint of a speech delivered by him and make it a public document without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes.

Mr. CLAPP. At his expense?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. If this is printed as a public document, I will ask the Senator from Utah how many copies will be printed?

Mr. SMOOT. About 1,672.

Mr. GALLINGER. And about 1,300 of those are sent around to libraries and the departments. So a Senator can send it out under his frank if he has it reprinted at his own expense.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not altogether what I have reference to. The chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing can order printing up to $200 worth with no action on the part of either the House or the Senate. Then above that amount, of course, the order would have to be made by either House. Similar requests to this have always been refused in the past. If the Senate wants to set the rule aside, well and good.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is not much danger of the Joint Committee on Printing investing in this propaganda, if it may be so called, if they are so hostile to the entire matter. I can not see any objection to printing 1,600 copies of this document.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object, since I have brought it to the attention of the Senate. The only excuse that could be offered for printing the speeches now is that they are in connection with other matters.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator if he understands that the Senate and House of Representatives, or either body, is bound by the rules of the Joint Committee on Printing? The Senate can do anything it desires, notwithstanding any rule which that committee has adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. That was discussed in the Senate the other day quite fully. The printing has by law been put in the hands of the Joint Committee on Printing to a certain extent. I do not want to go all over that ground again, because it was covered pretty thoroughly here 10 days or more ago. I can see danger in this proceeding, as far as the expense to the Government is concerned, if carried out; but, as I said, I am not going to object to it. I have done my duty in calling attention to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. What attracts my attention particularly, Mr. President, is that we are constantly ordering printed as public documents speeches delivered by Senators outside the Chamber, while speeches delivered in the Senate are to be discriminated against.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true. There is no rule against that and no objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. There never has been an objection raised when that has been requested. I suppose senatorial courtesy governs that. In view of that fact, why an objection should be raised to printing remarks made in the Senate Chamber when a Senator has a right to have it reproduced at his own expense and sent out under his frank, I can not quite understand.

Mr. SMOOT. One reason is because it is in the RECORD already. It is a part of the RECORD, and under the law a Senator or Representative can have printed at the Government Printing Office as many copies at his own expense as he wishes, at the actual cost plus 10 per cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the other case the speech appears in a newspaper in some part of the country, and we order it printed here, and it is sent out under a frank.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly the situation, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. THORNTON. I should like to inquire, before the request is put, just what it is that the Senator from Oregon asks to have printed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask that the title-page be read.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is not anything secret about this on its face. The ladies who ask to have the document printed intend to use it for educational purposes in the country. There is not any question about it. They have collected together, first, the joint resolution (S. Res. 1), which has for its purpose the amendment of the Constitution so that women may vote; second, there is the majority report of the Committee on Woman Suffrage; and, third, extracts from the proceedings which were had in the Senate Thursday when those ladies representing the different States presented their petitions. That is all there is to it.

Mr. THORNTON. I did not ask the Senator from Oregon to state the reason for the publication, nor do I ask for the language of the resolution. I should like to know exactly what it is he asks to have printed. I understood him to say that it is the speeches favoring the amendment he desires to have printed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, no; all the speeches that were made.

Mr. THORNTON. Everything that was said by any Senator at the time he presented petitions?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I may say with reference to that, I did not read it over, but just took it as presented by these ladies; and I presume the speeches are intact.

Mr. THORNTON. The point I make is that I am not willing to have simply the statements of Senators favoring the amendment printed, leaving out the statements of certain Senators giving the reasons why they do not favor it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We will put it all in. I request that it all be put in, if that is not already provided for.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask that the title-page be read.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no resolution attached to the request.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not say resolution; I said the title of the document that the Senator proposes to print. What is it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let the Secretary read it.

The SECRETARY. All that is written as a title-page is the following:

Write, wire, or see your Senators and Representatives. Urge them to submit the equal-suffrage amendment to the 48 States for ratification or rejection.
Extracts from CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Thursday, July 31, 1913.
Presented by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. GALLINGER. Manifestly the first paragraph ought not to go in the document.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That can be erased.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me that the Senator from Oregon had better examine what he has asked to have printed as a document so as to be sure that it is right.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have said frankly that it was not prepared by me. It has been presented by me at the request of the ladies. So far as the title-page is concerned I do not care anything about it. Let it be printed in the usual form of all matters which are printed as public documents.

Mr. JONES. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the title-page says "extracts" from the speeches delivered the other day, from which one would naturally infer that it does not include the speech, for instance, of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Oregon had better withdraw his request for the present and examine the document.

Mr. THORNTON. I want my speech to be there, and, if not, I shall object to anybody else's going there.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am anxious to have the speech of the Senator from Louisiana put in, if it is not already there.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the other day we all remember that there was inserted in the RECORD a document which afterwards the Senator at whose request it was inserted admitted that he had not read, and he asked the leave of the Senate to have it expunged from the RECORD, which was done.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In order that there may be no question about this matter, I will ask permission to withdraw the request for the present. I will go through it and see that there is nothing objectionable in it and that all the speeches are embraced in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. To resume what I was saying, I desire to complete my statement, although I yielded to the Senator not for the purpose of withdrawing his request, but I supposed he wanted to ask me a question. Inasmuch as the Senator has admitted that he has not read the document which has been sent to the desk, and inasmuch as it does not appear to be a complete account of all the proceedings that took place in connection with the event which the document concerns, I am very glad the Senator has asked leave to withdraw it for the purpose of making a complete examination of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is withdrawn for the present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NORRIS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Paxton and Lincoln, in the State of Nebraska, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Collegeview, Nebr., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey presented a petition of sundry citizens of Moorestown, N. J., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which was referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 2875) relating to the anchorage of vessels in navigable waters of the United States; and

A bill (S. 2876) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HUGHES:

A bill (S. 2877) to amend an act entitled "An act to carry into effect provisions of the treaties between the United States, China, Siam, and other countries, giving certain judicial powers to ministers and consuls or other functionaries of the United States in those countries, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1860; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 2878) granting an increase of pension to Dallas Wamsley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 2879) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Salida, Colo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 2880) granting an increase of pension to Julia J. Athington (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment to the tariff bill and ask that it be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. GALLINGER to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Add to the bill the following:

"SEC. —. That the act entitled 'An act to amend the national banking laws,' approved May 30, 1908, is hereby amended as follows: Strike out the words 'first month' where they occur in section 9 of said act approved May 30, 1908, and insert in lieu thereof the words 'first three months.'"

ADDRESSES AT NAVAL ACADEMY (S. DOC. NO. 143).

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, at the commencement exercises of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis June 6, 1913, a very splendid address was delivered by the Secretary of the Navy to the graduating class. I think it is of sufficient value to justify its being printed as a public document. It gives his ideals as to the personnel of the Navy. At the same time the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], president of the Board of Visitors, delivered an address. I ask unanimous consent that the two addresses be printed together as a public document.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, of course I could not object to the request, as it would be charged as partisan bias. I think there is only one remedy for this situation, and that is for every Member of the Senate upon his own behalf to put his foot down against using the RECORD for speeches that are made outside of Congress when matter is sent to us with a request that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SWANSON. This is not a request to print in the RECORD; it is a request to print as a public document. I think it is a very valuable contribution as to the ideals of the personnel of the Navy, what should be the purposes and designs of officers and men. I think it would be very well to have it printed as a public document, with a view of sending it to the officers and men.

Mr. CLAPP. I will not object.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLAPP. It may be a desirable document to print, but when placed in the position of saying what is desirable and what is not desirable, we are thrown in the attitude of partisan bias as objecting to things that may come from other political quarters. We are simply loading the RECORD and we are printing matter as public documents which ought not to be printed. There is only one remedy, and that is for each Senator to put his own foot down and say he will stand against it, because the moment a Senator makes such a request every Senator in this Chamber naturally is required, while he may protest, to say that he does not feel like objecting.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not rise to object. I remember making an address once before the graduates of the Naval Academy and I am glad it was not printed as a document, because my view of its value might not be the view of others. But I will ask the Senator from Virginia whether the Secretary of the Navy in this address advocated what he has advocated somewhere else, if not on that occasion, that the officers and the sailors of the Navy should be required to mess together?

Mr. SWANSON. This was an address by the Secretary of the Navy. His remarks are usually very appropriate and sensible in all his addresses. It was an address to the graduating class trying to form ideals in life for the men in the Navy. It is a very fine address, and I think it would be a great deal better to print it as a document than a great many that have already been printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume that it was not on that occasion that the Secretary of the Navy advocated what I stated?

Mr. SWANSON. It was not on that occasion. I do not know whether he ever delivered an address of that kind or character.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the Senator from Virginia if that was the address which was said to be the cause of the riot at Seattle?

Mr. SWANSON. Neither this nor any address by the Secretary of the Navy has ever occasioned any riot. This is not a political address; it is an address that I think it would be very well for young men entering the Navy to read.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he was quite sure that the Secretary of the Navy on any occasion had declared in favor of the sailors and officers of the Navy messing together?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there can be no question about it. It has been published broadcast and never denied.

Mr. KERN. There are hundreds of allegations made in the newspaper press of the country affecting not only the utterances of public men but their character that are not denied. I understood the statement in an entirely different sense from that stated by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator state what his understanding about it is?

Mr. KERN. The question has come up repeatedly under the former régime as to whether a meritorious sailor should receive promotion as an officer, no matter how meritorious he was. I have an instance in my mind now where a clean, bright-eyed, studious, hard-working sailor had prepared himself that he might be an officer of the Navy, and when the application was made before some board—I do not know the name of it—the proposition was made that it would not do to advance him, because it would not do to take such a man as that, a common sailor, into the mess with the officers of the Navy. I understood that the Secretary of the Navy is opposed to that kind of a declaration of caste in the Navy. The declarations were to the effect that where a common sailor, a seaman of any kind, had worked himself up and become capable of becoming an officer of the Navy, it did not lie in the face of any of the perfumed officers of the Navy to object to him because he had been a common sailor and because they did not feel like sitting at the same mess with a man who had been a common sailor.

I have heard the Secretary of the Navy express a sentiment opposed to that sort of a declaration as to caste, that sort of an un-American proposition. I have never heard him make any statement that a common sailor and the officers of the Navy should mess together. I have no sort of doubt that the declaration he made, that I have given just now, has been distorted so as to give it the color which has been given by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Indiana has not heard the Secretary of the Navy say certain things. Probably the Secretary of the Navy has said a great many things which the Senator from Indiana has not heard him say. I think, when the Senator makes careful inquiry into this matter, he will find that his ebullition this morning was unwarranted; and I will suggest to him that the Secretary of the Navy has rescinded that order——

Mr. KERN. What order?

Mr. GALLINGER. Admitting that it was not correct. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. KERN. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire a while ago to disclaim any personal knowledge on the subject at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire did not make any such disclaimer. He has just as good knowledge on that subject as has the Senator from Indiana, and has the same sources of information.

Mr. KERN. The Senator from Indiana, when the charge was made, called for some proof of the charge, which was a cruel one if untrue, and he understood that the Senator from New Hampshire knew nothing on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire will exercise his liberty under the rules of this body to ask a respectful question at any time of any Senator, and it does not lie in the mouth of the Senator from Indiana to read a lecture to him because he has done that. That may be as well understood now as at any other time.

Mr. KERN. I know that it has been the rule here—perhaps I should not say it has been the rule, but there has been an impression in certain quarters—that a young Senator, a man who has only been here a short time, should not dare to express his opinion against the opinion of one of the older Senators without being criticized for an "ebullition," or some other contemptuous remark being applied to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana has made a most remarkable discovery. The Senate knows better than that, and the Senator from Indiana knows better than that. He knows that there is not a Senator here, however short his term has been, who has not been at liberty to occupy all the time he desired in the Senate, and that no objection has ever been made to it. The pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will abundantly prove that statement to be correct.

Mr. KERN. No objection has been made on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, the Senator from Indiana must have some information that the rest of us have not, if it has ever been made either in the Senate or anywhere else.

Mr. KERN. I think it is pretty generally understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none, and the addresses will be printed as a public document.

SEGREGATION ORDER IN POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 147) submitted on the 1st instant by Mr. CLAPP, as follows:

Whereas it is reported that there has been a segregation order issued by some unknown source or authority in the Post Office Department; and

Whereas the clerks and employees have worked together peacefully for over 50 years; and

Whereas the said segregation order will cost the Government of the United States over $150,000: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into and to report by what authority the said segregation order was issued and what necessity, if any, exists for such order in the executive department after 50 years of perfect peace among the employees of the department, which order makes it very inconvenient for the clerks.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think perhaps that resolution had better go to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for consideration.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, of course, the resolution, as its preamble recites, is based upon the report that some such an order has been made in the Post Office Department as that referred to. The object in introducing the resolution was to ascertain whether that report is correct; and if so, what is the authority for it. I quite agree, as it affects the investigation at the hands of a given committee, that before the resolution is acted upon it is only due, as a matter of courtesy, that it be referred to the committee. I trust the committee, without any unnecessary delay, will report one way or the other on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3321, the tariff bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. Of course, we all are anxious to make headway with this tariff legislation and are doing our best, but we are unable to get to its consideration, as a rule, before 1 or half past 1 o'clock daily. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire if he thinks it might meet with approval—because at this stage I do not wish to unduly press the Senators on the other side of the Chamber—if we should meet at an earlier hour, say, at 11 o'clock? If the Senator is not able to answer now, I merely make the suggestion at this time so that he may inquire among Senators on his side of the Chamber before answering.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will make a frank answer. I am not authorized to speak for my associates as to that matter. Personally, I should not object to meeting at 11 o'clock, commencing, say, the middle of next week; but I can not speak for anyone else. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I will take the matter up with some of my associates and report to him within a day or two what the feeling is regarding it.

I appreciate, as the Senator does, that we are not making very rapid progress; and while I have been quoted, incorrectly as a rule, as desiring to obstruct the consideration of this bill, I do not feel at all in that spirit or mood. I want to see the consideration of the bill go along as rapidly as it can. There are a great many subjects yet to be debated—the metal schedule, the wool schedule, the cotton schedule, the income-tax provision, and the concluding provisions of the bill—which will necessarily take a good deal of time. While I feel, as the Senator doubtless does, that we ought to have every proper facility for expressing our views as individual Senators on any matter that concerns our States or the country, yet we ought to make as much progress as is consistent with a full and fair consideration of the various schedules.

That is all the answer I can now give the Senator, promising him that I will take the matter up and report to him what the feeling is on this side on the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope we may be able to do that after, say, Tuesday, at the furthest.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I did not hear the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not put it in the form of a request, but I made an inquiry whether it would be agreeable to Senators on the other side to meet daily at 11 instead of at 12 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from New Hampshire if they do not think it possible and practicable to meet at 10 o'clock instead of at 11 o'clock? We have been debating this bill now for several weeks, and the progress that has been made is deplorably slow. This fact is recognized generally throughout the country. I should like to be informed by the Senator from North Carolina if he does not think it practicable to meet at 10 o'clock?

I will state, in this connection, that I am informed that there are still a number of general or so-called set speeches to be made; but the country is becoming quite impatient with reference to the consideration of this bill. It is a conceded fact that the bill is going to pass; and what I want to know is why we can not meet at 10 o'clock, so as, if possible, to that much more hasten the consideration and passage of this measure?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to take the liberty to intrude a suggestion to all Senators who are now engaged in this thought, it is impossible, as I view the situation, for Senators to avoid the duty imposed by their constituents and the necessities of their position of attending to business in the different executive departments in the morning. It is almost impossible for them to escape those obligations, and, since they must be performed, I take the liberty of suggesting to the distinguished Senators from North Carolina and New Hampshire that as we are so situated we should continue meeting at the regular hour of 12 o'clock, but have evening sessions, as the morning time undoubtedly must be occupied in duties respecting the departments. I have nothing further to add than to make the suggestion that such was the course adopted by the House of Representatives on this bill——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I think it is impracticable at present, certainly, and it will be in the immediate future, to meet as early as 10 o'clock, and it is quite out of the question that we should at this stage of the proceeding have evening sessions. Later on we will doubtless be willing to hurry the matter in any way that is necessary, but I think the request made by the Senator from North Carolina as to meeting at 11 o'clock is a very proper one, and I think we had better first give that serious consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I personally would be very glad if we could meet at 10 o'clock. I think a little later, if, after the general speeches have been finished, we do not make better headway, we might meet a little earlier than 11 o'clock; and if we then do not make reasonably rapid speed, we might have night sessions. I think, though, that the general speeches are about over. There are a few more to be made; but I think next week we will not be troubled so very much with them.

I want to say that we have been on this bill only two weeks, and in the consideration of no other tariff bill which has been presented since I have been here have we advanced so far during the first two weeks as we have in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I regret very much indeed to observe that the senior Senator from the State of North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is not in his seat this morning, because it is my purpose to pay some attention to the address delivered by that Senator on this floor some time since. During the early part of the week I inquired of his colleague whether he would be likely to return soon, and was told by him that he hoped he might be here by this time. As the desire is general that the discussion proceed without any undue delay, I trust I shall not be considered guilty of any impropriety in proceeding accordingly as though the Senator were here, more particularly as he has indicated his purpose again to address the Senate before the close of the present debate.

The debate on the pending tariff bill may be said to have been begun after it was reported by the Finance Committee by the address of the senior Senator from North Dakota on Monday, July 14. It was a characteristic speech, assuming as an indisputable proposition that universal business ruin was to follow in the train of the enactment of the bill under consideration—the product of economic incompetency with an admixture of malevolence on the part of those responsible for it against every legitimate industry in general and toward agriculture in particular. It is worthy of note that nowhere in the remarks of the Senator was there any intimation that any reduction in the existing rates should be made—at least not in the agricultural schedule. Nothing that transpired during the consideration of the Payne-Aldrich bill—the terrific onslaughts of the ablest men among his party associates on this floor nor that has happened since; the political revolution which got its irresistible impulse from those assaults—has disturbed his sublime confidence in the sacred character of that measure.

He is determined neither to yield nor to waver in his conviction that the Nation-wide depression of 20 years ago was due to the effort to revise the tariff, though the senior Senator from Wisconsin should say that "it is puerile to attribute it to the Wilson tariff law of 1894," or the senior Senator from Iowa should assert that he concurs in the sentiment thus expressed. It is on the basis of the historic fact thus assumed to exist that he indulges in predictions of woe unspeakable to flow from the measure before us. In the name of the American farmer, whose convictions he presumes to speak, he protests, vainly he concedes, but vigorously nevertheless, against the removal or the reduction of the duties upon farm products. The entire bill is a conspiracy, he conceives, against the farmer who provides bread, in the interest of the denizen of the city who eats it. The lot of the farmer is a deplorable one at best, as he pictures it. Unremitting toil is rewarded in his case by a bare living, and the slightest reduction in the price of the products of his labor must entail bankruptcy and destitution. Now he stands face to face with them.

Upon whom does the Senator suppose this doleful tale and dire prediction, uttered so oracularly, are to make an impression? How have these conditions, the prospect of the passage of the act that promises so much misery, affected those most vitally concerned—the people whose thoughts turn to the cultivation of the soil as an avocation alluring above all others for the rewards it offers to honest endeavor?

The agricultural possibilities of the great State which I have the honor in part to represent in this Chamber, have, except so far as they rest upon artificial irrigation, been but recently revealed. They were scarcely contemplated by our own people six years ago. It was assumed, without any real serious test, that, except within very restricted areas, it was impossible to raise annual crops in Montana without irrigation. The reverse of this is now thoroughly established and generally recognized. It is the exception rather than the rule that aridity forbids the cropping of lands that may be tilled. Great railroad systems are projecting new lines across the State and contending with each other for favorable terminal sites because doubt has been dispelled as to the availability of our lands generally for farming. No matter how numerous or how important may be the works of irrigation prosecuted by the Government or promoted by private capital, the area covered or to be covered by them must remain insignificant in comparison with the vast regions that must depend for moisture upon the natural provision.

If you refer to a map of the State exhibiting the areas irrigated by the Government works, or which it is intended shall be irrigated by them, the disparity will be found so great as to be scarcely believable. They appear as comparatively insignificant strips along the rivers supplying the water. Yet they are only relatively trivial in extent, the remainder being so interminably vast. These limitless wastes, the grazing ground by turns of the buffalo and his domesticated brother, are now being turned into grain fields, the irrigated sections affording an affluence of forage and inviting the production of crops requiring or justifying intense cultivation. The rapidity with which this is being accomplished, as disclosed by the figures issued by the Department of Agriculture, is as gratifying as it is startling.

The acreage sown and the crop harvested in Montana, in the case of the principal cereals during each year since 1904, are shown in the following table:

WHEAT.

Year.	Acreage.	Bushels.
1905	119,469	2,843,326

We produced just a little less than 20,000,000 bushels of wheat in 1912 from 803,000 acres. Our area in wheat was nearly double that devoted to that grain the year before, when we sowed 429,000 acres, returning a little more than 12,000,000 bushels.

We had 460,000 acres in flax in 1912 as against 60,000 in 1910, yielding 5,520,000 bushels of seed. Montana stood second among the States of the Union in the production of that grain last year.

Our total cultivated area in 1912 exceeded that of the year before by upward of a half a million acres, an increase in the area cultivated to wheat of 87 per cent; of oats, 12; barley, 26; rye, 25; corn, 20; flaxseed, 8; and potatoes, 37.

I might say in passing that the average yield of wheat per acre in the United States is 15.9 bushels, while in Montana the average is 24.1 bushels. Those best qualified to venture upon prediction undertake to say that within 10 years Montana will lead the Union in the production of wheat.

Evidently there is a multitude of people who have recently come to believe that farming pays in Montana, however the case may be in North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator object to an interruption?

Mr. WALSH. Not at all.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Montana knows that the great development of the agricultural industry in Montana can be attributed to the fact that a bill was passed by Congress a few years ago permitting settlers to take what was called an enlarged homestead—320 acres.

Mr. WALSH. I should not like to admit that.

Mr. GRONNA. I state that as a fact, Mr. President. There are hundreds of people who have gone from my State into the State of Montana and have taken lands under the 320-acre act; and that is one of the reasons why farming has developed as rapidly as it has in Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad of the suggestion. I have no doubt it was a factor. Are they being deterred from embarking in the business because of dread that disaster may overtake them in consequence of the effects of the pending tariff measure on the price of farm products, either directly or indirectly? Not at all. They are coming faster this year than ever before.

The land office records disclose that 10,645 homestead entries were made during the first half of the current year, the distribution among the various land offices of the State being as follows:

Office.	First quarter.	Second quarter.
Billings	113	405
Bozeman	158	283
Glasgow	477	633
Great Falls	230	1,071
Havre	1,319	2,155
Helena	160	264
Kalispell	60	91
Lewistown	315	995
Miles City	652	1,140
Missoula	98	65

This does not represent the total number of settlers who have come to the State within the period named, for many must have established themselves on land not yet surveyed. It will be understood that no record of the claims of such settlers can be made until the official survey has been approved, when they become entitled to a preference right of entry. Scarcely a mail arrives that does not bring appealing letters asking that the public land surveys be speeded. I trust that before this session comes to a close an adequate appropriation may be made to meet this urgent necessity. It is safe to say that more than 12,000 strangers have come to our State in the past half year to engage in the business of farming.

A most comforting feature of this remarkable immigration is that among those now coming to Montana are a very considerable number from the Canadian Provinces to the north of us, including not a few born under our own flag, who have been allured by persistent effort, by generous advertising, and by a wise and liberal public land policy, in marked contrast with our own, temporarily to expatriate themselves.

The Montana department of agriculture and publicity has a list of the names and addresses of 1,700 people who have come to that State from Canada this year.

I allude at the present time to the figures given as conclusive proof not only that the business of farming remains attractive for the rewards it offers, but that despite the repressive policy which has unfortunately obtained in reference to the appropriation of our public domain by settlers, those seeking new homes thereon with a purpose to engage in the cultivation of the soil appear to share very little the dread that excites the mind of the Senator from North Dakota of competition from the Canadian farmer. Neither do his constituents. They have exhibited no such feverish interest in the present bill as was evoked by the reciprocity measure. At least their neighbors of South Dakota have been most marvelously indifferent to the catastrophe that is said to be impending. Senator CRAWFORD, testifying before the lobby investigating committee, said:

> Not a single citizen from my State has appeared in Washington for the purpose of discussing this tariff legislation. * * * Two or three years ago, when we had the Canadian reciprocity bill before the Senate, the people of my State were very much wrought up over it. They were indignant over that bill. They felt that it directly injured them in removing the tariff from flax and barley and wheat, and also the discrimination was so marked they felt personally grieved about it, and I received letters by the score. A delegation of farmers came down here from my State and went before the Committee on Finance, and I have remarked more than once to myself the difference in the manifestation of interest in that bill and in the tariff bill now pending. I have been puzzled to some extent to find a reason for the difference in the attitude of the people at that time and now.

The explanation of the condition thus adverted to is not at all difficult. The intelligent farmer of South Dakota recognizes that he has nothing to lose in a general revision of the tariff; that lowering the rates of duty generally promotes competition in the commodities he must buy, even though he may occasionally profit by a duty on some grains he raises.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me there?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. How does that explain the difference when, if there be any effect at all, the effect of the reciprocity bill and the effect of this bill must be very much the same? Does the Senator think our people have grown so much more intelligent in the short span of only two years? Does he think that is the explanation of it?

Mr. WALSH. I thought I had made my idea clear when I stated that there being by this bill a general reduction in all the duties—not a reduction in the duties on their products alone, leaving subject to the higher rates of duty everything they are obliged to buy and everything they consume—they might very readily object to the reciprocity measure and find nothing particularly to complain of in this.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; but there was a certain percentage of reduction in the manufactured products.

Mr. WALSH. True; but there was a reduction only on importations from Canada.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And in the same Congress bills were introduced and passed which at that time were openly said to be compensatory bills for the farmer, putting agricultural implements on the free list, and that sort of thing; and yet the stream of letters came. I have been inclined to think they were simply accepting a situation in regard to which they thought it was not worth while to make any protest because it was a foregone conclusion.

Mr. WALSH. Possibly some Senator might draw a different conclusion. I am giving mine.

It was against a convention that admitted free the products which came into competition with his while he was required to buy in a highly protected market that the farmer rebelled. Had the agreement arrived at pursuant to which the reciprocity bill was introduced embraced provisions according to him such advantages as accrued from the farmers' free-list bill, he would have exhibited, in all probability, as little concern as he does now over the pending measure. He sees compensation in this bill already adverted to in the debate, even if it be admitted that a duty on wheat accorded to him some advantage. It was the absence of such in the reciprocity measure that provoked his wrath; and it can not be rekindled by any such figures as were adduced in support of the gloomy views expressed by the Senator from North Dakota. Take those in relation to flax, for instance. It is the very general conviction, even among those who entertain the most fixed convictions of the error of the theory upon which the bill is framed, that it represents an honest, studious, patriotic effort to meet the just expectations aroused by the success of the party in power—an earnest attempt to put into law the fiscal policy of the Democratic Party. In the general denunciation leveled against it in the address referred to as being the product of minds utterly unable to cope with the subject with which they presumed to deal, the Senator took occasion to say:

> I dare say there is not a man among those who cut down the flaxseed duty who has the faintest idea what it costs to thrash a bushel of flaxseed, much less what it costs to raise it.

My State, Mr. President, bordering his, in the same latitude, stands next to it in the production of flaxseed, as stated. Why should he arrogate to himself and his party associates such superiority of knowledge concerning this important field product? I can not refrain from expressing my regret that he should feel, much less publish to the world, so ill an opinion of the equipment which the Senators from Montana brought to the discharge of their duties here. I came prepared to advise the Senate, not only what it costs to raise and thrash flaxseed in Montana, but what it costs to raise and thrash it in the State of North Dakota as well; and as the figures will be more or less instructive and illuminating I shall trespass so far upon the patience of the Senate as to descend into detail.

A lady residing in my town had owned for a great many years 160 acres of land in Wells County, N. Dak., a region that has been settled since the early eighties. The county is traversed by two lines of railroad. It is situated about in the center of that portion of the State which lies east of the Missouri River. The land in question, as the sequel will show, is as good as there is in the State outside of the Red River Valley. She had been trying vainly to sell it, hoping eventually to realize $25 an acre for it. She was finally offered $2,800, and, being about to close the deal, was dissuaded and induced to have it plowed up and sowed to flax. She entered into a contract with a gentleman, who undertook to break the land at $2 an acre, provided he might crop it on the terms he proposed, the regular price for breaking being $3.50 per acre. By the contract she was required to pay for the seed and one-half the thrashing bill and was to receive one-half the crop. Owing to the lateness of the season only 108 acres were broken, the seed, one-half bushel to the acre, costing $135. This, with the cost of breaking, made her total outlay $351. The crop thrashed out 1,296 bushels and 24 pounds and sold in Minneapolis at $1.39½ per bushel, or $1.29 at the shipping point, yielding $1,655.26, of which she received $827.63, less one-half the cost of thrashing, at 25 cents a bushel, $162, and the cost of hauling $71.28. The lady was able to pay out of the crop for the breaking of the land, and she had left better than 8 per cent on the highest price she could get for the land. If credit is taken for the difference between the cost of breaking and ordinary plowing at $1.50 per acre, a liberal allowance, her profits amounted to $557.35, or a little less than 20 per cent on the value of the land.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator during what year that was?

Mr. WALSH. Last year; 1912.

Mr. GRONNA. I was simply going to say to the Senator that in the locality where I live we can not get breaking done at that price. If I understood the Senator correctly, he said the breaking was done for $2 an acre.

Mr. WALSH. Only on the condition that he could crop the land on the terms he offered, the ordinary price being $3.50.

Mr. GRONNA. In the case of land which has formerly been broken, we are paying for plowing this year from $2 to $3 per acre.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, I am giving the actual figures here of an actual transaction. The correspondence I have here in my files.

The man who did the work seems to have been quite satisfied with his returns, for he took the contract to break and crop the remainder of the unbroken ground and to work that already broken for one-fourth the crop, he to provide everything and pay all expenses. If the equivalent of the flax crop of last year be returned this year in other grain, she will get $3.90 per acre, or about 22 per cent on the price of the land. But that was a big yield she got—better than the average of North Dakota for last year, which was only 9.7 bushels to the acre. It would not be extraordinary at all in Montana, whose average yield last year was just what she got—12 bushels. But even if she does as well this year as the average of last year, she would make better than 17 per cent on her money, and if the crop should be as near a failure as it was in 1911, when the average was 7.6 bushels, she will make 14 per cent. And even then the man who works the place will come out even, for his share of the crop will bring him $7.41 an acre; and extensive experiments, reported in Bulletin 73 of the Department of Agriculture, show that flax is raised in Minnesota at an average cost of $5.314 per acre, exclusive of land rentals, and $6.514 on $20 land, figuring 6 per cent on the land value.

The farmer "should receive for his wheat at least, per bushel, $1.40; for his flax $2," the distinguished Senator says in connection with professions of his capacity to speak from personal experience and study. I can assure anyone interested that he can come to Montana and grow rich on wheat at 80 cents and flax at $1.25, though I hope as sincerely as the Senator possibly can that he may get even better than $1.40 for the one and $2 for the other.

I have said thus much, and perhaps tediously, because I felt that the general circulation of the speech of the Senator in his State and others adjacent would have a tendency to deter some from coming to our State to help us develop its rich resources or prompt them to choose rather to swell the tide of emigration which, to our reproach, has in recent years rolled across the boundary to the Canadian northwest.

What is the complaint, Mr. President, that is made in respect to flaxseed? What is this terrific blow that has been dealt the farmer of the Northwest? The duty has been reduced from 25 cents a bushel to 15 cents. And it is this that is to carry desolation to the already gloomy fireside of the poverty-stricken farmer, brought to the verge of ruin by eight-hour legislation and similar oppressive enactments.

The Montana farmer will get along handsomely with an advantage of 15 cents over his Canadian competitor, however it may be with his North Dakota neighbor.

I believe with Thomas Jefferson that "cultivators of the earth are the most valuable citizens. They are the most vigorous, the most independent, the most virtuous, and they are tied to their country and wedded to its interests by the most lasting bonds."

I have trespassed to some extent upon the patience of the Senate lest silence should be construed into an indorsement of a mendicant plea uttered on this floor in the name of those who have brought distinction to my State in the pursuit of this eminently honorable calling.

I should quit the subject of flax here were it not for another distressful cry sent up in this remarkable address, characterizing not only the spirit in which it is made, but, in a lesser degree, much of the criticism that has been leveled against this bill. I refer to that part of it which arraigns the Democratic Party for putting flax tow on the free list, pursuant to the policy of the bill to free list the raw material of all fabrics—cotton, wool, flax, and hemp. This is taking the black bread of poverty from the mouth of wasted hunger. I quote his language from the RECORD:

> From the best information I can secure I am convinced that free tow of flax will close every tow mill in the country and thereby render worthless every ton of flax straw raised in the United States, amounting, I believe, to about 8,000,000 tons.

That amuses, I see, his colleague. And well it may.

Why, the manufacture of tow in this country, Mr. President, is so inconsequential as that it finds no place in the census reports.

There are a few small mills in the State of Minnesota, the fiber product being used for upholstering and similar purposes, but the output is inconsequential and the price paid so trifling that the straw will not stand shipment any distance. The lady to whom I referred wrote to her agent at Fessenden about the possibility of disposing of her flax straw. He answered:

> As to flax straw, will say that our farmers burn it. Of course there is less flax raised here every year, but at the same time the acreage amounts to quite a little, but probably not enough to warrant anyone in putting in a flax-fiber mill. I talked this matter over with Mr. Brinton (the lessee) to-day, and he had in quite a few acres of flax besides what he had sown on your land. He told me that he wrote several mills and that their quotations were all about the same. He said that he remembered that the Union Fiber Co. of Minnesota offered him $4.40 per ton f. o. b. Fessenden. He said he figured out what it would cost for baling, labor, hauling, freight, etc., and that it would amount to $3.50 or $3.75 per ton. And he said that no money could be made at that rate. He said he believed, however, that the large expense of preparing the flax straw for shipment was due to the poor facilities for handling a proposition of that kind.

Now, if it be true, as asserted and as seems to be the case, that even where there is a market at all, the price flax straw will command is just barely enough to pay for hauling to the mill, how can it be possible that tow mills will be driven out of business, as the Senator from North Dakota says he is informed will be the case, by the removal of the duty from their products? Can it be hauled any more cheaply in Canada or the mill be operated any less expensively there? They send their wheat to Minneapolis to be milled because it can be done more cheaply by reason of the power there. Is not this straining to the bursting point and beyond in order to discover something with which to find fault? I may say in passing that my information is, as the conditions suggest, that the duty on flax tow is merely nominal in the case of the product of straw which has been allowed to mature in order to produce seed.

A huge conspiracy between the brewing interests on the one side and the Democratic Party on the other to fleece the farmer is scented in the paragraph reducing the duty on barley from 25 cents to 15 cents a bushel. The junior Senator from South Dakota, in the course of his thoughtful address delivered some days since, counseled a reduction in the duty on barley, proposing 20 cents instead of 15. Is it to be understood that he, too, is involved in the conspiracy referred to, or are we to infer that he has entered into one of his own? Is not 15 cents a sufficient margin upon which to permit the American farmer to compete with the Canadian in barley, a grain the average farm price of which on December 1 last was 50.5 cents a bushel, and never went beyond an average of 86 cents on that date, assumed to be in the marketing season, in 20 years?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but the Senator in quoting the average price of barley of course gets his figures the same as the rest of us get them, from reports. However, the Senator from Montana knows that the farmers of his State or of my State receive no such price as he now quotes. I myself sold thousands of bushels of barley last fall at 32 cents a bushel.

Mr. WALSH. The point I am making is that this is the average price throughout the Union. Of course, we out there, contending against enormous freight rates, do not get even this much. I undertake to say that out in our country we do not ordinarily get more than from 30 to 50 cents a bushel for barley, upon which we are protected under the bill now before the Senate 15 cents a bushel.

Mr. GRONNA. But, if the Senator will permit me, it is not only the freight rate but it is the combination which we have in the country which buys our barley. It is true that the farmer of this country is in the hands of the American brewer when he comes to sell his barley. It is true that the farmer, even with the protection, has not received the price for his barley that he is entitled to. It is also true that in years with a short crop he has received the benefit of the full amount of the duty of the present law—30 cents a bushel. But in years when we have had a large surplus he has not received the benefit of the full amount.

Mr. WALSH. Why, it was shown by the testimony of a witness as well qualified to speak as any man in the United States, Prof. A. E. Chamberlain, formerly with the Agricultural College of South Dakota, on the hearing before the Senate Finance Committee on the reciprocity bill, a witness produced to combat that measure, that the difference in the cost of producing a bushel of barley in this country and in Canada is only 5 cents. (Vol. 1, Reciprocity with Canada, 117.)

Bear in mind that is the difference between the average cost throughout both countries. I am not prepared to admit that they raise barley any cheaper anywhere in Canada than we can in Montana. The lessened cost there arises from their greater average yield per acre, but they get only 30 bushels per acre, while our average for 10 years is 34.61.

Upon what theory does the Senator base his complaint of a duty three times the difference in the cost of production here and abroad, or is he not a subscriber to the doctrine that such difference should measure the rate of the duty? Is his address to be taken seriously, or is it to be regarded as a piece of humor, more or less embittered by the political revolution in consequence of which he finds himself in the minority?

I have no disposition to open up the discussion precipitated by the reciprocity measure, as to whether the farmer derives any more benefit from a duty on wheat than he would on corn or cotton, all of which are among our leading exports, but simply append, in answer to the figures he submitted showing that wheat prices ruled higher in Winnipeg, at times, than in Minneapolis, a table indicating how they have ranged throughout the present year, from which it will appear that since the 1st of March the advantage has been decidedly with the Winnipeg market. Without reading this, Mr. President, I will ask leave to have it printed as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). The Chair hears no objection. [See Appendix 1.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not sure that I got correctly the last statement of the Senator. Was it that the Winnipeg market with reference to barley was more favorable to the farmer than the Minneapolis market?

Mr. WALSH. With reference to wheat.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, it was wheat. I thought it was barley.

Mr. WALSH. In the general catastrophe in which the northwestern farmer is to be involved, as the Senator prophetically sees him, the sheep and wool raiser is to disappear utterly. That he may survive has not entered into the calculation of the Senator at all. True he does not trouble himself with particulars or proof; he contents himself with stating the fact. Possibly he does not feel that degree of familiarity with the details of the subject as he enjoys in respect to flaxseed. Anyway, he advises the Senate that though raw wool carries a duty of 11 cents a pound, the producer "has actually received a benefit of from 7 to 9 cents." He does not deem it necessary to give any authority for this statement. If it were true, his predictions of calamity to this industry might be verified. But it is not true, I am happy to state. The tariff never did increase the price of wool to exceed 4 cents a pound, according to Judge William Lawrence, president of the National Woolgrowers' Association, in an address to that body delivered in 1897, or 5½ cents, according to Hon. Fred Hagenbarth, also president of the same association, in his annual address for the year 1911. In the course of the debate on this floor on the Underwood wool bill, coming here from the House during the Sixty-second Congress, my predecessor, Hon. Joseph M. Dixon, on July 12, 1911 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 2860), stated that the difference in the price of raw wool in Boston and in London was then and for six months had been no more than 2 cents per pound. He attributed the approximation of the price in the two markets named to the agitation for free wool, a contention that is disproved by the following table of wool prices that have prevailed in Montana for the past 10 years, taken from the last report of the bureau of agriculture of that State, page 167:

	Cents.
1903	14.50
1904	15.00
1905	21.00
1906	20.00
1907	21.00
1908	15.00

	Cents.
1909	20.00
1910	18.00
1911	17.00
1912	20.50

The current price for 1911 was only 1 cent per pound lower than that which prevailed in 1910, but it was 2 cents higher than that received in 1908. It is not unlikely that the pendency of the tariff bill was utilized by the buyers to drive a better bargain, just as it is this year. In fact, the risk of tariff legislation has been used to bear prices to such an extent that many well-informed growers insist that prices are now on a free-wool basis. Such was the opinion of the Hon. William Lindsay, United States marshal of our State, an exceptionally well-informed student of wool prices and an extensive grower, expressed in an interview given out at the opening of the present season. I ask to have it read from the desk as it appears in a newspaper account thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OPTIMISTIC VIEW OF THE WOOL MARKET.

HELENA, April 14.

"Considering the conditions of the trade, the conditions of the clip, and the decreased number of sheep there are in the United States I do not expect to see the price of wool go lower than it has been for the last three years," said United States Marshal William Lindsay to-day. Mr. Lindsay is one of the largest sheepmen of the State.

"Prices for the last three years have been down to a free-wool basis," he continued, "and for this reason sheepmen should not be influenced by any change in the tariff. They should not allow the arguments that the wool buyers will advance to cause them to accept any lower prices than they have been getting.

"The wool lofts in the East are empty, the manufacturing plants are pretty well employed, and conditions generally are such that prices should not go lower.

"It should not be forgotten either that everybody looked for raw hides to drop when the tariff was removed. Instead, however, the prices of hides advanced, and so did the price of shoes."

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say that the price of wool in Western States is as high as it was last year?

Mr. WALSH. I do not say so.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator did in his statement.

Mr. WALSH. I am going to reach that in just a minute, when I will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I wish to ask another question. Does the Senator think the manufacturer will buy wool to-day upon any other basis than free wool when he knows that there will be free wool within a month or so?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, I do not undertake to say what he will do.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that whenever a manufacturer buys wool in the grease by the time he buys it in the Western States and gets it into the factory and puts it through the factory into cloth six months will have elapsed; that is true, is it not?

Mr WALSH. Of course, I am not entering into a general discussion of the wool question. I am simply presenting and having read at the desk the views of a very prominent wool-grower of my State, a Republican Federal official, a very excellent gentleman, for whom I entertain the very highest regard, and I am giving you his idea about the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that last year there was a shortage in the wool crop in the world of over 240,000,000 pounds. That is why wools are so high in the world to-day. But wait until the normal conditions come back.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the Senator is venturing upon a prediction.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask if the Senator does not know that when normal conditions return the wool prices of the world will be less than they are this year?

Mr. WALSH. I was going to advance some ideas a little later on which will indicate the view I have that the prices will not be any lower than the are now.

Mr. SMOOT. The only way, of course, that that could possibly happen would be that there would be a shortage of the wool crop in the world; and last year there was a shortage of the wool crop of the world of over 240,000,000 pounds.

Mr. WALSH. Recently Hon. Charles Williams, the president of the Montana Woolgrowers' Association, addressed an open letter to the members of that organization counseling them to hold their clips for 20 cents, and asserting that the market conditions entitle them to that price.

Mr. President, as the article is somewhat long, I do not like to detain the Senate with reading it, but will content myself with reading the heading of the article:

Montana wool should bring 18 to 20 cents.—C. H. Williams, president of Montana Wool Growers' Association, issues statement.

I ask that the same be printed as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, that will be done. [See Appendix 2.]

Mr. WALSH. Few have realized as much as 20 cents, but an unusually large quantity has been shipped on commission in the expectation of obtaining approximately that amount. Three companies with which I am associated were offered 17 cents, but declined and consigned. Two of these clips brought 20 cents last year, and the third 19. If we realize 18 cents we shall receive approximately the average price of the last 10 years and from 2 to 3 cents more than the prevailing price when I went into the business in 1903 after the Dingley law had been in force six years.

It is growing more and more expensive to run sheep in the West, because of the narrowing of the range. Great areas devoted exclusively to pasturage only a few years since and regarded as valueless except for such use are now cultivated farms. Owing to that condition, more or less prevalent throughout the West, our flocks are being rapidly depleted. We are losing a quarter of a million annually in Montana, and the number of sheep in the Nation is diminishing, as indicated by the following figures from the last Yearbook:

Number of sheep in United States.

Jan. 1, 1910	57,216,000
Jan. 1, 1911	53,633,000
Jan. 1, 1912	52,362,000
Jan. 1, 1913	51,482,000

The high-water mark was reached in 1903, when we had 63,965,000. Since then we have lost practically 12,500,000 head, while our population has increased in round numbers 14,500,000, or 18 per cent.

Our sheep have been going, in numbers increasing annually, to the slaughtering pens, the Crop Reporter for February, 1913, giving the following numbers absorbed by the principal stock markets. In—

New South Wales suffered a loss of 6,000,000 head last year, according to official figures, as a result of a drought. The depletion of our western flocks because of the absorption of the range will continue in all reasonable probability at an accelerated rate for some years, until eventually the industry will be confined to localities adjacent to the mountain pasturage. There is bound to be a dearth of mutton in a few years, if not of wool. Those obliged to retire from the business by the advancing settlement of the country more than recoup their losses by the increasing value of their land holdings. Those situated so as that they can remain in the business have every prospect of reasonable returns, as mutton prices are bound to advance with the curtailment of the supply. Sympathy over the deplorable plight of the sheep grower is altogether gratuitous. He is not asking it. Give him a law which will prevent the fraudulent dealer from imposing upon the public by palming off as a pure-wool fabric of original manufacture from the long fiber goods that are largely cotton or the product of renovated rags, shoddy, or other waste; give him free access to the public range, the mountain pastures with their sparse herbage which becomes a menace to the forests unless grazed, and he will ask no odds.

The world price, fixed by the London sales, protects him against any such loss as attended the industry when the experiment of free wool was last tried in the midst of financial disturbances and business depression that involved and overwhelmed the Old and the New World alike.

The duty on wool has assumed an importance politically out of all proportion to the significance of the industry in the economy of the Nation. Schedule K has been, as it was denominated by ex-Senator Aldrich, the very citadel of protection. No tariff law, constructed in professed conformity to the teachings of that system, which has gone into force in the last half century, could ever have been passed except by compliance with the demands of those insisting on a duty on wool. The projectors of both the Dingley law and the Payne-Aldrich measure needed the votes of western Senators from woolgrowing States, and got them by conceding all that was asked. Patriotic Republican Senators inveighed against this schedule on the passage of the bill, and a Republican President, while commending the act as a whole, denounced this particular schedule as indefensible—a commentary that the stoutest defenders of Schedule K when it was in process of enactment will not now controvert.

Occupying thus the unique position of the keystone in the arch of the protective system, Schedule K suffered in the public estimation, not only because of its own iniquities, but vicariously for the accumulated villainies of the completed measure of which it formed a part. When the advocates of a wool duty, with a fatuity that must now seem to them incomprehensible, prevailed upon President Taft to veto a relief bill that carried a 29 per cent ad valorem rate the deluge came.

What is there of magnitude in the industry to justify the preeminence it has had in the determination of the fiscal policy of the Government? It has been the dominant influence in controlling the politics of a half dozen Western States. Montana leads the Union in sheep and in the production of wool, and yet our flax crop last year yielded almost as much as our wool—flax returning $6,182,000 and wool $6,870,970, according to the figures given by the Montana Bureau of Agriculture. Four years ago the culture of flax in our State was almost unknown.

Ohio is, and for many years has been, first among the States east of the Mississippi in the production of wool. Its political life has been to no small degree colored, if not fundamentally affected, by the question of a duty on wool. But it produces eggs, to say nothing whatever of poultry, in value more than five times that of its annual wool clip.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Montana will excuse me, was not the chief objection to Schedule K on account of the tariff on woolens rather than on account of the tariff on wool?

Mr. WALSH. I am sure that that is the case; and it acquired an odium, so far as raw wool is concerned, that was not deserved by reason of that which justly attached to the other end of the schedule.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator yield to me just for a word there?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from Montana has just now referred to the importance of the production of flax in his State, and a short time ago he discussed the production of barley. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the figures taken from the report of the Tariff Board both in relation to the production of flax and of barley in the Senator's State, and comparing the prices with the prices in Saskatchewan, a Province, I think, adjoining Montana on the north. For instance, as to flaxseed, the figures reported by the Tariff Board show the price per bushel for 1910 in Montana of flaxseed to have been $2.40, while in Saskatchewan, the Province adjoining Montana, the price was $2.08, making a difference in the State of Montana of 32 cents.

In the same report with reference to wheat, the price per bushel in Montana was 86 cents and in Saskatchewan 65 cents. I have the table here for wheat and flax, but not the figures as to barley in this table, except that in the report of the same board giving the differences in price, they say that from the year 1900 up to 1909, the Chicago price as compared with the Winnipeg price was in favor of Chicago from 1 cent to 46 cents; and that during half of the time the difference in favor of Chicago would average above 13 cents. Now I ask the Senator whether, in view of those figures, he does not think it is better for Montana, as well as for that entire agricultural region, to preserve this discrimination?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota will scarcely ask me to undertake to answer that question without an opportunity to analyze those figures which he quotes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are from the report of the Tariff Board.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very glad to consider them at the proper time. I was not arguing that matter at all, but I was endeavoring simply to combat the proposition that this thing means ruin to the farmers; that is all. Whether the farmer does actually obtain the benefit or does not obtain the benefit is aside from the purpose of my present argument.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think the contention is that this proposed action will necessarily ruin the farmer; but it will certainly injure the farmer and destroy a discrimination in his favor that is as marked as these figures show.

Mr. WALSH. Of course I do not now undertake to answer those figures at all.

I was discussing, Mr. President, the relative importance of flax and wool in the State of Montana. The distinguished senior Senator from Utah, whose profound acquaintance with the details of the tariff schedules has awakened my admiration, has heretofore been disposed to regard as sacrilegious any assault upon Schedule K, whose valiant champion he became when a revision of the tariff was last attempted. If eggs bring 30 cents a dozen in his State—and you can never buy them for less in mine—the hens of Utah contribute of that product an aggregate in value two-thirds of that of the wool shorn from its sheep.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the Senator from Montana does not impute to me——

Mr. WALSH. Responsibility for the hens?

Mr. SMOOT. No; belief in a protective tariff in case it only benefits my State.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly not. I simply spoke of this——

Mr. SMOOT. I am a protectionist in every fiber of my soul. I believe in protection to every section of this country. I offer no apology for it. I believe just as surely as I believe that I am alive that it is for the best interest of this country. I am glad to say that I am for protection for Arizona, for Utah, for New England, for the South, for every section of this country. It makes no difference to me whether it is wool or whether my State raises wool or not; I care not for that.

Mr. WALSH. I was simply selecting the Senator's State because it happened to produce about as much from hens as from sheep. It is quite time that the destinies of a great Nation should cease to be turned in accordance with the demands of an industry important to individuals, of course, but relatively painfully inconsequential.

We have listened to predictions of ruin to the beet-sugar industry in consequence of the provisions of the pending bill, should it become a law, since the first day it appeared before us, and probably shall not hear the last of them until the consideration of it closes. Many of these are made as unreflectingly as those that voice the dark forebodings as to barley and flax straw. More are but the echoes of the threats uttered by the sugar lobby to coerce concurrence in their greedy purpose so richly satisfied in former tariff acts.

The duty on sugar has become particularly odious owing to a combination of circumstances with which the public is familiar. The Sugar Trust was the prototype for the gigantic combinations that have become offensive by reason of their contempt of the law and their monopolization of industry. Its despicable thievery from the Government by false weights gave a character to every enterprise with which it happened to be associated of the most unenviable nature. Its jugglery with the Wilson bill is remembered with execration. The sugar interests got what they asked in the Dingley Act, and then proceeded immediately to capitalize the extortion it permitted, launching beet-sugar companies with stock representing a modicum of money and a profusion of water.

They have for more than 20 years maintained at Washington a most industrious and efficient lobby to resist every measure, however patriotic its purpose, that might have any tendency to interfere with the tremendous subsidy the laws accorded them. Every change, if they were to be believed, spelled ruin to the beet-sugar industry. We wanted Hawaii for purposes of national defense. They acclaimed that it meant ruin to beet sugar. This prophecy was vain.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire what was the production of sugar at the time we acquired Hawaii?

Mr. WALSH. I have not the figures. It was in 1898, and the production was quite small compared with what it is at present.

Mr. BRISTOW. I thought we had acquired Hawaii long before 1898.

Mr. WALSH. We have had a reciprocal agreement with that country since 1876.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; so the acquisition in 1898 did not affect the sugar business at that time, because we had had free sugar for years.

Mr. WALSH. I am simply stating the character of opposition that was offered to the acquisition of Hawaii by the sugar lobby declaring that it meant the ruin of that industry.

Mr. BRISTOW. When we had had free sugar from Hawaii for many years prior to that?

Mr. WALSH. I am not responsible for any inconsistencies there may have been in the argument. I shall quote the testimony of the head of it concerning his attitude with respect to the matter.

Mr. BRISTOW. And certainly arguments like that would have no influence with intelligent men, and it seems to me would hardly be worthy of the Senator's recognition in a very able argument, such as he is now making.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator did not do me the honor to remain and has not had an opportunity to follow the course of the discussion. I have no doubt in the world that he was taken away by important business; but I have simply been addressing myself to the claim of the threatened destruction to the beet-sugar industry, and I have been endeavoring to trace a large portion of it to the lobby maintained here in its interest; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if he does not believe that free sugar will destroy the local production of sugar in this country?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think it will destroy it in the State of Montana, if the Senator desires to ask me that question.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not think it will destroy it in Montana?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so at all.

We incurred an obligation to Cuba in which the national honor was involved and undertook to repay it by a reciprocal trade agreement. Again ruin impended, but the prophets of evil proved false prophets. The Philippines alone of all our territories and possessions were excluded from our markets. It was proposed to admit 300,000 tons of sugar from them free, and again the representatives of the Nation were told that the beet-sugar industry would be blasted. It has remained reasonably healthy, and it is believed in Montana to be paying splendidly on the money invested.

In fact, the magnificent beet-sugar factory in that State has paid so well that the handsome profits it has been able to make have never been given publicity. In all the literature the company conducting it has issued, it has studiously refrained from advising the public just how much it has been making. If it were not asking for legislation to enable it to obtain a reasonable return on the money invested the public would, perhaps, have no proper concern in its profits. Asking the people generally to burden themselves with a tax in order that it may exist, it ought to be quick to disclose what advantage it enjoys under the concession now granted the industry.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator, in answer to a question put by my colleague, thought that the sugar industry in Montana would not be injured by the proposed legislation.

Mr. WALSH. I would not like to have the Senator understand that by that I mean they will continue to make as much profit as they have been making.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator, then, thinks they will not make as much profit?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the Senator thinks they will make a sufficient profit?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator how many sugar factories there are in Montana?

Mr. WALSH. One.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. One. The possibilities of the production in Montana have, of course, not been reached nor anywhere near reached?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think that the promise of free sugar will have any tendency to prevent the building of new factories and the investment of further money in that industry?

Mr. WALSH. Frankly I should say that it would.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator not think that that would be an unfortunate thing?

Mr. WALSH. It would be unfortunate, as a matter of course, for those immediately benefited. As to whether it would be an unfortunate thing for the people of the country at large is a question quite aside from the purpose of my discussion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does not the Senator think it would be an unfortunate thing for Montana, for Utah, for Idaho, for Oregon, and for all those States which are peculiarly adapted to the raising of sugar beets, if the growth of this industry should be checked?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the Senator will understand that it was not my purpose at this time to discuss the merits or demerits of the tariff. I am simply endeavoring to confine myself to an inquiry to meet the charges of ruin—that is all; and I must refuse to enter into a general discussion at this time with the Senator on that question, which, of course, will be thoroughly canvassed when Schedule E is reached.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course I would not ask the Senator these questions or any questions if he is unwilling that I should do so; but I was anxious to have the Senator's view upon that matter, as to whether or not the placing of sugar upon the free list, in the Senator's opinion, would have the effect to greatly retard the development of that industry in those States?

Mr. WALSH. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that it will.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, whatever may be said of the remainder of the country, it would certainly be injurious to those States.

Mr. WALSH. Injurious is another thing. I have canvassed a little later on in my discussion just about what it costs us, and it is a question of balancing cost against benefit.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In view of the Senator's answer upon that matter, let me ask the Senator another question. Does the Senator think that the effect of placing sugar upon the free list will be to reduce the retail price of sugar?

Mr. WALSH. I have not the slightest doubt of it. It appears to be universally conceded that it will, at first at least.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To what extent does the Senator think it will?

Mr. WALSH. I shall likewise discuss that later on.

What is the subsidy it now enjoys, or that part of it contributed by the people of Montana? The duty on Cuban raw sugar is now $1.34 per hundred. Under free sugar the price will drop that amount, or, say, $1.25. Each individual in the United States consumes annually 80 pounds of sugar. If the price is reduced as suggested, he saves just $1 annually on his sugar bill. If there are 500,000 people in Montana, the State is paying $300,000 annually to keep up the sugar-beet business. It is said, however, that of the total of 80 pounds annually assigned to each individual of the total consumption of sugar in this country all but 54 pounds goes into the preparation of articles of food, like preserves and canned goods, the price of which will show no reduction. But even if that were admitted, Montana is to-day paying more than a quarter of a million as a subsidy to the beet-sugar factory. If it were proposed to levy a tax by our legislature of $250,000 annually to subsidize beet-sugar factories in the State, I apprehend no public man would lend the idea the least countenance, nor would there be the slightest prospect of its adoption by our State government, even though it had the power constitutionally to levy such a tax.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Do I understand the Senator to say that each individual in the United States consumes 80 pounds of sugar a year?

Mr. WALSH. That is the estimate.

Mr. STERLING. Each individual?

Mr. WALSH. Each individual.

Mr. STERLING. Does not the Senator mean that that is the average consumption throughout the United States?

Mr. WALSH. That is the average consumption, certainly.

Mr. STERLING. That includes not only sugar consumed in household use in the ordinary way, but it includes the sugar manufactured into candy, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. I have so stated.

Mr. POMERENE. It is consumed nevertheless.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but I should like to get through.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator objects, I shall not interrupt him.

Mr. WALSH. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in 1911, when the beet sugar of this country was disposed of early in that year, all of the sugar, not only that used in Montana, but in other Western States, was furnished by the sugar refiners of this country. The people of Montana then were placed in a position where they will be placed when the production of sugar in this country ceases. The sugar refiners of this country in 1911, because of the fact that the sugar produced in this country had been exhausted, advanced the price of sugar to 7¾ cents a pound, and it remained at that figure until the beet-sugar production of this country came upon the market. During those three months the people of this country paid to the sugar refiners over $20,000,000 of extra profit.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the fact of a rise in the price of sugar at that time and its subsequent depression is perfectly well known. It has been stated in the discussions here time and again.

Mr. THOMAS. It was due to the law of supply and demand.

Mr. SMOOT. But there was no shortage of sugar in Russia at that time, and had it not been for the fact that the sugar of the world came under the control of a powerful organization located in Germany, which would not allow the Russian sugar to come into this country, there would not have been a shortage, nor would there have been a shortage all over the world; but on application to Russia to ship sugar into this country, they were allowed to ship a limited number of tons and no more.

Mr. WALSH. If I may be permitted to interrupt the Senator for a moment, I am now simply considering how much it costs us. It does not cost us any more or any less because of the facts stated by the Senator from Utah. Of course that is a consideration that might be urged as an offset to the burden of the tax—that is to say, that it might be claimed there is some compensation for it—but I am simply talking now about how much of a tax it is upon the people of the State of Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must understand that the people of Montana would not save this tax if they were under the control of the sugar refiners, who would charge them even more than the tax.

Mr. WALSH. If they were under the control of the sugar refiners, if there was no beet sugar produced in this country at all, and the Sherman law would permit the sugar refiners to combine and fix prices, as a matter of course the people of Montana would be under their control. I shall refer to that now.

It is but just to say that the advocates of the duty maintain that by its removal the domestic industry will be destroyed and then the importers will by concert raise the price in the absence of competition. But the answer to that argument is, first, that the beet-sugar industry will not be destroyed. That suggestion, in view of the history adverted to, has lost its terrors. It has been used too often. The second answer is that there are going to be no more combinations organized in palpable violation of the Sherman Act. Its penal provisions have begun to alarm.

I listened with the keenest sympathy a few days since to the recital by my esteemed friend the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] of the hopes of the people of his State for the establishment there of the beet-sugar industry, for which its soil and climate are highly adapted. But has the Senator stopped to count the cost? His State has a population of over 600,000 souls. Is he willing to take the stump and advocate before his people, should Congress withdraw the aid it now extends, that they tax themselves to the extent of $300,000 annually and turn the amount over to such companies as shall construct and operate beet-sugar factories in South Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hardly understand the Senator's allusion and the reason why he says the people of South Dakota would be taxed $300,000.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from South Dakota in the course of his address the other day spoke of the hope of his people of the establishment among them of sugar factories.

Mr. STERLING. I did not understand the Senator's first allusion.

Mr. WALSH. The question I propound to the Senator is, Suppose now that Congress does pass this law and withdraws the aid accorded by the existing law, is the Senator willing to go upon the stump in his State and advocate that his people tax themselves to the amount of $300,000 annually and turn that over for the support of the sugar factories in his State?

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator mean by that the additional cost of sugar that there would be to the people of my State?

Mr. WALSH. I have figured out that that is what it costs your people.

Mr. STERLING. In the first place, Mr. President, I think the Senator in making the statement that it will cost $300,000 additional to the people of my State assumes facts not proven. I will say further, in answer to the Senator, that that which will bring diversity of industry to my State, which is engaged largely in the raising of corn, wheat, oats, and flax, will be of great benefit to the people of that State. It may be that they will pay for sugar the price they are paying now without any reduction, yet the advantage and the benefit it would be to the State of South Dakota in the end to have this diversity of industry would more than counterbalance any additional amount they have to pay, or more than counterbalance the present price they are paying for sugar.

I think the Senator admitted a while ago in the course of his argument, in answer to a question, that the placing of sugar on the free list would prevent the establishment of any beet-sugar factories in the State of South Dakota. Anything that will prevent the establishment of an important and valuable industry like that, as I have said, will be in the end an injury to the people of South Dakota, a State whose soil and whose climate are adapted as well as that of any State in the Union to the raising of sugar beets.

Mr. WALSH. As indicative of the spirit that ordinarily actuates the beneficiaries of tariff legislation, it might be noted that one C. S. Morey, president of the Great Western Sugar Co., which owns the stock of the Billings Sugar Co., being asked before the Hardwick committee what reduction in the present duty on sugar might properly be made, replied that the beet-sugar business could stand no reduction. For the sake of accuracy, I quote his testimony:

Mr. MALBY. Something has been said with respect to the effect upon the beet industry in case of the repeal of the present tariff. Is that found to be advantageous?

Mr. MOREY. We could not live without the present tariff. I do not believe there would be a beet factory in the United States if the tariff were removed. That is my honest opinion.

Mr. MALBY. Is the industry sufficiently established, in your judgment, so that it could operate successfully and profitably by any considerable reduction in the tariff?

Mr. MOREY. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. MALBY. Your idea about it is that if the beet industry is to be preserved that you require a tariff?

Mr. MOREY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALBY. Equal to the present one?

Mr. MOREY. Yes, sir; we could not stand any reduction and have the business reasonably profitable. The smaller factories can do as well as we can, but we could not make a fair return.

Now, having that item of testimony in mind, I desire to direct the attention of the Senate to certain evidence elicited from Henry T. Oxnard, who for years figured conspicuously in Washington in connection with the beet-sugar lobby that has been maintained here scarcely without interruption for 20 years, given before the committee now by authority of this body engaged in investigating lobbying and lobbyists.

Prior to the passage of the Dingley law, Oxnard, in association with his brothers and certain bankers in New York, had erected and was operating four beet-sugar factories in the West, the title to which was held by four separate companies. Promptly upon the passage of that act he unfolded to the banking house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., of New York, a scheme of consolidation. He showed them what he had been doing and what he could do in the future in view of the "protection" afforded by the newly made law. The prospect was an alluring one to the financial interests appealed to. The American Beet Sugar Co. was organized with a capital of $20,000,000—$5,000,000 preferred and $15,000,000 common. Kuhn, Loeb & Co. put up all the money that was contributed, $5,000,000, for which they received all the preferred stock and an equal amount of common. The other common stock went to Oxnard and his associates. Four million dollars of the $5,000,000 thus raised were paid for the factories, the remainder being used with the accruing surplus to build two additional factories in 1900. Bear in mind, he did not put a dollar into the enterprise, but got $10,000,000 of common stock. The factories he had owned were bought and paid for at their full value.

The American Beet Sugar Co. has now been operating 15 years. It has paid regularly 6 per cent on its preferred stock. It paid one dividend of 6 per cent on its common stock. It has accumulated a surplus of $2,500,000, and has built the new plants referred to and made betterments, so that it has plants, modern and completely equipped, worth $8,500,000—that is to say, it has added $3,500,000 to its accumulations in that way. In other words, it has actually made, during the 15 years of its existence, just a little less than 15 per cent on the cash capital invested, meanwhile paying a salary of $20,000 annually to its president, $10,000 to Mr. Oxnard, its vice president, and $10,000 more to his brother, occupying some subordinate position. But the interesting part of the story is this: The common stock went on the market at $38 and at one time rose to over $70, indicating that some people believed that eventually regular dividends would be paid on the $15,000,000 of water in the stock—three-fourths of the entire capitalization. Oxnard, knowing the actual conditions, "got out from under." He sold his stock at prices ranging from $15 to $50, according to his testimony before the Hardwick committee; $25 to $35, by his testimony before the Senate committee. In either case the average is $30. So that he actually plucked $3,000,000 out of the atmosphere by this transaction, realized the dream of the alchemist and turned water into gold. Presumably Kuhn, Loeb & Co. were equally provident in respect to their $5,000,000 of common. It is a reasonable inference that they got at least as much as $2,000,000 for theirs; in other words, that the public was fleeced to the extent of $5,000,000 by this particular piece of high finance.

There are still among the Members of this body some who voted for the imposition of the duty that made possible the perpetration of that scandalous transaction—yea, and who spoke for it, in the confident belief that they were performing a patriotic service to their country, endowing an industry that must otherwise perish, fixing a rate of duty that Mr. Morey, in the face of such conditions, asserts must be maintained in order that it may live. There are more who voted for the continuance of the same rate in the Payne-Aldrich measure, acting from equally worthy motives, but impelled by the same cry of impending ruin to the beet-sugar industry.

To what extent did the conclusions thus arrived at owe their origin to the persuasive powers and arguments of the lobby which, under the name of the American Beet Sugar Association and the United States Beet Sugar Industry has haunted the corridors and committee rooms of the Capitol for 20 years, the moving spirit in it being ever and always the same Henry T. Oxnard, of whose genius for finance the corporation referred to is the product? For some reason, the nature of which the most searching examination failed to disclose, the associated interests operating legislatively under the name of the American Beet Sugar Association for many years took the name two years ago of the United States Beet Sugar Industry. Its activities were in no respect changed, its policy remained the same, but on the change in name two years ago, about the time a Democratic House began looking into things, it occurred to the wizard who directed its energies that the books of the association were a cumbersome burden to it, and he had them destroyed. Of his activities I let this dean of the lobby himself speak:

I have been here for 23 years, Senator. I came here and argued before the Finance Committee in 1890, and not one single Senator that was there in that body is here to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Every Congress since that time you have been here?

Mr. OXNARD. I have been here on the Cuban reciprocity, fighting that; fighting the annexation of Hawaii, when they started to annex that; fighting the Wilson bill, when that was on, about 20 years ago; Cuban reciprocity; the Philippines—I have been through five tariff bills, the Wilson bill, the McKinley bill, the Dingley bill, and the Payne-Aldrich bill, and I do not know how many more.

The CHAIRMAN. You have exerted all your strength in that direction?

Mr. OXNARD. Every bit; I have brought all of it to bear to develop this industry.

The CHAIRMAN. And you spent all the money you could get?

Mr. OXNARD. All that I could get voluntarily. But I will say this: Not one cent was ever spent in an illegitimate way; not one.

The CHAIRMAN. You have spent a great deal of money?

Mr. OXNARD. I should say, roughly speaking of course, in twenty-odd years, I do not know whether it is $10,000, but I think perhaps we spent $60,000 during the Cuban reciprocity, and Mr. Havemeyer or Mr. Donner told me that the trust spent $750,000 on the opposite side of the question at that time. (Lobby Inquiry, pp. 1188–1189.)

Without the aid of the books recording the amounts spent under his direction, he was unable to speak with accuracy, of course, but on reflection the amount stated by him as having been annually expended appeared to him altogether too low, and he changed his estimate to $20,000, whereupon he was asked, touching the aggregate sum that he had disbursed in 20 years:

You think, in round numbers, it would be half a million dollars?

To which he answered:

Somewhere in that neighborhood.

Appreciating the force of public opinion it did not content itself with presentation of the statistics compiled and briefs prepared to Members of Congress. It got wide circulation through "boiler plate" and "canned editorials," furnished gratis to the press throughout the country for articles more or less attractive in matter and style, all pointing to the wisdom of a high duty on sugar. These articles appeared as emanating from the usual news-gathering sources or as the expression of the views of the editor upon the topics to which they related.

A regular campaign was inaugurated to "place" these convenient "fillers," a skilled expert writing to the man in the field thus:

CINCINNATI TIMES-STAR,
Washington Bureau, October 23.

Mr. C. C. HAMLIN,
Colorado Springs, Colo.

MY DEAR CLARENCE: Yours of the 18th to hand this morning. You will have mine of yesterday, probably, before this reaches you, so have an idea of what I am doing here. I trust the clippings meet with your approval. My idea of your needs in this cause is that you should gradually hammer into the public intelligence not so much a loud demand for higher tariff or no tariff tinkering, but the conviction that the beet-sugar industry is an American institution of tremendous importance to the West and Middle West; that all good Americans should do their utmost to help it along; and that there is big money in it for every man that plants a beet. As soon as this percolates through their skulls not an M. C. west of the Hudson will dare vote for a tariff reduction * * *.

In your hotel interviews around the beet-sugar States or the potential beet-raising States it seems to me it would be an excellent idea to say that you are in town to consult a number of prominent men with a view to acquiring a tract of land to go into the beet-raising business. Every paper thereabouts that goes in for local "improvements" will editorialize to beat the band, and almost before they know it they'll be planting beets and making them into sugar—on paper, anyway. You can get all the newspaper space you want if you only give the papers something they think will make a hit with their readers' pockets.

Just about this time it seems to me we ought to get a good deal of space in the Sunday papers—the magazine sections—if we go after them. Have you any real good pictures of the process from seed to granulated? Pictures of the work in the fields, the gathering, shipping, transportation, slicing, etc.? If you have, send me, say, 15 or 20 sets and I'll write a story, duplicate it, and send it to as many papers, beginning, say, at St. Louis and traveling west and north to the coast. If I inclose a note to the Sunday editor telling him that he can have the story and pictures gratis, I'll guarantee that we can land three-fourths of them.

Ever,

R. H. HAZARD.

(Lobby inquiry, 1438–9.)

Generous contributions were made to meet the expenses of the annual meeting of such associations as the Irrigation Congress or the Trans-Mississippi Congress with a suggestion, usually effective, to those in charge of the arrangements of the propriety of a resolution "boosting" the beet-sugar business. The following letter will illustrate:

NOVEMBER 6, 1911.

Mr. W. A. DE RICQLES,
Denver Club, Denver, Colo.

DEAR DE: Herewith check for $500, being our contribution to the stockmen's convention.

I have taken up the matter of securing a suitable man to deliver a paper and will put you in touch with him as soon as possible.

We will prepare such resolutions concerning the sugar industry as we think should be adopted, and will depend upon you to see that this matter is attended to. I should have given you this check before leaving Denver, but was crowded for time.

C. C. HAMLIN.

It prosecuted diligently the device of deluging Senators and Congressmen with letters and telegrams from their constituents, calculated to impress them with the idea that a powerful sentiment prevailed in their respective States or districts to which they might deem it wise, considering their political future, to defer.

It provided for the convenient use of such statesmen as cared to avail themselves of opportunities so afforded elaborate tables of statistics and other like matter calculated to exercise a persuasive influence in debate or to afford justification to the country for a predetermined plan of legislation.

Another line, related in character, in which it specialized is exhibited in the following letter, which fell into the hands of the committee:

AMERICAN BEET SUGAR CO.,
Rocky Ford Factory, July 17, 1908.
(Frederick Wietzer, manager.)

DEAR MR. PALMER: I have a letter from Mr. Morey, in which he says that Mr. Gove will go around trying to educate Congressmen. Will you please give Mr. Gove any data or statistics he may desire? I believe you have already supplied him with some. I think Gove an excellent man, and he can help us. It would be different if it was Hathaway. I am off to California to-night.

HENRY T. OXNARD.

(Lobby hearing, p. 1416.)

It was suggested to this instructor of Congressmen that some exacting official was complaining about his expense account. He was accordingly admonished mildly to itemize the same, but the task was made easy, for he was told that—with reference to itemizing accounts, will say that anything that you particularly do not like to itemize might be put under the head of "miscellaneous." (Lobby hearing, p. 1401.)

This course was suggested in response to the following letter from the worthy who was engaged in the high-class educational work to which he was assigned:

EBBITT HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., August 4, 1911.

MY DEAR HAMLIN: I have yours, with inclosures. Thank you for the bank errand.

You are quite right in itemized expense, and it will be easy; but if an auditing board, as you intimate, is to check you up, some skill will be necessary in extending account items.

Heretofore I have orally accounted to my principal.

These multitude investigating suspecting committees now on deck in governmental affairs are a lesson to anyone who has accounts to be audited by a "board."

AARON GOVE.

(Lobby hearing, pp. 1399–1400.)

It will be observed that he was to be more fully equipped for the task he undertook under the tutelage of one Truman G. Palmer, chief statistician to the United States Beet Sugar Industry, with headquarters in the city of Washington, where enlightenment was deemed most needed. Palmer has been secretary of the association named since it came into existence, and held a like place with the American Beet Sugar Association for many years, his talents being of so high an order as to command a salary of $10,000 per year. His specialty is statistics. He has frequently, however, indulged in argument, his contributions to the literature of the sugar industry having been repeatedly spread broadcast at the public expense in the guise of public documents.

The circulation of his Sugar at a Glance taxed the mail service to an extent that would have required the payment from less-favored organizations seeking to influence legislation in their behalf of $20,000.

On the occasion of the pendency of every one of the historic measures referred to in which the fortunes of the sugar industry were involved, he has been prepared with statistics to demonstrate that its very life was at stake.

Fortunately the public have ceased to regard with great seriousness the professions of profound alarm with which many of the interests affected greet every effort to revise the tariff or the predictions of ruin that invariably accompany any such. It is to the credit of the business men of the country whose interests are more or less directly involved that they have generally exhibited a complacency touching the pending tariff measure and a resolute purpose to accommodate themselves to the new conditions it imposes quite in contrast with the storm of protest that has accompanied like efforts in the past toward alleviating the burdens of tariff taxation.

Their example might well be emulated in this Chamber. The daily repetition on this floor of predictions of inevitable ruin to this, that, or the other industry in consequence of the reduction of the duties on the commodities produced in it, and general financial depression as the aggregate result, can have no other effect than to contribute to bring about the very condition so eloquently deplored. One would scarcely turn loose a flock of political and financial Cassandras in the market place who was really apprehensive of a business panic. I shall have served the purpose for which the regular consideration of the bill was interrupted if I have succeeded in showing that with respect to some items of the bill, and one at least that promises to occupy a place near the storm center of the debate, the dread aspect in which the future has been depicted will vanish when contemplated in the light of the actual conditions that surround the particular industry involved.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, before the Senator from Montana takes his seat I should like to ask him whether since the evening of the 7th of July, which was the time of the adjournment of the Senate Democratic caucus, he has become a convert to the doctrine of free wool and free sugar, as I judge he has from his argument to-day?

Mr. WALSH. Of course the Senator misinterprets the argument. I have made no argument to-day in favor of either free wool or free sugar. I have simply undertaken to show that neither will destroy those industries so far as my own State is concerned.

APPENDIX 2.

To the Woolgrowers of Montana:

Conditions in the wool trade are such as to justify the belief that those who can hold their clips for even a short time will receive more for their wool than the present offers would indicate.

Buyers began early in the season to beat down the price of wool by sending out depressing reports and by staying out of Montana. They made efforts, as usual, to get a few clips at remarkably low prices, hoping to start selling at the lowest possible figures, but even isolated clips have been held up by the growers in most cases and the buyers are just beginning to make offers.

As near as can be learned, the price paid for Montana clips of any considerable size has been around 17 cents, while several large clips have brought 18 cents.

HOLD THE FLEECES.

It is believed those who can hold their clips will receive from 19 to 21 cents. There is every reason to believe the bulk of Montana wool will bring 20 cents.

From the Boston correspondents of the leading commercial papers it is learned that the Colorado clips have sold there at 18 to 20 cents; the Nevada clips for 17 to 19 for fine and fine medium, with medium at 21 to 22 cents; and Utah at 18 cents for fine, and fine medium at 21 cents, with 22 cents for medium.

Wool people are adjusting themselves to the free-trade basis, and according to the Commercial Bulletin of Boston "a more optimistic attitude has been adopted by the wool trade during the last week. There is a disposition to operate more freely."

DELAY STRENGTHENS MARKET.

Even the delay in passing the wool tariff schedules is said by Boston buyers to have had a strengthening effect on the wool market. A writer in the New York Commercial says: "The longer the passage of the tariff bill is delayed the further the cost of wools will advance. The business of consignments has diminished and the dealers have been buying outright. The consignment business has been limited to the heavier and defective staples."

Manufacturers are demanding domestic grades to an unusual extent, and it is said manufacturers would now find it too late to arrange for the use of foreign wools even if they were desirable.

We find this significant statement in the Boston wool letter of the New York Commercial:

"Wool buyers and manufacturers daily become more convinced that no legislation will arise to interfere with the marketing of this year's domestic clip."

This simply means that if the placing of wool on the free list eventually influences prices to remain about where they are now, or drives them lower, the manufacturers and buyers of Boston have "become convinced that no legislation will arise to interfere with the marketing of this year's clip."

BUYERS KNOW SITUATION.

In other words, they are justified in paying as good prices for the wool of the West this year as any other year. Suppose the tariff bill does not pass before September or October. The buyers and manufacturers are then given three months to liquidate their business as done under present conditions. No wool could be imported on the new basis until next year.

The Senate Finance Committee has agreed that the change in the sugar schedule shall not go into effect until 1914, and it is believed some such arrangement will be made as to the wool schedule.

During recent years importations have been wools to suit a special purpose other than that for which domestic fleeces are wanted, and manufacturers do not look upon the possibility of increased competition of foreign wools with any great concern.

LIGHT SHRINKAGES.

Woolgrowers should bear in mind that the present year is a year of light shrinkage for Montana wools. This is by reason of the snowy winter, followed by a wet, backward spring, with the result that there has been no dust on the ranges and no extended warm weather to bring out the grease in the wool.

This all tends to make the wool much lighter than is usual at shearing time.

The average shrinkage of Montana wools is generally placed by buyers at about 66 per cent. This was no doubt the case when Montana was growing heavy shearing sheep exclusively. Of late years most of the bands have been mixed with coarse wool, making the shrinkage probably 5 to 7 per cent less than formerly.

DEMAND FOR DOMESTIC WOOL.

Few growers appreciate the fact that a shrinkage of 5 per cent less in their wool very materially increases the price of the fleece.

Taken as a whole there is every reason to believe the present clips will bring 20 cents or above if they are held and the growers are not too easily influenced to sell. If free wool eventually makes for lower prices, it is regarded as too late to have any real effect on the market this year. This year's clip can be bought on the same basis as that of last year, and it will be in the hands of manufacturers or in clothing before the tariff bill of the present administration could have any real effect on the wool market. It will then be too late for manufacturers to buy foreign wools on a free-wool basis.

The best way to do is to hold the clip and not be bluffed into accepting the first offer made by buyers who have for years beaten down the price paid for Montana wool with one argument and another.

This letter has been prepared so that the woolgrowers may be informed of the facts as this association sees them. There has been such a great lack of definite information among the woolgrowers on the subject of prices, values, etc., that it is believed that a statement of the true status of affairs is due them, which we believe has been given in this letter.

CHARLES H. WILLIAMS,
President Montana Woolgrowers' Association.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I give notice that on Monday next, immediately after the close of the morning business, I shall address the Senate on the pending tariff bill, and especially on the free-raw-wool clause thereof.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to supplement the magnificent address made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] by reading a short telegram which I clipped from the Washington Times of yesterday. I am very sorry the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is absent, since this dispatch is from Altoona, a city in his State, and is somewhat like the letter of the Sharples Separator Co., which saw fit to enter a protest against the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania that it had gone out of business. You will all recall the wail of woe that issued from the pallid lips of the Senator from Pennsylvania two or three days ago.

The dispatch to which I refer is as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA ROAD BREAKS FREIGHT RECORD.

ALTOONA, PA., August 1.

All records for freight movement in the history of the Pennsylvania Railroad were broken during July, when 180,113 cars passed Denholm. This is an increase of almost 1,000 cars a day over July, 1912, and more than 1,000 higher than the best previous record.

The dispatch speaks for itself. I put it in as being apropos to the speech just delivered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to say further, with reference to many of the statements made by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], that I have received a letter or two from Pennsylvania utterly disproving the statements made. Instead of universal calamity in the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in the way of furnaces going out, they are being relined and reconstructed for more business. I also have a number of clippings from prominent papers in the very county of which the Senator from Pennsylvania spoke, utterly setting aside his deductions and conclusions. I have hesitated to present them to-day, thinking it would be more courteous and more pleasing to the Senate, as it would be infinitely more to my liking, that I should hold them until the Senator himself is here. I shall reserve them, mayhap, until Monday.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary proceed with the reading of Schedule D.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Gore	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Gronna	Page	Smoot
Brady	Hollis	Perkins	Sterling
Brandegee	Hughes	Pittman	Stone

Chamberlain	Kern	Saulsbury	Thornton
Chilton	Lane	Shafroth	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Lewis	Sheppard	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Vardaman
Crawford	Myers	Shively	Walsh
Dillingham	Nelson	Simmons	Williams

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BACON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] is necessarily absent from the city to-day. During his absence he is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in requesting that the Secretary proceed with the reading of Schedule D, I overlooked the fact that when we adjourned on yesterday afternoon the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] had the floor.

Mr. JONES. I desire to withdraw the amendment I offered yesterday, and offer in lieu thereof the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, paragraph 75 reads as follows:

Lime, 5 per cent ad valorem.

The Senator from Washington proposes to add to the paragraph the following proviso:

Provided, That the duty levied and collected by this paragraph shall in no event be less than the duty levied and collected by any adjoining country upon the importation of lime into such adjoining country from the United States.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this proviso meets the situation which I described yesterday as existing between this country and Canada. I will say briefly that under existing conditions the Canadians impose a duty of 17½ per cent on our lime going into that country, while on lime coming into this country the duty is 5 cents per hundred pounds, including the package. According to the handbook, that is equivalent to an ad valorem duty of 8 or 9 per cent. So that the Canadians practically shut us out of their market, while under the existing law we give them an advantage in ours.

The effect of the proposed law is to leave the barrier that Canada has erected against us, and to take down still further whatever barrier between this country and Canada exists on our side. In other words, they will maintain their 17½ per cent duty on our lime and the package in which it is imported, while we propose to reduce our tariff to 1 cent per hundred pounds.

At the conclusion of the proceedings yesterday I had just read a letter from one of the leading men in our State, giving the course that is pursued by Canadian manufacturers under the law as it exists now. I want to recall that letter to the attention of the Senate, because, as I said yesterday, I am satisfied that the members of the Finance Committee do not desire to discriminate against our own people in favor of another people or another country; and I am satisfied that they are perfectly willing to avoid such discrimination if they possibly can do it.

The result of the situation is, according to this gentleman, that as matters stand now some of the owners of lime properties in British Columbia partially develop their lime, load some of it onto ships, bring it over into our markets, put the price away down, and practically say to our people: "You buy us out, or we will continue this cutting"; and they can possibly afford to do that, and sell out their interests.

I desire to read briefly from this letter what I read yesterday afternoon, so that Senators may have the situation clearly in their minds. I wish to say that I know this gentleman personally. He is one of the most responsible citizens of our State. He says:

This unequal contest—

That is, the contest under the condition that our tariff on their lime is only 8 or 9 per cent and their tariff on ours is 17½ per cent—

This unequal contest has encouraged British Columbia real estate schemers to open up lime properties in a more or less primitive way, and then, while lying behind their 17½ per cent wall of protection, attack the American markets with the avowed purpose of forcing American manufacturers to either subsidize them to remain out of our markets or to buy them out entirely, in order to maintain a living price for the product from their own kilns in their markets.

* * * * * * *

Just now this exact condition is prevailing: A certain manufacturer on the British Columbia side is continually shipping small quantities of lime into our markets, both to Puget Sound and the Hawaiian Islands, cutting the prices down to an unprofitable basis, and openly and defiantly saying to us: "There is just one remedy for you—pay us a sufficient subsidy or buy our plant at our figure as the price of peace in your own markets."

Then he says:

The institution that is just now assailing our markets at every quarter has been trying for the past two years to sell their property to us and to other local manufacturers.

Then he asks that this condition of things be remedied. He states that their plant has been running at only a 50 per cent capacity during the last five years. He feels satisfied that if we are given a fair field in this matter, if we are placed upon an equal basis with the Canadians across the line, then we will be able to meet them in our markets and possibly in their own markets.

The purpose of the proviso that I have just offered is to place us upon an equal basis with the Canadians in this important business. Over a million and a half dollars are invested in these enterprises in our State alone. Several hundred men are employed. Some communities depend entirely upon the lime manufactured in their vicinity. Unless there is some remedy for this condition of things these plants must close, these men must be thrown out of employment, and these communities will be practically destroyed.

I can appreciate that our friends on the other side do not take into account the difference in labor cost, if there is such a difference. I understand that their theory of the bill does not take that into account. I have no quarrel with them for it. I am simply going to appeal to them on the basis that we ought to put our own people upon an equality with their competitors across the line and in the passage of legislation in the interest of our own people we ought not to frame that legislation in such a way as to discriminate against our people in favor of others.

I think that is a proposition which does not involve any special tariff principle whether for revenue or for protection, but it does involve the fair treatment of our own people by our legislative body. Upon that basis alone I appeal to our friends on the other side to put us on the same basis as the lime manufacturers of Canada. If the Canadian Government should take the tariff off of lime entirely, then we would be perfectly willing to have it taken off on lime coming into this country, but at any rate give us a fair field in our own market and in the markets that are adjacent to us. The situation as it now is enables the Canadians to do this.

It was suggested yesterday that at many localities along the border line there would be places in our territory where lime could be manufactured and taken over to territory across the lime, and that we ought not to put a tariff on lime which would prevent it from being brought into localities on our border where they do not have the lime production.

Now, what is the result of the present policy? The result of it, as a general rule, is simply that where there is a lime deposit on our side there are lime deposits on the other side; it is simply a continuation. The result is simply this: The Canadian has his market; he holds it by the 17½ per cent tariff; and if we start a manufactory of lime on this side he can afford to come in and reduce the price of his lime so to stop that factory and drive it out of business or prevent its development and prevent its working. And when that is assured he can put his price up to the equivalent price on the other side. He can afford to do that as a business proposition, because he knows we can not take the market on his side of the line and he can get into our market with the comparatively small duty.

If you pass the bill as it is here, at only 1 cent per hundred pounds, we simply increase the size of the trust that the Canadian manufacturer of lime has now to crush out any possible development of the lime industry on our side and take our market away from us and supply it with his own product and put his price at practically what he may desire.

Mr. President, that is all I desire to say on the matter. It seems to me there is just one proposition, whether or not you want to help our own people by placing us upon an equality with those across the line, whether you simply want to insure that we shall have the same equality with them in our own market and in their market that they have in our market, or whether you want to increase the size of the trust with which they can destroy our industry.

I have here a letter prepared on behalf of several of the lime manufacturers in our State, which I desire to place in the RECORD without reading. It presents the matter very clearly and very fully. There is one statement in this letter, however, that I think is a mistake. I think the gentleman who wrote it had in mind the provisions of the bill rather than the existing law. I desire to call attention to it. He says:

The United States Government, on the other hand, allows the Canadian manufacturer of lime to ship his products into this country at a specific tariff duty of $1 per ton with package free.

That is a mistake. The present law imposes a tariff of 5 cents per hundred pounds on lime, including the weight of the package, but under the present bill the tariff is left at 5 per cent on lime and the package comes in free. With that correction I ask that this letter be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., April 21, 1913.

Hon WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the owners of all the lime plants located in the northwestern tier of counties of this State, which practically includes all its available limestone deposits, I was requested to take up and lay before you the conditions of this industry at the present time, and to ask you to use your best endeavors to have the iniquitous tariff conditions we are now operating under adjusted on some fair and equitable basis.

The industries are owned by citizens of the State of Washington who have invested their capital and earnings, and many of them have spent the best years of their life in building up the business in the hope of securing a reasonable return on their venture, but for the last few years this has been impossible, owing to industrial conditions that have placed them at the mercy of competitors across the boundary line in British Columbia.

The lime deposits of British Columbia are located upon Vancouver Island and have deep-water transportation not only to the principal markets of their own country, but likewise to the principal markets of the States of Washington and Oregon. In addition to this the railroads absorb their local freight charges to interior points; that puts them on an equality with our home manufacturers with the added privilege of employing Chinese labor, which averages but $1.75 per day, while the average white labor in the lime plants of this section is $2.87½ per day.

At the lime kilns in British Columbia, where the product is put up in barrels, the Chinese contract the cooperage at 5 cents per barrel, while our manufacturers are compelled to pay 7 cents per barrel. The British Columbia manufacturers were given by the Government of that country large areas of timbered lands from which to draw their fuel supply for burning the lime, and their average cost of wood ranges from $1.40 to $1.65 per cord, while the manufacturers of the State of Washington are compelled to pay from $2.50 to $3.25 per cord for the same class of wood delivered to their kilns.

These physical conditions are a very serious handicap to the lime manufacturers of this section, when they have to come in competition with British Columbia manufacturers on equal terms, and much more so when our Government places a bounty in the shape of a preferential tariff in favor of these foreign manufacturers, as is the case at the present time and has been for some years last past.

The Canadian Government places a duty upon manufactured American lime and ground limestone going into Canada of 17½ cents ad valorem, which also includes the cost of the package, and compels our manufacturer to invoice his shipments at his selling price to jobbers, which means that we must pay a duty, not only upon the manufacturing cost but also upon the anticipated profits. For violation of this clause or the slightest attempt at undervaluation they invoke what is known in Canada as the dumping clause which adds to the 17½ cents a penalty for double that amount. This places the ordinary duty of our lime entering Canada under the present prices at $1.92½ per ton.

The United States Government, on the other hand, allows the Canadian manufacturer of lime to ship his products into this country at a specific tariff duty of $1 per ton with package free, notwithstanding the fact that the manufacturing cost of this package equals, if it does not exceed, the cost of the lime it contains, and they are then able to sell the empty barrels at from 10 cents to 15 cents each in direct competition with the American cooperage factories and which gives a tariff advantage to the Canadian manufacturer, in addition to all the other physical advantages, of from 92 cents to $1.05 per ton, and makes this country the dumping ground for the surplus product of the British Columbia lime manufacturers, which they have been quick to take advantage of, as every manufacturer knows that the cost of producing a certain article is decreased in proportion to the increased volume of the output of the plant and his ability to keep his plant running continuously.

Just as an example and to show the actual conditions I will quote two instances:

The Roche Harbor Lime Co.'s plant at Roche Harbor is one of the largest on the Pacific coast, operating 14 kilns with an investment of more than $1,000,000. For the past two years this plant has averaged but little more than two and one-half kilns in constant operation, and there have been times when not even a kiln was burning.

The Pacific Lime Co.'s plant, of British Columbia, has been during the same period running full blast and have installed additional kilns to more than double their capacity. The British Columbia markets have not been able to absorb their entire output, but with the very favorable tariff regulations they could very conveniently dump their surplus upon this market and cut the price below where it could be profitably produced by our own manufacturers.

When the schedule of tariffs for the bill now before Congress reached us, we found that instead of getting relief from the condition already prevailing it is proposed to wipe out the last vestige of industrial stability for this product by reducing the already low tariff by 50 per cent. It hardly seems reasonable to any citizen of this country that men elected to a high legislative office will deliberately plan to ruin their own citizens for the benefit of a foreigner or to carry out the theoretical idea of an economic problem. The placing of this tariff upon the statute books means nothing more or less than the formation of a trust between the United States Government and the British Columbia lime manufacturers which will destroy the property of their own countrymen, who are compelled to pay taxes from which the executioners derive a yearly revenue.

If the manufactured article in question was one in use by a class of people whose earning power was limited, or had any relation to the high cost of living or any of the various economic questions that confront us to-day, there might be some excuse for this action; but in this particular instance the contrary is true. Lime to-day is not used by the poor man. His house is plastered by a cheaper article than lime can be possibly produced, known as gypsum hard wall plaster. His chimneys, owing to the known danger of fire, are to a large extent laid up in cement mortar, and the use of lime therefor is largely restricted to brick and terra cotta construction in large and massive office buildings, factories, warehouses, and the like, and for which we in turn are compelled to pay the highest rate for occupancy and use. Therefore, from an economic standpoint, it has no relation whatever to the abstract question but is purely one of business judgment.

On behalf, therefore, of the lime manufacturers of this country, and especially those of the Northwest, I have been delegated to file with our delegation a most emphatic protest against the reduction of the present tariff and to ask, instead, that a reciprocal tariff be demanded between these two countries, whose boundary line is imaginary instead of physical, and to ask that you use your best effort to see that this industry and the men who have invested their entire resources and years of effort be not destroyed.

The lime manufacturers of this section are not asking for protection, but justice, a fair field and no favors, an equality of opportunity to invade the foreign field on the same terms and conditions that they are allowed to enter here, and we submit that under the present conditions we are entitled to a specific duty of $2 per ton on manufactured lime entering this country from foreign ports.

If it is impossible to raise the tariff on this class of goods shipped from British Columbia into the United States equal to that demanded by the Canadian Government at the present time, I would suggest that some provision be made whereby the President and his Cabinet would have the right, after proper investigation, where certain tariffs were working hardships against the citizens of the United States and no other redress were possible, to suspend the tariff and make it equal to that of the foreign country. This is now being done and has been for years in Canada, where the tariff law can be changed at will, by the simple process of making what is known as "an order in council."

Trusting that you will give this question your prompt attention, and be able to secure some reasonable adjustment on a fair basis to the citizens of this country, I remain,

Very respectfully, J. J. MANEY.

N. B.—A similar letter is being sent to each member of our congressional delegation.

J. J. M.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not care to take any time in prolonging this discussion. A great many demands have been made upon the Committee on Finance in advocacy of countervailing duties. In numerous products a provision similar to that embodied in the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington has been suggested and urged by people interested in them. We can not apply the principle of countervailing duties to articles generally. There should be very rare and exceptional reasons for doing it, or else there would be no substantial relief of the kind supposed to result from the passage of this measure.

While, as the Senator says, there is a duty of 17 cents on lime going into Canada as against about a 9 per cent duty under the present law on lime coming into the United States, the fact remains that we have imported practically no lime into the United States and have exported two and a half times as much as we have imported. I see no reason for applying a countervailing duty, such as is proposed here, or any other kind, for that matter.

Mr. JONES rose.

Mr. STONE. As I said, I do not wish to prolong the debate, and I hope we shall have no more speeches on it.

Mr. JONES. I wish to suggest to the Senator with reference to importations that it is not a prohibitive duty we have now; that in 1896, when we had the same duty, we imported 42,806,000 pounds of lime. In 1905, with that same duty, we imported 46,148,700 pounds, a very considerable importation. Then in 1910 we imported 18,085,600 pounds and in 1912 9,985,200 pounds. While some years show small importations, other years show a very large importation, and what the next year might show with the 5 cents a hundred duty of course no one can tell.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask now that we may have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator desire to address himself to the pending amendment?

Mr. BURTON. To this amendment.

Mr. STONE. I understood that the Senator had an amendment of his own to offer.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, this item affords an excellent object lesson. It shows the futility of the plan adopted in this bill. I think it would be well to have free trade in lime with Canada. Geographical considerations would largely determine on which side of the line the supply would be furnished. Freight rates enter prominently into the problem. The same considerations that apply here would apply to coal and some other heavy materials.

But here is the proposition: Canada has a duty on our lime of 12½ cents per hundred pounds. As I figure it, on the basis of pending prices that is more than 17½ per cent; it is about 23 per cent. So the Canadian duty is 23 per cent, approximately. Our duty at present is between 9 and 10 per cent, and it is proposed to diminish that to 5 per cent. What good is that going to confer upon this country? Are we acting for ourselves or are we acting in the interest of our Canadian neighbors in making this change?

The whole theory upon which this bill is founded is that we should buy where we can buy the cheapest, and that in exchange for those things which we buy from foreign countries we should export to them something which we can furnish more cheaply.

I have little doubt but that in most localities on the border we can furnish lime more cheaply than Canada. Our plants are better organized and the business has been longer established. But this article which we can furnish more cheaply is shut out from Canada. It can not go in there unless we pay a duty of 23 per cent. So the whole argument for the bill, the whole theory of freer-trade tariff revision, fails in this place.

There is one point I wish to take up in this connection. Is anybody illogical enough to believe that the lowering of this duty is going to lower the price to any American consumer?

Here is a country with a population of about one-tenth of ours. Their supply of lime is perhaps one-fifteenth of ours. Our market is represented by 15 units to 1 unit. What is going to determine the price of lime in the United States? The fifteen-sixteenths consumed and the fifteen-sixteenths furnished in the United States or the one-sixteenth furnished by Canada? What will be the inevitable result? If any Canadian desires to send into this country a carload or cargo of lime, he will ascertain what the price is in the United States. He will be actuated by no altruism. He will sell at the price in this country.

Suppose there are 15 men engaged in a certain trade who were receiving $2 a day, and one man comes along who has been receiving $1.75 a day. Why, according to the theory of some here, the 15 men would all lower their wages to $1.75. But what is the result? The one man conforms his compensation to that of the other 15, and the wage is raised from $1.75 to $2.

Now, it has been said that these countervailing duties can not be generally adopted. There are a number of cases in this bill where they should be adopted, where the lowering of duties under which articles are imported in this country will confer no benefit whatever upon us in the way of cheapness of price, because the foreign producer will charge the same figure which he finds to be prevalent here. There is a variety of causes for that. For instance, the one I have just named, the volume of our consumption is so great that the greatest demand and the greatest supply control effectively. Theoretically there would be a very small, an almost infinitesimal decrease in the price in such a case as I have named, but actually it does not occur.

But, Mr. President, this is fundamental. This is not the place where we can base our policy on what we call international economy. National economy, that which is for our benefit, should be the argument which should govern our action in such cases.

I have introduced an amendment here which is somewhat different from that introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. It was presented on the 24th of April. It shows satisfaction with the duty of 5 per cent, but adds the proviso that in case lime is imported directly or indirectly from a country, dependency, or other subdivision of government which imposes a duty on lime imported from the United States of 10 per cent or more, then the duty shall be 10 per cent. It does not propose in any case to raise the duty above 10 per cent, but does rest upon the unfairness of giving away our market.

Mr. President, it is surprising to me that the Senate should insert a provision in the bill—and there are many of them scattered all through this measure—where the most elementary principles of trade demonstrate that the bill seeks to benefit not ourselves but another country.

Carrying out to its logical result the idea that we can produce a number of things more cheaply than other countries, how will you get a market for them? When you must pay for your imports with exports, how will you dispose of your exports in such cases as this where the currents of trade are stopped and the market is closed to you?

Thus, with this insignificant duty of 5 per cent, we give away, without consideration, the most valuable market in the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. I think I will have to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that as a rule I am not in favor of countervailing duties, because it gives in the hands of the foreign country the power to make our tariff laws; but this, I think, can be made an exception to that rule, because it will simply affect the border of the country along the Canadian line. It seems to me that the arguments as presented by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] are quite conclusive that it would be unfair to the producers of lime along the Canadian border to permit their Canadian competitors to come into their market on a duty of 5 cents, while the American producer adjacent to the line must pay more than three times that much to get into the market of his Canadian competitor.

Therefore, I shall vote for this amendment for that reason; but I do not wish it to be understood as an indorsement of the general policy of countervailing duties, because I do not believe in them as a rule.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 6, paragraph 75, which reads, "Lime, 5 per cent ad valorem," add the following proviso:

Provided, That the duty levied and collected by this paragraph shall in no event be less than the duty levied and collected by any adjoining country upon the importation of lime into such adjoining country from the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES (when Mr. BRADLEY'S name was called). I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BRADLEY] and to state that he has a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a pair for the afternoon with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], who is detained from the Senate. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], who is absent. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I am paired with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BACON. I again announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] and that he is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. GRONNA. I again wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family, and that he is paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is unavoidably absent. I understand that he is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested to announce a pair between the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to state that the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] are unavoidably detained from the Senate. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce a pair between the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. I make this announcement for the day.

The result was announced—yeas, 22, nays 35.

YEAS—22

So Mr. JONES's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTON. I desire a vote on the amendment, and will ask to have it read at the desk. I will state, however, that it provides that the duty of 5 per cent may remain, that being the general duty; but where the duty of any country, dependency, or other subdivision of government is 10 per cent or more the duty shall be 10 per cent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The SECRETARY. On page 19, paragraph 75, at the end of the paragraph, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That lime shall be subject to a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem when imported directly or indirectly from a country, dependency, or other subdivision of government which imposes a duty on lime imported from the United States of 10 per cent or more ad valorem.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall vote against this amendment as I voted against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I am opposed to the idea of permitting a foreign Government to say what our duties shall be. In a measure, although conditions are somewhat different, it is similar to the provision in the bill for a countervailing duty on wheat. Every Senator knows that Canada has no market for our wheat. Every Senator knows that we surrender our market, which is a valuable one, to a nation that has no market for our products. I do not wish to delay the Senate this afternoon, and for that reason I shall not go into the subject any further; but I simply desire to state that I am opposed in a general way to this method of legislating. We should assume the responsibility ourselves and levy such duties as the industry is justly entitled to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have already stated that the arguments used by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] can have no possible application, and would not govern the price in this country in the least degree. I ask unanimous consent to change the figures "10 per cent" in the proposed duty to "9 per cent," so that it may be in no event more than the present duty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified as proposed by the Senator from Ohio. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was rejected.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, that paragraph having been disposed of, I will state, to the Senate that it will end the consideration of Schedule B, except as it relates to paragraphs to which the Senate will later revert. Several paragraphs were passed over at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and one, as I recall, at the request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. Except those paragraphs which have been reserved, the paragraphs of the schedule have been considered and passed upon. Perhaps there may be other reserved paragraphs, but, in any event, we shall return to them in due time.

The metal schedule is the next one in line; and that is to go over until Monday. I now understand that it is the purpose of the chairman of the committee that we proceed to the consideration of Schedule D, the wood schedule.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in Schedule D, page 50, line 9, to strike out paragraph 171, as follows:

171. Sawed boards, planks, deals, and all forms of sawed cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all cabinet woods not further manufactured than sawed, 10 per cent ad valorem; veneers of wood, 15 per cent ad valorem; and wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask a question in regard to the proposed amendment. What do the words "wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem," mean? What is included in that? I refer to the clause on page 51, lines 2, 3, and 4.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say to the Senator, Mr. President, that that includes all woods except those specially provided for as mentioned in the section—all unmanufactured woods not specially provided for by the section.

Mr. BURTON. That would include oak, pine, and every other variety of wood?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Either on the free list or on the dutiable list.

Mr. BURTON. Is there not, then, a duty imposed upon that class of wood, while finished woods are made free?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not know that I fully understand the question of the Senator.

Mr. BURTON. Take the paragraph in the free list relating to this matter——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. In the free list it is paragraph 649.

Mr. BURTON. There you will find:

And all like blocks or sticks, rough hewn, sawed, or bored; sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, not further manufactured than sawed, planed, and tongued and grooved; clapboards, laths—

And so forth.

Does not this propose to impose 10 per cent on unmanufactured wood, while the finished woods, being tongued and grooved and made into clapboards, made into palings, shingles, and ship timber, are free?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I can not specify the different kinds of wood which might be included, but we have in this paragraph specified some of the cabinet woods, such as mahogany, satinwood, granadilla, rosewood, and any other woods unmanufactured, which will bear this duty of 10 per cent, unless specially provided for in the paragraph.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator will allow me, this refers to all classes of woods unmanufactured, does it not, and not merely to ebony, mahogany, rosewood, and the woods mentioned in the paragraph?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Certainly; it includes all woods not specially provided for.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as I understand it, mahogany and other similar woods either come into the country manufactured, which is a small proportion of the amount, or else they come in the form of logs. I believe in a protective duty wherever a duty is necessary in order to maintain a legitimate industry in the United States. The fact is that we do not grow any mahogany in this country. It now comes in with a duty of 15 per cent, and it is proposed in this bill to impose a duty of 10 per cent upon it. Can it be that a duty is imposed for the purpose of encouraging an American industry? Why, I repeat, we produce no mahogany logs and the total cost of manufacturing logs into lumber, I am informed, does not exceed $3 a thousand, and the excessive duty of 10 per cent is not needed for the purpose of protection. This lumber, of course, is very high priced, and a 10 per cent duty on lumber which is worth more than a hundred dollars a thousand is too high. It will not produce as much revenue as the present duty, so far as that is concerned, if revenue is what Senators desire.

Mr. President, lumber of this kind should come into the United States free of duty. I am in favor of it, not only because imposing a duty does not in any manner encourage or protect an American industry, does not give employment to a single American laborer, but it does necessarily increase the price of that product to the consumer. Mahogany and other valuable tropical woods should not be burdened with an unnecessary duty. May I ask the Senator in charge of this portion of the bill why he considers the duty necessary?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, the mahogany that comes into this country comes in free now; it comes in in the log free. I find, upon referring to the statistics, that in 1912 mahogany to the value of $3,044,966.70 came in free of duty in the log. It is here sawed into different forms. It is only the sawed mahogany which bears the duty of 10 per cent, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] will perceive in this paragraph. On mahogany, when sawed into boards, planks, deals, or other forms, the present duty is 15 per cent upon manufactured mahogany, and that has been reduced to 10 per cent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The duty proposed in the bill is 10 per cent, as I understand it, not only upon boards but upon logs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Not upon the logs. The logs will come in free, as they always have done, as the Senator will perceive. The different woods when sawed into boards, planks, deals, or other forms will bear the duty.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is not the way I understand it. I do not read it that way. Does the committee assert that there is no duty upon any of the lumber described in this bill except upon such as is sawed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. That is our understanding of it—that the woods under paragraph 650 come in free; and they are mentioned.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine a question. I agree with the Senator that mahogany, when sawed into boards, planks, deals, and other forms, carries under this paragraph a duty of 10 per cent, but he will notice in paragraph 171, line 2, on page 51, after the words "ad valorem," the words "and wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem." If mahogany is not specifically mentioned in the free list, then, of course, it would carry a duty of 10 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say to the Senator from Utah that if he will refer to paragraph 650 he will find that the following woods are all on the free list: Cedar, including Spanish cedar, lignumvitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all forms of cabinet woods, in the log, rough, or hewn only, and red cedar (Juniperus virginiana) timber, hewn, sided, squared, or round.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not turned to the free list to examine paragraph 650, but there is no question, taking the two paragraphs together, that mahogany is on the free list.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I had not noticed the subsequent paragraph; but I submit that anyone reading paragraph 171, without any reference to the other, could not come to any other conclusion than that there is a 10 per cent duty on mahogany logs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I can not understand how the Senator can arrive at that conclusion, when the different forms of wood are mentioned, and then the paragraph provides that "all the foregoing when sawed into boards, planks, deals, or other forms," shall be dutiable.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Senator understand that the word "section" applies both to the dutiable paragraphs and to the free list?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not understand that these woods were carried into the free list.

Mr. HUGHES. The word "section" applies both to the dutiable list and to the free list.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, the expression "and wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem," I take it, is intended as a sort of basket clause, to include any form of unmanufactured wood not placed on the free list.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Or not provided for in the dutiable list.

Mr. BURTON. Can the Senator from Maine give any illustration of what would be included in the term "wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It would include any wood. I do not know that I have any particular wood in mind, because without referring to the bill I can not tell what woods are specially mentioned in the free list and in the dutiable list, but if any woods have not been mentioned this paragraph would cover them.

Mr. BURTON. It attracts attention very naturally, of course, because so large a variety of finished forms of lumber has been placed on the free list.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. But this is to cover a possible omission of woods which are not provided for. It is the same clause that is used in the present law, only there the duty is 20 per cent. I will read from the existing law——

Mr. BURTON. I am familiar with that, Mr. President, although there is no objection to the Senator from Maine reading it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The provision of the existing law reads as follows:

And wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 20 per cent ad valorem.

We have followed the same language, only the duty is reduced to 10 per cent.

Mr. BURTON. That provision, however, is in a law in which there is a duty, for instance, of $1.25 on boards and sawed lumber and duties upon different kinds of lumber——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. That is manufactured lumber.

Mr. BURTON. It seems incongruous to have this provision for a duty of 10 per cent on unmanufactured wood when there seems to be almost a complete enumeration of manufactured woods which are to be admitted free.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If any have been omitted, then from an abundance of caution this paragraph is designed to make them dutiable.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Maine that the phrase "and wood, unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem" be made perfectly clear by the insertion of the word "such" between the word "and" and the word "wood."

I think the section is intended to apply only to those kinds of unmanufactured wood referred to previously in the section, but as it reads it might include not only those woods but all other woods, like oak, pine, and so forth. I think if you would insert the word "such" there you would accomplish the purpose which you intend.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I distinctly asked that question. If this paragraph is limited to cedar, lignum-vitæ, rosewood, mahogany, and so forth, it is clear enough; but I asked the question of the Senator from Maine if it did not refer to all kinds of wood, such as oak, pine, and every other native variety of wood, and I understood him to answer that this was comprehensive and included not only the woods specifically mentioned in this paragraph but all woods.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] would destroy the very purpose of the provision.

Mr. NELSON. I think if you use the word "such," so as to read "such wood," it would be perfectly clear.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say to the Senator that that would destroy the very purpose for which this language was inserted.

Mr. NELSON. Is it the intention by that language to make all kinds of wood free?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. All wood that is not specially provided for is made dutiable at 10 per cent. If we were to use the word "such," we would confine it to the woods enumerated here in the paragraph, which is not the intention.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if that is the purpose, the matter would be left in this condition: You put a duty of 10 per cent on all logs, whether pine, oak, or other logs—the raw material—and put the manufactured lumber on the free list. That is what it would lead to, as you will see if you compare paragraph 171 with the free-list paragraph.

Mr. SIMMONS. No, Mr. President; the Senator has overlooked the fact that there are two paragraphs in the free list that deal with wood. Reference was made a little while ago to paragraph 650. There is also paragraph 649, which reads as follows:

Wood: Logs, timber, round, unmanufactured, hewn or sawed, sided or squared.

It is only to provide for cases as to which no provision is made. It is a catchall clause. I myself do not think there is any wood that has not been specifically provided for; but if by inadvertence we have failed to provide for anything in unmanufactured lumber, then under this provision that lumber would pay the duty mentioned.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NELSON. I should like to reply to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator from Maine had the floor. I was going to make a suggestion along the line of that made by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the inconsistency between section 649 and the last part of paragraph 171. There is an apparent inconsistency. I quote from paragraph 171:

And wood, unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The woods provided for in this section are "cedar, commercially known as Spanish cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, and satinwood; all of the foregoing"——

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator overlooks the fact that that is not a section; that is a paragraph. And by the word "section" is included everything from Schedule A down to the income-tax provision.

Mr. NELSON. The paragraph further provides—and wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SIMMONS. The words "this section," as I was proceeding to say, refer to everything beginning with Schedule A and ending with Schedule N, sundries. It includes everything in the dutiable list and the free list. It includes everything in the bill except the income provision, the cotton-tax provision, and the administrative provisions.

Mr. NELSON. That would leave an apparent inconsistency between the two paragraphs.

Mr. SIMMONS. No.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator is satisfied with that provision, very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. The words "otherwise provided for in this section" mean anywhere in the bill, because all of the schedules, including the free list, are comprised in section 1 of this bill. The income-tax provision is section 2.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to refer further to the proposition of retaining a duty of 10 per cent on these articles in paragraph 171. The provision, according to the statement of the chairman of the committee and others, clearly imposes a duty of 10 per cent upon the tropical woods that are used in the manufacture of furniture. The duty on furniture coming into the United States has been reduced in the bill from 35 per cent to 15 per cent, while the duty on these woods, which are not produced in the United States at all, is reduced 33⅓ per cent; that is, reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent. I would like now to ask the Senator in charge of this schedule if I am correct in saying that it is proposed to impose a duty of 10 per cent, or of any per cent, on the tropical woods which are used in the manufacture of furniture?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not think any of these woods come in in a manufactured form; they are imported in the log.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, furniture comes in.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. These woods do not come in to any considerable extent manufactured into boards and deals and planks. The importations must be quite small.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the Senator that there was about a million dollars worth of furniture imported last year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. According to the tables given here, the importations of sawed boards, planks, and deals were only $280,692 in 1912; but logs came in very extensively, and they are on the free list.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are on the free list?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. They are all on the free list.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I said a moment ago, I think the records will disclose that there were about a million dollars' worth of furniture imported last year, paying a duty of 35 per cent. Furniture is made from these imported woods. This bill proposes to reduce that duty to 15 per cent. Evidently there will be an increase of importations under the pending bill when enacted into law.

The lumber used in the manufacture of high-priced furniture is practically all obtained from the owners of sawmills who, as the Senator states, import the logs into the United States free. Is it not going to be a discrimination against the manufacturers of furniture, for instance, in this country to reduce the duty on furniture and retain a duty on the lumber imported from which the furniture must be manufactured, without the hope of gaining any particular increase of revenue from the change?

What I am contending for, Mr. President, is, inasmuch as no good can come from retaining any duty at all upon this high-priced lumber, that it should be removed; that instead of imposing a duty of 10 per cent on mahogany, for instance, it should come in free. What is the objection to that from the standpoint of the chairman or of the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The only objection is that those have always been dutiable; and following the same course that we have followed in regard to other items in the bill, we have reduced the duty in this case.

I remember particularly in regard to cedar, commercially known as Spanish cedar, that parties appeared before us who import the log from South America and saw it into very thin boards, used for making cigar boxes. There were several industries concerned, and they said that without the duty, if it were on the free list, the cedar would be sawed into the thin stuff down there and the boxes sent here. Having regard to the condition in which they were, we lowered the duty somewhat, but left the duty upon the product which they manufacture.

The Senator speaks of furniture. I call his attention to the fact that we exported $6,231,000 worth of furniture in 1912. In 1910 we exported $5,572,191 worth. Our production that year in this country was $245,764,343. The importations in 1912 were only $810,255. In a year when we exported over $6,000,000 worth we imported only $810,000 worth of furniture. The furniture business would seem to be in a condition to compete; and the slight reduction in the duty which has been made here ought not to be a hardship with that showing.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not understand that the furniture manufacturers are complaining about a duty. I do not know that they would complain if furniture were placed on the free list. What they are complaining about is the reduction of the present duty on furniture from 35 per cent to 15 per cent, or a reduction of four-sevenths of the existing duty, while maintaining a duty on the lumber from which they manufacture their furniture, and which they can obtain from no one in the United States except from the manufacturers of foreign logs. The domestic furniture manufacturer must purchase his material either from the American sawmill owner who imports the logs which he saws or from the importer of foreign sawed lumber. Even from a protective standpoint the sawmill owner is entitled to no more than the reasonable difference between the cost of sawing the logs here and the cost abroad. Yet this proposed duty is seven or eight times the total cost of sawing in the United States. Are you not placing the furniture manufacturer too much in the power of the sawmill owner? Why not give him at least the benefit of fair competition? What occurred to me was that if there is to be a reduction in the duty on furniture, there should be an equal reduction upon the material out of which the furniture is manufactured.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Do not some of the furniture manufacturers import the mahogany log and saw it themselves, and have sawmills in connection with their plants?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think that is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Then they get their mahogany free in that way.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is true of those who have the mills and who can saw it; and, therefore, they have an advantage over the manufacturers who do not saw their own logs, but who are trying to get the material with which to compete with their more favored rivals.

No good can come from this duty. It is not encouraging a single industry in the United States. It is not a revenue producer. The reductions which have taken place should have been more equitable. I can see no reason, from a Democratic standpoint, why the material from which this furniture is manufactured should not be on the free list.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to ask a question of the Senator in charge of this schedule.

In paragraph 171, the last clause on page 50, extending over on page 51, reads as follows:

And all cabinet woods not further manufactured than sawed, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Then, in the next line:

And wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem.

It will be noted that the first quotation I have made speaks of wood "not further manufactured than sawed," and the next quotation speaks of "wood, unmanufactured." Suppose wood comes in that is sawed, but that has not been specially mentioned; is it subject to the duty of 10 per cent or not?

Mr. HUGHES. It also says "not specially provided for." The Senator must read that in his quotation after "unmanufactured."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I mean to ask is, Does the word "unmanufactured," as used in line 2 of page 51, include sawed wood or not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Will the Senator repeat his question? I did not hear it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will.

At the bottom of page 50 the language of the bill is:

And all cabinet woods not further manufactured than sawed.

Then, in the next line, it provides:

And wood manufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The first applies to woods which may be classed as cabinet woods.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know it; but what I am trying to do is to get the Senator's definition of the word "manufactured." In the first instance which I have cited it says, "woods not further manufactured than sawed," which looks to me as though the authors of the bill considered sawing as manufacturing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It is true to that extent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Therefore, under the last quotation I have made, if sawed wood comes in that has not been specially mentioned, is it manufactured or not? That is, is it subject to a duty of 10 per cent or not?

Mr. HUGHES. It is manufactured.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask that this paragraph be passed over? I want to prepare an amendment to it. I shall not debate it at length hereafter; but I would like to present an amendment to be offered at the proper time and when I shall have it prepared.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if that is going to be done, I will ask leave of the Senate to insert in the RECORD at this point the statement of the domestic manufacturers in relation to this paragraph, as given in the House hearings. It is found on page 2228 of the hearings on Schedule D. I will send it to the Secretary's desk, and ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., January 10, 1913.

Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Re Schedule D, wood and manufactures of, section 203, sawed boards, planks, deals, and all forms of sawed cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadillo, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet woods not further manufactured than sawed, 15 per cent ad valorem; veneers of wood, and wood unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section, 20 per cent ad valorem.

We respectfully ask that the present duty of 15 per cent on sawn woods and 20 per cent on veneers, as above provided, be retained in the new tariff bill now under consideration.

The logs, either in the round or square hewn, are admitted free of duty, and this has always been the policy of the Government. Under this arrangement these tropical woods are converted here into lumber and veneers.

This industry is very important, supporting many mills in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Louisville, Mobile, Chicago, Cincinnati, and the Pacific coast, giving employment to a great number of skilled mechanics and representing heavy capital investments.

During the past few years the importation of thin cedar boards from the mills of Mexico and Cuba has become very heavy, the imports of 1912 having increased more than 63 per cent over those of 1911, thus evidencing the fact that the foreign mills can pay the duty and still compete successfully with our own manufacturers.

The foreign mills have an advantage in freights, as the steamship lines charge a less rate per cubic foot on the manufactured product than on logs.

The owners and operators of the American cedar mills fear their business will be entirely destroyed if the 15 per cent protection is removed.

We would furthermore suggest that in writing the new tariff, in section 203, "and all other cabinet woods not further manufactured than sawed," the word "other" be dropped, so that importers of sawn cedar or sawn lancewood or sawn lignum-vitæ may have no grounds for asking free entry on the plea that these woods are not used exclusively for furniture.

The agents of the West Indian mills have recently endeavored by appeals to the Board of Appraisers to have cedar admitted free of duty on the plea that it is not a cabinet wood and that it is used chiefly for cigar boxes, and this notwithstanding the fact that Congress has specifically enacted that sawn cedar, mahogany, etc., shall pay a duty. The omission of the word "other," as we have mentioned, would avoid all controversy.

As a matter of fact, Spanish cedar has always been considered a cabinet wood, both by the trade here and in the fine-woods trade in Europe. It is botanically one of the mahogany family, and the cost of both woods is the same.

Very truly, yours, WM. E. UPTEGROVE, (Representing 19 firms).

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

172. Paving posts, railroad ties, and telephone, trolley, electric-light, and telegraph poles of cedar or other woods, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I move that paragraph No. 172 be stricken out and transferred to the free list as paragraph No. 651½.

It seems to me this paragraph in its present form falls little short of an absurdity. Paving posts are in very general use in cities. Railroad ties are in demand for railways, and the demand for them causes more of a strain on the timber supply than almost anything else. A duty of 10 per cent is placed on telephone, trolley, electric-light, and telegraph poles of cedar or other woods, very raw forms of lumber and in very general use.

Now, let us turn to paragraphs 649 and 650 and see some of the things that are on the free list. I will read most of the two sections:

Wood: Logs, timber, round, unmanufactured, hewn or sawed, sided or squared; pulp woods, kindling wood, firewood, hop poles.

They are all on the free list, while telegraph poles go on the dutiable list.

Hoop poles go on the free list; fence posts go on the free list; but paving posts go on the dutiable list.

Hangle bolts, a much more highly finished form of lumber; shingle bolts, gun blocks for gunstocks, rough hewn or sawed or planed on one side; hubs for wheels, which require very careful attention and much labor—they are placed on the free list, but railroad ties are dutiable at 10 per cent.

Posts—if it were not for the specific description of telegraph posts and paving posts, these latter would go on the free list, for posts in general are free, while paving posts, which are very much used in our streets, are dutiable at 10 per cent.

Heading bolts—it is no sinecure to prepare one of those—stave bolts, last blocks, wagon blocks, oar blocks, heading blocks, and all like blocks or sticks, rough hewn, sawed, or bored; sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, not further manufactured than sawed, planed, and tongued and grooved—that is, lumber that is tongued and grooved—all these are free, but a post or pole that is put up for a telephone line must pay a duty.

Now, let us notice some more articles that are on the free list: Clapboards, laths, pickets, palings, staves, shingles, ship timber, ship planking, broom handles, and so forth—all of those are on the free list.

What is the object of putting telephone poles on the dutiable list at 10 per cent in the face of such a list as that? In fact, Mr. President, in the case of paving posts, the law might be evaded by importing the log free and then cutting it up. In the case of railroad ties you might import without duty the whole log, or you might import under the form of scantling, squared timber, and then change it to a railroad tie. The former would be free and the latter would be dutiable. It would be more difficult to evade the provision in regard to telephone, trolley, and telegraph poles.

I will read a few more items here that are on the free list, at the end of paragraph 650. Cedar, including Spanish cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, and so forth, and all forms of cabinet woods, in the log, rough, or hewn only, are all on the free list. Fine mahogany comes in free; but the cheaper kinds of timber, used for telephone posts, are dutiable.

Look here at the end, and see to what extent the bill has gone in placing woods on the free list:

Other woods not specially provided for in this section, in the rough or not further advanced than cut into lengths suitable for sticks for umbrellas, parasols, sunshades, whips, fishing rods, or walking canes.

Why should the stick for a lady's sunshade come in free, while the telephone pole that provides for a telephone system perhaps between one farmhouse and another is put on the dutiable list?

Umbrella sticks, which oftentimes are covered with metal, are free, but railroad ties are dutiable. Why, Mr. President, it seems to me this paragraph must have been overlooked. I introduced an amendment with reference to this matter some two months ago, I think, to straighten out these duties.

There is still another point in regard to it. We are having no end of agitation with regard to the conservation of our timber supply. Some very excellent men, like Mr. Pinchot and Dr. Schenck, for whose judgment I have the highest respect, say we ought to have a duty on timber to stimulate the domestic supply. I do not quite agree with that idea. It has always seemed to me that a duty on the log, at least, was a destructive tariff rather than a protective tariff, because this is a material which is one of the essentials of life which we must have, and the supply of which is rapidly diminishing, and we should frame the most liberal regulations, at least as to the admission of the timber in its unfinished form.

But suppose you levy a duty of 10 per cent on telegraph and telephone poles; what will be the result? Timber which has not reached its greatest value, which has not gained any great degree of maturity, will be cut down, because it will command a special or added price, due to this 10 per cent. At least it will command 10 per cent more, if the theory of the Senators on the other side of the aisle is right.

I recognize that the duties of the members of the committee have been very arduous, and I want to ask them if they are not willing that this item shall go out?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I will say that this matter was not overlooked by the committee, because the Senator from Ohio would not allow us to overlook it. I remember that he appeared before the committee——

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I did not flatter myself that necessarily the brief call I made produced such an impression that the Senator would remember it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say that we took under full consideration what was said to us by the Senator. I want to call the attention of the Senate, however, to the fact that under this paragraph we collected $77,559 in revenue last year; and by putting on the free list the woods which the Senator from Ohio has mentioned we have taken away the opportunity to get revenue under this schedule. We must produce some revenue under the wood schedule, and I know of no better subject for bearing duties than railroad ties, electric-light poles, and telegraph poles. Certainly the users of those articles can pay this duty, or an additional price caused by the duty. I will say, also, that we have simply followed the provision of the existing law, which places a duty of 10 per cent upon those items. We have cut very heavily the sources of revenue in this schedule. In order to raise some revenue, and the part which this schedule ought to raise, it is necessary to maintain some things upon the dutiable list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. On the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and withhold my vote.

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. I shall therefore withhold my vote, unless it becomes necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. STONE. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair for the afternoon with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], who is necessarily detained from the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). Mr. President, I desire to announce to the Senate, as disclosed in the hearings before the lobby investigating committee, that I am interested in timberlands in my State. Articles coming under this paragraph constitute an element of the value of those lands. I am not yet satisfied, however, that a Senator ought to decline to vote simply because he has a more or less direct interest in the matter, although I may be convinced later on that that is the proper attitude to take. However, the disadvantage accruing to my interests from the bill as a whole quite outweighs any advantage that might accrue from this particular paragraph. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JAMES. I transfer the general pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] and vote "nay."

I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has been called from the Chamber. He is paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber, and is paired with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the negative). I have just learned that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] did not vote. I have a pair with him, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were privileged to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] is paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. The senior Senator from Arkansas is unavoidably absent from the Chamber.

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. I desire further to announce that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is unavoidably absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Brady	Clapp	La Follette	Smoot
Brandegee	Colt	Nelson	Sterling
Bristow	Crawford	Norris	Townsend

So Mr. BURTON's amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in paragraph 174, page 51, line 13, before the word "pomelos," to strike out "or," and, after the word "pomelos," to insert "or other fruits," so as to read:

174. Boxes, barrels, or other articles containing oranges, lemons, limes, grapefruit, shaddocks, pomelos, or other fruits, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senate that, in my opinion, the addition of those words to this paragraph means that all coverings of fruits that carry specific duties or are free of duty will be assessed one-half of their value in returning to this country. Under the present law it is true that we impose that one-half duty upon orange and lemon boxes; but with the change that has been made in this paragraph, by adding "or other fruits" on lines 13 and 14, and striking out "orange and lemon" on line 16, and "orange and lemon" on lines 17 and 18, and adding "fruit" before the word "boxes" on line 16, and "fruit" before the word "box" on line 18, and "fruit" after the word "lemons" on line 19, it simply means that hereafter all boxes containing fruit of any kind exported from this country to another country and returned to this country will be obliged to pay a duty.

Under the present law, under paragraph 500, it is provided that they shall be returned to the United States free of duty with the exception of those specifically mentioned in paragraph 211, which is the same as the paragraph under consideration in the pending bill. Does the Senator from Maine understand that as I understand it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I certainly do. I do not believe, however, that many boxes or coverings for other than oranges and lemons are exported from this country to be filled and then imported here. The committee could see no reason why boxes for other fruit besides oranges and lemons should not be treated exactly the same way, and for that reason the words "or other fruits" were inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. They always have been treated that way. The only reason why lemons and oranges were treated in that way in the present law was, I suppose, that with the rate of duty which was imposed upon them they could afford to pay that one-half duty when the boxes were returned. If the Senator understands that, then I ask him to turn to the corresponding paragraph of the free list.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not know that I correctly understood the Senator. Did I understand him to say that there are some fruits upon the free list in this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I never referred to fruits at all.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand the Senator from Utah to make the point that under the provision of this paragraph containers of certain articles, although free, have to pay a certain rate of duty.

Mr. SMOOT. Exactly.

Mr. HUGHES. Is that the point?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the point.

Mr. HUGHES. It applies to fruits?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. I just wanted to know for information. I did not know that any fruits were on the free list.

Mr. SMOOT. No; nor are lemons and oranges.

Mr. HUGHES. I wanted to know if there was anything the Senator knew that would be affected by it.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that fruits, other than oranges and lemons, shipped to Canada would be affected by it. The small fruits that go up into Alberta or Saskatchewan or the western Provinces of Canada would be affected.

Mr. HUGHES. As far as exports are concerned?

Mr. SMOOT. No; as far as the return of boxes is concerned.

Mr. HUGHES. I wanted to get the Senator's idea.

Mr. SMOOT. The way the provision is in the bill now, they will have to pay one-half the duty, but in the past they have always been allowed to come into this country free.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a minute?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Does the Senator understand that the completed box is not what is exported from this country, but the staves, thin boards, and so forth, which go to make the box are sent to Sicily? The preparation of those is quite a large industry in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; that is not what this refers to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. This refers to wherever there is an export of any fruit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Let me tell the Senator just why that amendment is offered. In the first place, there is quite a large industry in Maine which makes the material which goes into lemon boxes. The staves and thin boards are sent to Sicily and made into lemon boxes over there, and when those are returned they are to pay half the duty that the foreign-made box pays. It is a discrimination in favor of domestic-made boxes for packing lemons and oranges.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the discrimination I am speaking of. The present law discriminates only as to orange and lemon boxes, and as to all other fruit they would come in free.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. But I know of no other fruit. There are no fruits that are upon the free list in this bill. If a box is used for bringing in some other fruit than oranges and lemons, the committee could not see why it should not be treated just the same as an orange box or a lemon box.

Mr. HUGHES. Do I understand the Senator to mean now that certain boxes containing fruit are sent into Canada and that under the present law those empty boxes can be sent back into this country without the payment of a duty?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. I refer the Senator to paragraph 500 of the present law, which says:

Articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, not including animals, when returned after having been exported, without having been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of manufacture or other means; casks, barrels, carboys, bags, and other containers or coverings of American manufacture exported filled with American products, or exported empty and returned filled with foreign products, including shooks and staves when returned as barrels or boxes.

Under the present law they can be returned into this country free, but under the provision here they will have to pay one-half duty.

There is another point to which I wish to call the Senator's attention, and that is the inconsistency, as I see it, in the bill itself. If he will turn to the free list, paragraph 412, he will find that this is what it says:

Articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, when returned after having been exported, without having been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of manufacture or other means; steel boxes, casks, barrels, carboys, bags, and other containers or coverings of American manufacture exported filled with American products, or exported empty and returned filled with foreign products, including shooks and staves when returned as barrels or boxes.

I am simply calling the Senator's attention to what seems to me to be an inconsistency there, and I think it ought to be corrected.

Mr. HUGHES. Upon a hasty examination I am inclined to agree with the Senator. I suggest that we pass over the paragraph.

Mr. SMOOT. If we pass it over, that will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I think we have the same provision as appears in the existing law. I will be willing to let it go over and examine the provision carefully.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to understand what goes over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Paragraph 174; the whole paragraph.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 52, line 5, after the word "vegetable," to insert the words "or animal," so as to make the paragraph read:

176. Toothpicks of wood or other vegetable or animal substance, 25 per cent ad valorem; butchers' and packers' skewers of wood, 10 cents per thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the paragraph may go over, to be taken up in connection with paragraph 649 of the free list. I desire to move to transfer shingles and possibly some other articles to this paragraph, and I should like to take the two together. I have no objection to any of the provisions here in the paragraph.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator has no objection to any provision in the paragraph, why should it go over?

Mr. JONES. I want to move to put certain articles now on the free list in the paragraph. That is the idea.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand.

The reading of the bill was continued, as follows:

177. Porch and window blinds, curtains, shades, or screens any of the foregoing in chief value of bamboo, wood, straw, or compositions of wood, not specially provided for in this section, 20 per cent ad valorem; if stained, dyed, painted, printed, polished, grained, or creosoted, and baskets in chief value of like material, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Maine if that paragraph would not be very much more comprehensive by striking out the words "porch and window"? It seems to me the paragraph is ambiguous. Do the words "porch and window" refer to blinds, curtains, shades, and screens, or do they simply refer to blinds? The way I read it they refer to curtains, shades, and screens. If so, it would be inconsistent. It seems to me that if you would simply say "blinds, curtains, shades, or screens any of the foregoing in chief value of bamboo, wood," and so forth, there would not be any question about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. We followed simply the language of the existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. That is exactly the language of the existing law, and we have had no difficulty brought to our attention in the administration of the paragraph.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Utah that I think the reason why the ambiguity appears here is because the existing law has not been followed, but the word "baskets" as it appears in the existing law has been dropped, which brings the words "window blinds and curtains" together, whereas the existing law says "window blinds, baskets, curtains."

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I was going to call to the attention of the Senator from Maine. If he will turn to the existing law, paragraph 214, he will find that it reads:

Porch and window blinds, baskets, curtains, shades—and so forth. But the bill as reported drops the word "baskets"; and then, of course, it applies to porch and window blinds and porch and window curtains and porch and window shades.

Mr. HUGHES. Of course, the Senator sees that in the whole of those items the subject of chief value is bamboo?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but there are a good many shades and a good many curtains made of bamboo that are not porch and window curtains or shades. I believe that if the paragraph is left as it is there will be a great deal of misunderstanding about it. There will be suits instituted, and it will be a long time before it can be finally decided.

Mr. HUGHES. Of course, the Senator's objection can be eliminated by placing a semicolon in lieu of the comma, in any event; could it not?

Mr. SMOOT. But it seems to me that by striking out the words "porch and window" there could not be any question about it.

Mr. HUGHES. Very well; I will move to strike out the words "porch and window," so that it will read:

Blinds, curtains, shades, or screens—and so forth, following the rest of the language.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out the words "porch and window"? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I can not refrain from expressing my deep gratification that an amendment has been made to the bill without its having been considered in a Democratic caucus.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that he will not have any difficulty in getting proper amendments made at any time.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 22, on page 52, the last two lines read being as follows:

Schedule E—Sugar, molasses, and manufactures of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I apprehend the Senator from North Carolina will not think it wise to enter upon the consideration of the sugar schedule this afternoon.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would not. Senators who desire to be heard upon that schedule are not in the Chamber, and I would be willing to lay the bill aside now.

Mr. THORNTON. I thought the metal schedule came before the sugar schedule. Am I mistaken about that?

Mr. SIMMONS. The metal schedule will be taken up on Monday.

Mr. THORNTON. That is ahead of the sugar schedule?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is.

Mr. THORNTON. That is why I did not understand the talk about taking up the sugar schedule now.

Mr. SIMMONS. We agreed to lay the metal schedule aside for to-day, and if we had proceeded with the next in order it would have been the sugar schedule.

Mr. THORNTON. I understand it now.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2433. It is a bill to permit certain foreign Governments to bring in material to be used in connection with their exhibits at the Panama Exposition free of duty. There seems to be some urgency about the passage of the bill, and I trust that I may have unanimous consent for its consideration this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator ask to lay the tariff bill temporarily aside?

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated a little while ago that I was willing to have it laid aside for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand this is a new departure. I think that such articles have never heretofore been admitted free of duty; but I think there is a good deal of reason why they should be admitted free of duty. So I certainly will not object to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2433) providing for the free importation of articles intended for foreign buildings and exhibits at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and for the protection of foreign exhibitors.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN RUSSELL.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1243) directing the issuance of patent to John Russell. It is a short bill of local character reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs that a patent under the homestead laws be issued to John Russell for the land occupied by him situated approximately in sections 4 and 5 of township 13 north, range 13 east, of the Willamette meridian, in the Mount Rainier Forest Reserve, State of Washington, notwithstanding any withdrawal heretofore made affecting the same, upon his submitting satisfactory proof of the agricultural character of the lands and his compliance with the homestead laws applicable thereto; but patent shall not issue until the lands have been surveyed by metes and bounds under the direction of the surveyor general for the State of Washington.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that is a most extraordinary bill, and I should like to hear more about it from the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the situation is this: This man settled on the lands mentioned in 1884. Of course, the lands were unsurveyed. He has lived there continuously ever since, and raised a family. After the act of 1906 was passed, he applied for the listing of his land as agricultural land in a forest reserve, but it was thought that possibly the land might at some future time be necessary for a reservoir site in connection with an irrigation project. So the lands were withdrawn under the reclamation act. He is living there yet and has earned his homestead over and over again; has made improvements worth five or six thousand dollars; and has the land actually under cultivation. The committee considered all the facts which were presented, and thought it was wholly unjust that the man should be denied a patent, which, as I have said, he has earned many times over.

Mr. WALSH. By what committee has the bill been considered?

Mr. JONES. By the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WALSH. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. JONES. I understand so.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if the reclamation project was abandoned?

Mr. JONES. No; the project has not been abandoned, and it is said that at some time the lands may be necessary in connection with the Yakima project, for storage purposes. When they will be necessary or when they will be used, if ever, can not now be told, but whether they be used or not, this man has earned his homestead over and over again, so far as settlement and compliance with the law are concerned.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire further. Was any recommendation submitted from the Department of the Interior in regard to the bill?

Mr. JONES. The bill was submitted to the department, and the department said that by reason of the withdrawal of the land and the possible necessity for its use, it would not recommend the passage of the bill, but notwithstanding that letter from the department, the committee considered the matter very carefully, and they thought that this man was entitled to a patent to the land.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will permit me to interrupt him, I believe that it was practically the unanimous opinion of the committee that this bill ought to pass. It is one of those peculiar cases where a man had been in actual possession, living on the place; had made valuable improvements; and not only that, but had raised a large family on this very land. We thought there was no question but that his right ought to precede any right that the Government or anybody else had.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection at all.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Russell has been there since 1884.

Mr. VARDAMAN. How many acres are there in the tract?

Mr. JONES. There are 160 acres—a homestead tract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed a resolution (S. Res. 133) authorizing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to employ an additional clerk at a salary of $1,800. It appears that the resolution does not quite conform to the law on the subject, and the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate [Mr. WILLIAMS] has prepared a substitute for the resolution. I see he has now come into the Chamber. He asked me to present it in his absence. It is exactly the same resolution, but the language has been slightly changed. It has the same effect. I move that the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to yesterday be reconsidered and that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a resolution (S. Res. 149) as a substitute for the resolution which has been reconsidered and indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution just reported.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, at a salary of $1,800 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise authorized by law, to serve in lieu of an assistant clerk now authorized by law at an annual salary of $1,440.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 32 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, August 4, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.
